It will be conceded that the example of Christ is the standard by which all pretensions to religious character and conduct should be settled. He that saith he abideth in him ought also to walk as he walked. If any man hath not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. Now, the history of our Lord, as it is recorded in the New Testament, is not, according to some poetic conception of eloquence, the development of a single virtue, but the complete union of all the attributes which can be thought of as virtuous and praiseworthy in human character, the perfect combination of whatsoever things are just and true and pure and lovely and of good report. In him we have devotion, benevolence, self-denial, fortitude, patience, humility, charity, meekness, industry; and all these so we are commanded to imitate. These are all moral excellencies, and therefore they may be human excellencies. I am not speaking now of the wisdom and power and majesty of the divinity, but of the voluntary action, the choice, the self-denial, the preferences of the man Christ Jesus. All these are imitable, and all these resolve themselves into one simple, uncompounded principle, to please God, to do his will, to fill up the divine programme. Our Saviour's voluntary acceptance of the work of human redemption, with all the indignities of its humiliation, the extremity of its toil, the agony of its death, was announced in this language: "Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God." And when he came, and Christ at twelve years of age went up with his reputed parents to the feast at Jerusalem, and on their departure lingered behind, and they went a day's journey and missed him and returned, seeking him sorrowful and anxious, and his mother softly chided him, saying, "Why hast thou dealt thus with us?" his excuse and his vindication reaffirmed the objects and the end of his coming, by saying: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" I came into the world to do and to suffer the will of him that sent me. This is my mission; this is my choice; this is the religion I came to teach and to exemplify. When Jesus sat by Jacob's well, weary, hungry, athirst, and the disciples returned from the village whither they had gone to purchase food, and said, "Master, eat," he answered and said: "I have meat to eat ye know not of. My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." I pity the Christian, especially the preacher, who, in the transports of his joy or the vehemence of his zeal, never forgot the hours of food and rest. All along our Saviour's eventful life he referred to this great principle to justify both his sayings and his doings. He referred to it to relieve himself from the surprise of his friends and from the reproach of his enemies. The will of God was his compass and his goal and his authority. It was the measure of his labor, of his self-denial, of his activity, of his preaching, of his miracles and of his sufferings. Now, as Jesus gave himself to God for us and our salvation, we are to give ourselves freely, fully, irrecoverably to him, to be his property and to be at his disposal. This is the religion of the New Testament. I stand upon my Saviour's words: Then said one unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to speak with thee. And Jesus said unto him, Who is my mother, and who are my brethren? And he stretched forth his hands toward his disciples and said: "Behold, my mother and my brethren, for whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my mother and my sister and my brother." Thank God, alliance with Christ, by faith, is nearer and dearer than affinity by blood. The virgin mother of Jesus bore Jesus in her womb, and all generations call her blessed; it is our nobler privilege to carry him in our hearts, and none are so close of kin or share so largely in his affection as they who do the will of his Father which is in heaven. O, ye kings and queens of earth, talk not of birth and blood. Spiritual regeneration is the noblest genealogy, the oldest, the largest and the best. The salvation of the world, of sinners, was the will of God, and Jesus Christ came to achieve it. The way to this end was a path of thorns, but he trod it with bleeding feet and yet unfaltering steps. In the near approach of his tremendous sufferings nature shuddered, and he said: "My soul is troubled; Father, save me from this hour." Ah, amid the tears and sobs of this groaning earth, never was there a sorrow like unto this sorrow. But behold the submission and humility and magnanimity of the Son of God! "Father, glorify thy name. True, my soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death, but never mind me. Work out thy glorious purpose. For this cause came I unto this hour. Once the garden of agony; I will enter in and pour the wail of my anguished soul amid its gloomy shadow. Turn loose the mob; let them come with swords and staves and though I could summon twelve legions of angels for my rescue I will surrender. Carry me to Pilate's judgment hall; and when he has declared there is no fault in me, and yet yields me to the malice of my enemies, I will not open my mouth. Make ready the cross, the symbol of shame, the instrument of torture; I will not refuse to die; not my will but thine be done."

Now see how kindred in spirit, how identical in principle, the servant is with the Master. As was Christ, so with Paul—the will of God the rule, the glory of God the end of life. From the very moment when Paul said, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" down to the hour when writing to Timothy, his son in the gospel, he said, "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith," he lived and labored and suffered for the glory of Christ and the salvation of souls. As a Jew, as a man citizen, as a polite scholar, a rising man, he laid all upon the altar—his privileges, his accomplishments, his enjoyments, his righteousness. His obedience to this great principle was prompt. Immediately he conferred not with flesh and blood. He never waited for the indorsement of those who had been apostles at Jerusalem before him. He consulted no earthly interest, but he offered up his body, his soul, his health, his safety, his life, upon the sacrifice and service of his faith.

Did the church that loved him beg him to spare himself? "I mean ye," said he, "to weep and break my heart, for I am ready only to go bound to Jerusalem to die for the Lord Jesus." Hear him again: "In labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times I received forty stripes save one; once was I stoned; thrice I have suffered shipwreck; a day and a night I have been in the deep. In watchings often, in fastings, in hunger, in thirst, often in nakedness, in trial, in perplexities." O, man of God, what more? Can you stand it all? "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I may finish my course with joy, and testify the gospel of the grace of God."

Ah, brethren, Paul's religion was a divine reality, a living reality, a living incarnation of faith, and hope, and love, all inspired with a saint's ardor and ready for life-long martyrdom. For him to live is Christ. His will is merged in his interest, his interest my interest, his joy my delight, his honor my honor. When it pleased God to reveal his Son in me, I took him for all in all, for richer or for poorer, for better and for worse, for life and for death. He is the life of my life outside of him and the forth-putting of the church, I have no plan, no business, no interest. It were loss to me all the joys of earth to share, apart from the smilings of his face, nor grief or gloom, nor reproach or imprisonment, nor peril or persecution, can cast me down while I find anything to do or bear for him. Slandered as an evil-doer, I welcome my bond, if the will of God is not bound. Whether in the tents at Corinth, working with my hands for my daily bread, or on Mars' hill and confounding the philosophy of Greece by revelations of God and the future; whether to defend myself a prisoner in chains before Felix the Governor, or to preach the gospel to them of Cesar's household, it is all in the line of his one plan of duty and devotion to Christ. And now he says to the church at Philippi that he is ready to labor or suffer, to live or to die. To live is Christ; to die is gain. I am delivered from this great fear, the power of Christ will be magnified in my liberty; if I abide in the power of his glorious grace Christ will be magnified in my triumphant death. If I commune with my sorrow long to depart and be with Christ, which is far better; if I remain in the church, her trials and her joys, to abide in the flesh is more needful for you. I am in a strait; I know not what to choose I wot not. Weary with sting travel, burdened with the re of the churches, and tho old an ready to he offered up, what a on is the promised rest! Heart- k and sore, bruised and bleeding, at a heaven heaven would be to e! Here bonds and afflictions ide me; with Jesus freedom and ory, and all the days of my mourn- would he ended; hut if I can at another church where Christ s not been preached: if I can es- blish one wavering disciple in the th of the gospel; if I can help to otect the body of Christ from hism and from error, I will cheer- lly forego the bliss of the eternal ture for a season, for the heaven doing good upon the earth. To ith the prize is sure; I labor on my deliverer comes.

Oh, what an example this, of blime, heroic self-sacrifice. And, ethren, this ought to be the spirit the ministry and the sentiment the church; and if all of us, achers and people, were of the me mind and the same heart, yet ittle while and a revival fire would rm the whole world. Very soon should see the years of the right nd of the Most High; the glo- s of the gospel's pentecostal morn ould rise and blaze in the splendor millennial noon. The songs of gels, full-robed, would break in ipture once more from the bending ies, and over all this earth, radiant, aceful and happy, the Messiah ould return in bliss to reign.

Our late senior Bishop was him- lf a noble specimen of the self-de- ial and devotion which I have out- ned in the foregoing discourse. ndeed, the subject was suggested y my knowledge of the man, his ntiments, his habits of thought nd action. As myself, the son of Methodist preacher, among my arly household memories the name f Andrew mingles. My father, hen a young man, was presiding lder of the district when he was ecommended to the Annual Con- erence for admission on trial, and e felt an official if not a paternal nterest in the awkward and un- promising youth whom he had in- roduced into the itinerancy. He hought he saw the diamond within he surrounding crust, and he com- nented freely, and frequently with dmiration and delight, upon the apidly unfolding outcome of his oung friend and brother; and it s one of the marvelous demonstra- ions of our peculiar system of raining and development that this oy—for he was not twenty years of go when received on trial—with the are rudiments even of a common chool education, in a very few ears took rank with the leading inds of one of the oldest and most distinguished Conferences of our then united Methodism. He was the peer in pulpit power of such men as Oldham and Capers—men whose mental endowments and va- ried scholarship would have digni- fied any church in any age.

My personal acquaintance with him began while I was yet in my teens, and he was in the flush of his prime and his vigor. He was stationed in Athens and Greensboro, my native town, in 1829. I had just returned from school to my father's house, and in the secrecy of my own soul I was anxiously re- solving, as a question of duty, my call to the ministry. My lips were sealed to every human being; I dwelt alone upon this subject, and I had commenced the study of an- other profession to rid myself of the convictions that were pressing me sorely, but this good man dis- cerned my secret trouble, invited me to his house, took me into an upper chamber privately and alone; adroitly drew from me a confession of my feelings, and then, with kind counsel and tender exhortation, en- couraged me to do my duty. Per- haps, as I then thought, the cast of all my life was determined by that meeting. At any rate, from that hour, considering the disparity of our years and of circumstances, our future intercourse was intimate and affectionate and confiding.

At different times, and under some circumstances to me peculiarly try- ing, I was indebted to him for judi- cious advice and a truly fatherly in- terest. In the second year of my ministry I was sent as a junior preacher with him to Augusta, Georgia. I lived in his house, saw him daily, mingled with him in the ease and freedom of domestic life; and there my boyish awe of the great preacher softened into filial reverence; my admiration softened into love. The thought that I was to preach alternately with such a man was a source of alarm and tor- ture to me. For weeks and weeks, when my turn came around, I be- sought him to go out, to spare me the embarrassment of his presence. With kind, forbearing sympathy he yielded to my wishes. He remem- bered his own early years and his struggles with timidity, and he de- ferred to the foolish and yet real fears of his youthful assistant; but after a season he announced to me that his sense of duty would not longer allow him to absent himself from the house of God; and to re- lieve me he gave me advice, the as- surance of his assistance, and the promise of his prayers. I mention this only to show that beneath the somewhat stern exterior there beat a soft and gentle heart which never failed to respond to the cry of weak- ness.

Bishop Andrew's head was phre- nologically fine, but the features of his face were broad and strong, in- clining to coarseness, and the solemn gravity of his look, when in repose or when performing any ministerial service, would have misled an un- practiced eye in judging of his char- acter. A stranger would never dream that that rugged countenance could soften into beauty, grow ra- diant with humor, and beam with magnetic love; but, as the bright- est waters gush from among the craggy rocks, and the sweetest flow- ers bloom amid the thorns, so he could wither with his rebuke, and petrify with his frown, and awe with his dignity, and startle with his voice of authority. He was, both by nature and by grace, gentle as a nurse cherishing her children, soft as a dove cooing to its mate, meek as a Christian praying for his ene- mies.

As a husband and father and host there was the most harmonious blending of authority and love, con- nubial respect, with the most genial tenderness, parental government with the most affectionate inter- course, an open, hearty hospitality with the most informal politeness. He was independent, without defy- ing public opinion; free to express his thoughts, without waiting to see how the wind would blow; respect- ful to all, without subservience to any. Indeed, all the elements of a noble manhood met and mingled in him in beautiful proportion. There was about him a strange accord and concord of contrast, if I may so express it—an equilibrium of an- tagonism, strong and tender, firm yet sympathetic, stern but always accessible. That man, who, on trial without accusation in 1844, lauded as a saint, but rejected as a Bishop, commended for his wisdom and purity in official ministration, wrong- ed in his rights and outraged in his feelings by a foul conspiracy, as one of the actors has lately confessed, and published, and thus made the innocent occasion of a great eccle- siastical catastrophe—that man who could stand up before that General Conference, and, with a brow un- blanched, demand, in the tone of a master, that the debates should come to an end, and that the fore- gone conclusion should be settled by a final vote—that man in the cham- ber where appointments are made, could sigh and groan and suffer over the minor trials of his humblest brother. I have known him to toss the livelong night in sleepless un- rest, and to go burdened all the day, because his sense of duty constrained him, by some hard assignment of work, to impose a burden upon some good brother in his family. He who could wither an offender as a simoom, when meanness or hypocrisy pro- voked his scowl of indignation, could cheer the desponding and soothe the wounded spirit with the fittest word and with the gentlest breath.

Intellectually Bishop Andrew was, in many respects, a great man. His mind was broad, comprehensive in its sweep, rapid in its operation, in- tuitive in its perceptions. His judg- ment was sound, strong, free, inde- pendent, rarely warped either by favor or affection, discriminating amid many perplexities with won- derful accuracy. Hence he was always a wise and safe counselor. He was a great reader, though not much of a student. For lack of early training he was, never very methodical. He thought much, but discursively. The material which he gathered he passed through his mind by a process of his own, and it always came out stamped with his own image and superscription. He wrote with great facility. His con- versation was rich in thought, fluent in language. He was cheerful in spirit, fond of humor, ready in rep- artee, and yet I do not believe I ever saw him betrayed into levity, and his speech was well nigh always seasoned with grace.

As a preacher he was somewhat unique. He had no model. He stood alone. He was original, not so much by creative power as by his peculiar style of appropriation. He never dwelt in propositions; he had noth- ing to do with divisions, firstly, sec- ondly, thirdly and lastly. He dealt with one great leading idea, and that idea he made to revolve upon its own axle, until every spot of its surface was bathed in sunlight. His powers of amplification were amaz- ing; and on some of his favorite themes, when his mind was full, the opening of his mouth was like the letting out of many waters; nor was it a thin sheet turned into spray and descending in mist, but a thunder- ing volume that rushed and roared and swept on resistlessly. Those who heard him only in the latter years of his life will regard what I am saying as extravagant, but I know whereof I affirm. Making him a Bishop ruined him as a preacher. Soon after his election he conceived the idea that he must be an example of extreme simplicity, for the benefit of the younger breth- ren in the ministry, lest, I suppose, by undertaking to imitate him, they should render themselves ridiculous; and hence he changed his style; he compelled his mind to work un- naturally; he cut off the inspiration that used to bear him up and carry him along quite above the level of common men. In his palmiest days there was always a peculiarity in Bishop Andrew's preaching that dis- tinguished him from all others. The first half of his sermons was always the best—often lofty, grand, impe- rial in the range of thought, the sweep of imagination, the wealth of words. The latter half was com- monly colloquial, simple, and some- times commonplace. It seemed to me that in prayer and meditation and communion with God he had ascended some lofty elevation, some bright mount of vision; and when he entered the pulpit and announced his text, he launched out on bold, broad pinions, like an angel flying through the midst of the heavens; and by and by he grew weary, and commenced to descend by grada- tions, until at last he walked upon the earth like an ordinary mortal. Here is the explanation of the com- parative feebleness of his latter years. His mental action depended upon his muscular energies, and when the high-wrought tension of his system gave way his mind let down, and, like a motive power in machinery, ceased to operate, be- cause the fuel was consumed. But those to whom he ministered in the days of his strength will never for- get it. No man in his day had warmer friends or more of them. His converts were numerous; the church always flourished under his ministrations. The rich and the gifted welcomed him to their fellow- ship; the poor and the afflicted re- ceived him as a ministering angel. His devotion to children grew with his years; he talked to them in private; he addressed them in public; he invoked their prayers in his behalf; he lavished upon them the affections of his age; and next to his last service upon earth, I be- lieve, was for their benefit.

Our venerable father, before he had been called hence, had well nigh reached his fourscore years—beyond, at least, his threescore and ten. Converted at ten years of age, he had a long experience of the grace of God. Through a protracted ministry he realized, by turns, the sorrows and victories, the honors and disappointments peculiar to a faithful preacher's life. His religion was deep and quiet; he was never demonstrative. He walked in the light, and saw with the eyes of that faith which is the evidence of things unseen. There never was any chasm in his itinerancy. He never located, or farmed or pursued any secular calling. For him to live was Christ. He was a man of one business; he loved the Master and the church, and the work which Jesus had given him to do; and even on his dying bed, when the checkered past all rose up before him in solemn review, he affirmed that, if he could live his life over again, he would be a Meth- odist preacher still—the only change, greater fidelity. In the lapse of years, and the oncoming of decay, our beloved friend was no dotard, imagining himself strong and active and capable as ever; but, conscious of his growing infirmities, five years ago he gracefully retired from the regular work; and when the strong man bowed himself, and his totter- ing limbs could scarce bear the bur- den of his failing body, it was a beautiful thing to see the old man visit the churches where he had preached; and as he stood up, lean- ing upon his staff, talking to them of Jesus and glory, and at last shaking hands in sweet farewell, persuaded that he should see their faces no more in the flesh, and yet inviting them to come on to heaven.

I shall not, nor is it necessary that I should, detail the circum- stances of his last illness and death. They are widely known. Suffice it for me to say, he fell at his post, not a veteran slumbering on his arms, but a warrior, sword in hand, still warm with recent fight. The chamber of death was made glo- rious by the presence of God. His body, worn out with age, shaken to pieces by paralysis, his soul flamed up amid the ruins, happy and tri- umphant. Poor in this world's goods, dying in his daughter's house, he sent me his last message. "Tell him I love him, and that I have a home on the other side." And you, my colleagues, doubtless feel as I do, that his words to us deserve to be treasured among life's cherished memories.

The love and confidence and bless- ing of such a man deserve to be reckoned among the benedictions of heaven. Well, the dear old father, as we loved to call him, is gone; we shall see his face no more. But let his example stimulate us to fidelity and endurance, and his messages of love bind us in closer fellowship. Let us labor on for the purity and progress of the church he loved and blessed, and died all the happier because, under God, and as he verily believed, the management of the church was left in our hand. Heaven help us to vindicate the confidence of the good old man by brotherly love, by a wise administration, by a holy, fruitful ministry. And now, let me say, Bishop Andrew did not live in vain. The world is better than it would have been without him. There is no stain upon his long career. The grace of God was magnified in his life and by his death. His name has passed into history, and though dead he speak- eth, and his testimony to the church and to the world is, that God is good, religion true, Christianity the highest style of character, the no- blest honor of humanity. And now may this funeral solemnity, the precious truths delivered, the noble example commemorated, incline us all to God and to the church, win us from the world and lead us to the skies.

OVERWORK.

Under this head we find state- ments both serious and humorous in the Northwestern Christian Ad- vocate:

In a little two-story frame dwell- ing that stands in one corner of the college campus at Middletown, Con- necticut, resides the widow of Wil- bur Fisk, the fragrance of whose memory still lingers in the churches. Whoever visits her will find her a sprightly old lady, of large conver- sational powers, and they absolutely exhausted in reciting facts and in- cidents of her now long-deceased husband. One point she will be sure to make is that the doctor's life was sadly abbreviated by the number and multiplicity of his la- bors. He was a man of boundless activities; nothing could hold him in check. We heard him thrill an as- sembly with his eloquence when con- sumption had ripened into dropsy, and his swollen knees refusing to support him, he leaned upon a staff, releasing one hand or another as by action he would make his elocution more impressive. Wilbur Fisk se- cured his fame and accomplished his great work by doing the work of two average men.

But as it has been from the be- ginning so it continues. Bishop Clark lies to-day the victim of over- work. When we were first intimate with him we had neighboring pas- toral charges, and at his home we found breakfast before the winter dawn, and work before breakfast. This was the example he set us. Only at the last General Conference, when the importance of increasing the number of bishops was matter of consultation, he freely affirmed his ability to preside over ten or twelve Conferences in fall and as many more in spring, and yet meet the other demands upon him. He was sadly mistaken. The Bishop has worked like our great team horses, making life one steady, strong pull from its very beginning. There can be but little doubt that McClin- tock's labors were too intense, and so of scores. Because the field of their labor has been so wide, or be- cause much of their work is done at the desk, few have been able to ap- preciate the measure of their labors. As those who know us are well aware, the editor of the Northwest- ern rarely escapes the delivery of at least one sermon on the Sabbath. One week-night not long ago he went to one of the small churches of the city to aid at a series of meet- ings. Arriving before the hour, he took a seat without, and tried to prepare for the service while listen- ing to a prayer meeting in an adjoin- ing room. One brother prayed earnestly for the pastor and that he might have even more fruit; then he broke out in about the following strain: "Lord bless the brother who is to preach to-night—the edi- tor. Thou knowest, Lord, that he is not in the habit of preaching much, and is probably quite rusty. Lord, rub off the rust and give him liberty to-night." We felt grateful for the hearty amens that followed, and tried to answer the brother's prayer for him, but we thought: Ah! how little the people know what we do. The work of the pastor is before the people, but that of their general officers, bishops, secretaries, editors, etc., can only be known by a few, save as the observant perceive its fruit in the well being and pros- perity of the interests in their hands.

A real impetuous laugh dissipates many illusions, sweeps the twilight out of our imaginations, and brings honest daylight. But it must be real. No dry, hacking laugh. It should be spontaneous, outburSting, irresistible, infectious.

"Swivel Sermons" was the name a young minister of lazy habits gave to a package of sermons which he "could preach to any text."

A bachelor friend compares a shirt button to life, because it so often hangs by a thread.

A Chinese agent offers to deliver Chinamen in Tennessee at the rate of $7,000 a hundred.

The Chinese in Alabama always say "goo by" when they go out of church during service.

THE TWO WINDOWS.

There are—so a quaint old author has said—
Two windows in every soul;
The one with a net-work of iron inclosed,
The other with lattice of gold.

From the one we see ever a dreary day—
Dark clouds are just ready to fall;
From the other the sun, with a golden glow,
Sheds beauty and brightness o'er all.

From the one we look out upon high, barren rocks,
Whose tops meet the lowering skies;
While a prospect of flowers and sweet sunny slopes
From the other rejoices our eyes.

There are those who, sorrowing, choose to sit
At the gloomy, dark-colored grate;
And the threat'ning clouds, that seem ready to fall,
With fears and misgivings await.

In your bosom, oh! sad and sorrowing one,
Give fears and misgivings no place;
For there's always a rift in the darkest cloud,
If from the right window you gaze.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Presbyterian confession of faith and shorter catechism are be- ing translated into the Siamese language.

A colossal bronze idol of Japan, forty feet high and more than six hundred years old, is about to be destroyed by public authority. It is of the Buddhist persuasion, which is not in favor with the government.

It is stated that the late Abel Minard has left $100,000 to the Drew Theological Seminary in New Jersey, with which to establish a professorship for the specific pur- pose of giving ladies a theological education.

Northern Methodist.—The high- est salary paid to a member by any Methodist church in either the New York or New York East Con- ferences is $5,000 a year—paid by St. Paul's, in New York city. There are six which pay $3,000, about twenty pay $2,500, and the great majority range from $800 to $1,500 a year.

Protestants and Romanists in the German Empire.—An exchange pa- per says that "in the North German Confederation there were 21,330,000 Protestants and 8,175,000 Catholics; in the new empire there are 24,840,- 000 Protestants and 13,380,000 Catholics, the relative proportion of Romanists to Protestants being raised from three to eight to two to three.

The United Presbyterians and the Free Church Presbyterians of Scot- land are about to follow the exam- ple of the Old and New School bodies in this country, and unite. All the presbyteries of the United Presbyterians have voted for union unanimously, with two or three exceptions, and of the Free Kirk presbyteries fifty-two have voted in favor and ten against the proposition.

Sweden.—The great revival in Swedon is still progressing. Won- derfully is the Lord pouring out his Spirit on the people. Rev. V. Witting writes: "Blessed be God everywhere. In all our missions the work of God is prospering. We have had great success this winter. New societies are arising all around, and the missionaries are laboring dili- gently, almost night and day." The field is widening, and there is a great call for more laborers.—Zion's Herald.

Bishop Janes startled many think- ers in a remark at the New Hamp- shire Conference. He said there were more Methodists in Germany to-day than in America one hundred years ago; more in China, more in India, more in Africa. At our rate of progress, where will not Meth- odism be in these countries and con- tinents in 1971? Give your money now. Sow your seed now, and you shall find it wonderfully multiplied after not many days.—Zion's Herald.

The Presbyterian communion rolls in several large cities show the fol- lowing figures: Philadelphia, 18,- 137; New York, 16,160; Brooklyn, 7,468; Cincinnati, 3,362; Chicago, 3,273; Baltimore, 2,693; St. Louis, 2,112; Boston, 734. Philadelphia has one Presbyterian communicant to every 37 of the population; Brooklyn, one to every 53; New York, one to 59; Cincinnati, one to 65; Chicago, one to 91; Baltimore, one to 99; St. Louis, one to 147; Boston, one to 341.

Revivals are occurring at various Protestant mission stations in France—e. g., at Mont, "where ten persons have been converted; among them the government school- master, who now preaches the gos- pel to pupils and parents, and fresh souls are added daily." At Fay the revival continues; twenty persons profess conversion. This work is chiefly among the younger men, and it is they who have given new im- pulse to the revival at Bellistal. Prayer meetings multiply and are carried deep into the night.—Inde- pendent.

The London Record quotes from a Bombay paper the statement that a Hindoo temple is to be erected in London. At a meeting of influen- tial natives, held in the State of Joonaghur, it was resolved to raise a subscription for the purpose of encouraging and assisting young Hindoos who desire to visit England with the object of finishing their education, and that a temple of Hur- keshwur Mahadew be erected in Lon- don out of the fund, about a lack of rupees ($50,000) being set apart for that purpose. Heathen temples have been standing for years in San Francisco, the worship of idols be- ing maintained by the Chinese.

Statistics of the Jesuits.—Ac- cording to the statistical returns published in the Unita Catholica, at the beginning of the year 1850 the Jesuit body throughout the world was only a little in excess of 4,000. Ten years afterward they had in- creased to nearly 7,000, and in the following decade of years nearly 2,000 more were added to their number; and at the time of the last returns the members of the "Society of Jesus" are given as 8,837. Out of these there are 2,551 lay coad- jutors, 2,417 students, and 3,869 priests; more than 3,000 of the latter were out of the kingdom of Italy, scattered up and down the world, in Europe, Asia, Africa, America and Australia; some acting as missionaries, and others engaged in the work of education, spiritual direction, and the "preaching of re- treats."—New York Christian Ad- vocate.

The Rev. Dr. Burt writes from Nice to the Presbyterian: "In almost every town on the Mediter- ranean coast—and, indeed, in the interior of the continent, where any considerable number of English- speaking people sojourn—there is to be found a preaching station, if not an organized congregation of the Scottish Free Church. Traveling over these Roman Catholic coun- tries, one is scarcely ever out of sight of the blue banner of Presby- terian Protestantism, thrown to the breeze by zealous hands of the Scottish Free Church." These churches are intended, primarily, for the resident Scotchmen, but they prove also excellent mission stations, operating effectively upon the native population. "In Naples, for exam- ple, there are about six hundred Italian children in the schools, which are largely, if not wholly, sus- tained and carried on by the Scot- tish Free Church Mission."

A MINISTER'S STUDY.

A writer in the Congregationalist says of Prof. Stewart's habits:

When the door of this study was closed it was set apart from daily life as much as if it had been trans- ported into another world. Imme- diately every inmate of the house began to move about on tiptoe, and whatever words were spoken were uttered in subdued tones. The task of reducing a family so full of life to this state of orderly quiet seems nearly impossible, and I do not wonder my mother's cheeks grew thin and white in the attempt, but she succeeded, and that too for many long years. Out from this closed room came first the sound of prayer. As I recall it now no word seems so well to express the exercise as "wrestling." Certain it is that whatever foes within and without this good man had to contend with, here were brought before the able Helper, and his aid invoked. Ris- ing and swelling, broken often by emotion, but yet holding persist- ently on to the end, the very tones of voice breathed a prayerful spirit I never have heard from any others; a pleading, wailing, heartfelt cadence, touching to listen to, touching to remember. Then followed intoning of passages from the Hebrew Psalms, and here the heart, mellowed and comforted by near intercourse with the Hebrew's God, found full utter- ance. Into every room of that still house the jubilant words of that divine Psalmist came ringing with their solemn joy. I wonder if they are not lingering there still! From the time this chanting ceased, until eleven, it must be a matter of the utmost importance that allowed any knock upon that study door. Vis- itors, no matter from what distance, or of what social or literary stand- ing, were all denied admittance. Business calls were ignored, and any student who happened to present his petition almost invariably re- ceived a short if not curt reply. Even the ordinary housekeeping sounds must be made under protest. An unlucky fall, the slamming of a door, loud voices, a second summons upon an outside door, all were re- ceived with a warning thump from the foot in the study, or an energetic pull of its bell. "I cannot be dis- turbed." No law of the Medes or Persians was ever more absolute. Precisely as the college clock struck eleven there came an energetic pushing back of chair and footstool, and the whole family drew a long breath of relief. Morning study hours were over, and we were once more free. Coming out of his room always with a pale, weary face, the professor went without any delay to his exercises again.

There is a colored man seventy- five years old attending school at Americus.

Memorial Services and Sermon.

The sermon of Bishop Pierce, which we publish this week on our second and third pages, is copied from the Nashville Union and American of May 9. From the same paper we quote the following account of the memorial exercises:

Last Sunday evening, at three o'clock, a very large congregation assembled at McKendree church to attend the memorial services of the late Bishop Andrew, formerly senior Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The rear and front of the pulpit was draped in mourning, and every seat in the church was occupied. The impressive ceremonies will long be remembered by all who were in attendance, and the sermon, which we give in full this morning, as taken by our shorthand reporter expressly for the Union and American, will be read with interest.

After a voluntary on the organ and music by the choir, Dr. Kelley, pastor of the church, announced that the services would be commenced by the reading of a hymn by Bishop Paine, the present senior Bishop. Bishop Paine then read the seven hundred and thirty-seventh hymn, commencing:

"What though the arm of conquering death
Does God's own house invade."

After prayer by Rev. L. Pierce, D. D., Bishop Kavanaugh read, as the first Scripture lesson, the nineteenth Psalm. Bishop Marvin then read, as the second lesson, the fifteenth chapter of St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians, beginning at the twenty-sixth verse. Bishop Doggett read the six hundred and twenty-fourth hymn, commencing:

"Teach me, my God and King,
In all things thee to see."

and after the hymn was sung by the choir, Bishop Pierce commenced the delivery of his discourse. Bishop Keener read the concluding hymn. Prayer was offered by Dr. J. Hamilton, and Bishop McTyeire pronounced the benediction.

SOWERS AND REAPERS.

Christian workers combine both characters in some degree. They are sowers and reapers at the same time, scattering seed and gathering in the fruits; but one or the other is likely to preponderate, according to times and circumstances. The preparatory dispensations were filled with sowers, who looked to gospel times as the period of harvest, and the earliest results of the Christian ministry were vitally related to the labors of other ages and generations. The apostles, in their relation to Moses and the prophets, were reapers, while in their relation to us they were sowers. This two-fold aspect of religious activity is almost inseparable from all effort in the path of duty. Wherever we toil we are entering into other men's labors, and we are bringing those who follow in our steps into a like indebtedness to us. What a man gathers is the product of another's husbandry, and what he plants may be garnered by other hands. It is rare, indeed, that the same agency completely embraces the seed-time and the harvest in its single mission.

Circumstances may limit the efforts of many to the almost exclusive character of sowers, as in the case of those who lived in the early ages of the world, and of those whose life-work it is to open foreign missions among the heathen. In these instances present results are inconsiderable, while the ultimate achievements surpass estimate. One generation witnesses the "handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains," and it is reserved for another to realize the promise that "the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon." What the Old Testament worthies saw afar off has come to pass in the latter day, and what the Careys and Judsons of other years have toiled to effect is now beginning to appear. It was for them to sow, and for us to reap. The missionaries now are gathering in a measure, but their work is still that of preparation, and they are sowers rather than reapers.

Thus it is in different fields of culture where the gospel has long been proclaimed. The conditions are often more favorable for the initiatory steps, and mature results are held back by uncontrollable circumstances. For this year, in some localities, but little can be done beyond breaking up the fallow ground and depositing the precious seed. Next year, under more propitious elements, the earing-time and the harvest will invite the reaper's sickle. While always reaping, the stress of labor and of faith is in the sowing. For the present the servant of God must go "forth weeping and bearing precious seed;" he must cast his bread upon the waters with a lavish hand, and be content with the assurance that he shall "find it after many days." Another may bring the sheaves, and yet they are so much his "that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together."

The preponderating character may also be determined by the peculiar qualifications of the worker. With gifts differing, some are better fitted for one department than for another, and all are alike dependent upon God. Paul was by eminence a planter, Apollos was endowed to water and bring forward the tender germs, and the Lord of the harvest gave the increase. When the ascending Saviour gave gifts unto men, "he gave some apostles', and some prophets', and some evangelists', and some pastors' and teachers', for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." These various offices run into each other, and are in some measure illustrated in the same individual; but some one of them is sure to be most eminently displayed. Every believer may be a sower and a reaper, but he is likely to be more effective in one or the other department of Christian usefulness. An equal anointing of the Holy Spirit is needful for both; and, instead of changing, it appropriates and sanctifies whatever is distinctive in the individual.

Thus it happens, in the order of grace and providence, that some are pre-eminently sowers, while others are just as pre-eminently reapers. God has endowed and qualified them for their high vocation, and indicated the parts which they are to perform in the gospel kingdom. All sow and all reap, and yet it is a true saying, and most significant, that "one soweth and another reapeth." Both are equally honored and rewarded of God, and both have their contrasts of character as well as labor. The faith and patience of those whose lives have been given to the cultivation of fields which others are to reap are beyond all praise. Their lot is one of peculiar discouragements and trials, in which the soul must be sustained by the highest principles of duty, and by an abiding conviction of eternal and spiritual things. The reaper enjoys more of popular appreciation, and is cheered and stimulated by the present and visible fruits of his devotion. His are great conflicts and also great temptations. The sower is tempted to impatience and distrust; the reaper is in danger of pride and of boasting. To the class of sowers belong the thinkers, writers, educators and organizers; to the class of reapers, the men of burning temperaments and popular power. The greater of these characters is doubtless the sower, and it is the greater element where both are combined in the same individual. Whitfield was a reaper; Wesley was both sower and reaper. These qualities were finely united in Bishops McKendree and Soule, but we are at no loss to determine which gave the greatest distinction to them.

In the economy of the church the sower and reaper, if not always united in the individual, are one in the complete system of religious instrumentalities. Together they cover the entire ground of consecrated effort, and describe the leading features of all evangelical activity. In our relation to the past we are debtors—"Other men labored, and ye are entered into their labors;" in our relation to the future we are preparing for a millennial harvest. Circumstances and qualifications may have assigned the believer to one or the other of these phases of usefulness, and in proportion to his fidelity to the trust will be his final reward. Whether called to sow or to reap in this world, there will be a common joy in heaven.

BAD FOR BOSTON.

The times we have been in Boston we have stopped at the Revere House, and have found it a very good hotel. In comparing it with other hotels in the North and West we have put it down as about the best. The following incident, related by Zion's Herald, will no doubt have its effect upon our patronage for the future. Such things ought not to be in Boston. Where are the Ku-Klux and civil rights bills? Why not get a bill passed on purpose for that most contumacious people? Somehow, even in that cool and salubrious latitude, they like neither to eat nor sleep with "the man and brother." Let them mend their ways and come to a better mind before Mr. Sumner compels Congress to vote his bill. The Herald says:

At the Revere Coffeehouse, attached to the Revere House, last week, two gentlemen sat down to lunch. While waiting the fulfilling of their orders, four colored gentlemen, well dressed and well behaved, entered and sat down, and gave their orders. The waiter paid no attention to them at first. On their repeating their wishes, he said he did not serve such persons as they; whereupon they left. The two white gentlemen asked if that was the fashion of the house, and were answered in the affirmative; upon which they declared they would not patronize such an establishment, and followed the other gentlemen into the street. We want Mr. Sumner's bill for Boston and the Revere House. It is a pity he did not compel Congress to vote it. We hope all true men will treat that house as it treats these true men, until it publicly repents this misdemeanor.

THROUGH THE COURTESY of our attentive correspondent, J. W., we are able to give the first day's proceedings of the Sunday School Convention. Bishop McTyeire's address and the rest of the proceedings of the convention will appear next week.

DR. DOLLINGER.

This learned and eminent theologian of the Roman Catholic Church in Germany has recently been excommunicated by the Pope for the very grave heresy of declining to believe the new dogma of papal infallibility. The religious press is making a great deal of the matter, and possibly much more than it deserves. If Dollinger and Hyacinthe can swallow everything in popery except the infallibility, we have very little hope of their future as reformers, and we shall not be surprised if they become parties to some arrangement by which the subject will disappear from public discussion. Whatever may come of the present movement, our readers will be interested in the following facts in the life of the great German doctor:

Dr. John Ignatius Dolliuger, now in his seventy-third year, was a native of Bavaria; ordained in 1822, and immediately appointed chaplain to the diocese of Bamberg. In 1822 he delivered a series of lectures on the "History of the Church," before the University of Munich. In 1845 he represented the University in the Bavarian Parliament, and in 1851 was a delegate to that of Frankfort, where he voted for the absolute separation of the church from the state. Dr. Dollinger is the author of many works upon theological subjects, and as a writer upon ecclesiastical history he is said to have no superior. Just before the late council the famous letters of Janus appeared, of which he is the reputed author, demonstrating the utter folly of declaring the Pope of Rome to be infallible; these letters shook the whole religious mind of Europe—made the dogma of infallibility ineffably ridiculous in the eyes of all Protestants and not a few Romanists.

The London Saturday Review says: Dr. Dollinger is the one Catholic divine of Germany who enjoys a European reputation, both without and within the borders of his own communion, whose piety no Ultramontane has ventured to question; and whose rigid impartiality, as well as his profound learning, no Protestant scholar would hesitate to acknowledge.

MINISTERIAL SUPPLY.

"A religious body, within which there is vitality, will ordinarily supply itself with an adequate proportion of ministers."—Isaac Taylor.

This dictum, we think, must commend itself to all candid minds as legitimate and true. We know it was so in primitive times. So also in the Reformation in the sixteenth century, and in the great revival in the eighteenth century, through the labors of Wesley, Whitefield and their co-laborers. As the vital force in every healthy organism sustains each member needful for its preservation and well-being, so each religious organization, vitalized by the presence and indwelling of the Holy Ghost, will supply itself with all the orders of men and arms of service necessary to its healthy working and preservation. If these reflections are just, are they not most damaging to the exclusive claims of any church to be "the church," especially if it is true that a large per cent. of its ministry have been Christianized and trained in other Protestant communions? Indeed it is a most damaging reflection upon its own want of vitality, of spiritual power and aggressive efficiency, and just the last thing to be matter of boasting. It is much as if some shepherd should show you his flock in proof of the assumption that of all shepherds he is the best, and, while exhibiting, should in a boastful vein point out many of the fattest and finest, with the remark: "These I enticed out of M.'s flock, and those and those out of P.'s and B.'s flocks." We imagine such an exhibition and such boasting would give the spectator and auditor a much higher idea of the shepherd's capacity to gather other people's sheep into his fold than it would of his success in rearing sheep of his own.

According to the profound and just observation of Isaac Taylor, does it not show a want of vitality in any church to be in any degree dependent for its growth on proselyting members and ministers from other communions? Would it not always be infinitely more respectable and more Christian to go out into the world, which is white to the harvest, and reap the sheaves that shall fill our barns with plenty? There is rock enough in the world's great quarry to build our edifices, no matter how high or how broad, without the necessity of pulling out the loose rocks from our neighbor's walls.

Whenever any branch of the church becomes a proselyter it makes itself an eleemosynary institution, and hopes to live by the labors and gifts of others. Every church bearing the Christian name should nobly scorn so humiliating an attitude. Let the sick, the blind, the lame, the decrepid, be objects of charity. Let them sit at the beautiful gate of the temple and receive alms; but never let the hale and strong seek to live and grow by the diligence and toils of others. It is as unjust as it is mean. Let us as Methodists never forfeit our glory in this regard, nor dare "to speak of any of those things which Christ hath not wrought by us." Let us ever remember that in this matter of proselyting it is more blessed and more honorable to give than to receive; and let us ever maintain the attitude of an invasive encampment on the field of the world, that we may recover sinners "out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will." LADIES AT WORK.

However it may be with the editor, we are sure that the ADVOCATE and its enterprising publisher have many friends among the ladies of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana. If they can be enlisted in the work of extending our circulation we know that Bro. Harp and his clerks will have hard work to keep up with them. In this connection we give a suggestive paragraph from the Christian Observer, of Cattlettsburg, Virginia. We do not know about the sewing machine; but we donht not that can be arranged also.

We take this occasion and method to return our thanks to our many lady friends who have manifested their interest in the circulation of the Observer by personal efforts.

We are receiving letters constantly from ladies unknown to us, from different parts of the country, containing words of cheer and commendation, and almost invariably accompanied by a remittance for some friend or friends who had been induced by them to subscribe for the Observer.

We trust that the number will continue to increase until the name of every lady who reads this is entered upon our "roll of honor" for having furnished at least one subscriber. By the way, should any of our lady friends desire to purchase a sewing machine, of any make, they can do so from this office, on very reasonable terms, and make payment by furnishing subscribers for the Observer.

Terms will be made known on application, either in person or by letter.

FED AND LODGED.

The editor of that excellent paper, the Methodist Protestant, like other editors, has his troubles. He thus mildly takes even presidents of conferences to task. We fear there are others who devote over-much space to "mere personal references," and to the wonderful phenomena of food and lodging.

Presidents of conferences will save us much embarrassment by attending to the suggestions made by the former editors concerning presidents' notes of travel. We hope to be spared the necessity of canceling any matter in their communications; but we will be compelled to do so when so large a portion is devoted to mere personal references. In some instances fully one-half of the journal is devoted to telling where presidents were fed and lodged. This, repeated from year to year, becomes intolerable. Tell us about the state of the church, its doings and its prospects, and your papers will be read with interest.

REV. W. V. TUDOR, of the Carondelet Street church, left on Monday last for a trip to Europe. He expects to be absent about four months, and has promised us a supply of letters, descriptive of scenes and impressions abroad. Many prayers will go up, during his absence, for his welfare and for his safe return to his appointed field of labor.

A WORD of kindness is seldom spoken in vain. It is a seed which, even when dropped by chance, springs up a flower.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

FIRST DAY.

According to appointment the great Sunday School Convention of the Methodist Episcopal Church South assembled in Nashville, Tennessee, on the morning of the eleventh instant. About ten o'clock a goodly number of delegates were gathered together in one of the magnificent halls of the capitol, and the organization of the convention was immediately proceeded with. Mr. T. J. Magruder, the well known Sunday school superintendent of Baltimore, was called to the chair and Mr. W. H. Foster, the equally well known Sunday school superintendent of New Orleans, was called to the office of secretary.

The convention was then regularly opened with solemn religious exercises, conducted by Rev. [illegible] Hamilton, of Mobile. Next the roll of the convention was called, and the following delegates answered to their names at the time or subsequently:

Kentucky Conference—Joseph Rand, E. P. Buckner and J. F. Beckley.

St. Louis Conference—T. M. Finney, S. Cupples, N. Handy and W. Lewis.

It is worthy of remark, as indicating the deep interest awakened in our church generally on the Sunday school question, that among the brethren present were many of the very venerable elders of our ministry, as Rev. Dr. Lovick Pierce, Rev. Dr. Madden and Rev. Dr. Sargent. Many of the great dignitaries of the church were also present, as Bishops Paine, Pierce, Kavanaugh, Marvin, Wightman, Doggett, McTyeire and Keener; editors Bledsoe, Summers, Harrison, Haygood, Finney and Johnson.

Upon motion it was resolved that the Bishops be elected honorary members of the convention, and be invited to preside over its sessions as they do in the General Conference. For permanent organization one member from each Conference was elected vice president; Rev. P. A. Peterson was elected secretary, Major A. W. Vick and Mr. T. P. Thompson were elected assistant secretaries; Mr. M. Hamilton was elected treasurer.

Organization completed, Bishop McTyeire proceeded to address the convention in his own unique, forcible, sententious way.

Upon the conclusion of Bishop McTyeire's address the convention adjourned to meet in evening session, at three o'clock, and it was resolved that morning and evening sessions be held daily during the continuance of the convention.

At the evening session, after the presentation of sundry memorials and resolutions, the convention entered into the discussion of the question, as per programme: "The Relation of the Pastor to the Sunday School." The discussion was opened by Mr. T. J. McCoy. He said that this question was one of the most difficult subjects that a superintendent had to deal with. It was fraught with the sorest trials. He presumed that the very difficulties involved in the solution of this problem had suggested the present discussion of it. He had had long and varied experience in the Sunday school cause, and had found this the most difficult of all questions connected with it. The Sunday school he regarded as merely a preparatory process looking to the one grand end, the conversion of the children. Here the soil was prepared for the sowing of the seed, and he very much feared that much of the effort put forth by the Sunday school teacher in thus preparing the hearts of the children for the reception of gospel truth fell still-born for want of that development which could only be produced by the genial rays of a parent's example and instruction. He was fully aware, too, that another difficulty presented itself which should be considered, and that was the long time over which the Sunday school and church services extended. The children were tired after the Sunday school was over, and indisposed to engage in the services of the sanctuary. This he thought was a difficulty that should be met in some manner he knew not how. And again he thought, even though they could accomplish the end desired—the attendance of children upon church services—yet there was even danger of the preacher preaching too largely for the appreciation of their little minds and hearts. Various plans had been adopted to avoid this difficulty. Some preached set sermons to children. Others devoted, say the first fifteen minutes of their sermon to the children. In conclusion he said that to the preachers they looked for guidance, direction and counsel. Upon them to a great extent depended the solution of the problem, as upon them largely devolved the duty of carrying to perfection the work they had begun.

The discussion was carried on by several of the brethren. Said Dr. Lipscomb: The gospel of Christ was a spiritual gospel, and as such was adapted to both young and old, and whenever the children were taught the great purpose of their existence, the design of their creation, the destiny of their being, as set forth in God's holy word, then no fears need be entertained as to their interest in these matters. He would be glad to hear the thunder of the pulpit hurled against the hearts of men, so that the Spirit of God might accompany it with power, and its fruits be made manifest in the church. The pulpit wants unction from on high. Give us this and our children would soon feel its effects upon their young hearts. They need to see their parents and their friends all aglow with fire from on high, and their spirits would soon catch the heavenly flame and burn with holy zeal. Here at last the solution is found. Let men and women be converted around your altars. Let the Shekinal glory beam from the pulpit and the chancel, and your children will reflect the glory of God. But they must have demonstrations of spiritual power to convince them of its reality and to interest them in the service of God.

At night Bishop Marvin preached to the convention from the suggestive and appropriate text: "Sow thy seed." Would that every parent and teacher and preacher in the land could have heard that sermon, so instructive, so argumentative, so rich in valuable suggestion.

NASHVILLE, May 14, 1871.

BE NOBLE, and the nobleness that lives in other men, sleeping but never dead, will rise in majesty to meet your own.

BISHOP PIERCE IN FLORIDA.

From a pleasant letter written by Bishop Pierce to the Southern Christian Advocate we take the following:

On our way to Brunswick we were joined by Bishop Wightman, who had been holding a district conference in Florida.

The church in Brunswick is unfinished and the parsonage in debt, and Bro. Fullwood, who was stationed there last year, conceived the idea of relieving the brethren by the sale of a picture, historic in its associations, conservative of an interesting tradition, and one that would be desired at least by the Methodists of Georgia.

Those familiar with Mr. Wesley's Journal will remember that he made several visits to Frederica, on St. Simon's Island. It is reported, and the fact is well authenticated, that he preached, at one time, under a live oak about one-half a mile from the fort. The grove is magnificent and the age of the tree is beyond question. Bro. Fullwood desired to have my father, as the oldest effective minister in our connection, and myself as an officer in the church—shall I say in the regular succession?—our succession is as good as any, if not better—and the tree, with its surroundings, photographed. Fortunately Bishop Wightman, on invitation, was able to join us, and so the church and people will soon be furnished with a picture hallowed in the memories that cluster about it, and somewhat remarkable in its combinations. Here we have, in vision, Oglethorpe and his colony—the first settlement of Georgia—the mission of the Wesleys to the Indians—a grand old tree under whose branches they preached one hundred and thirty-five years ago—an aged man, fresh and vigorous after the toil and hardships of sixty-seven years in the itinerancy—his son in the flesh and in the gospel—and a Bishop just from the field of conflict—pausing long enough amid these scenes of the past for the sun to paint their likenesses. The artist, Mr. Riddle, was well satisfied with his negative. How the picture will look when finished up I cannot tell. I judge the likeness will be distinct enough for recognition; the scene, front and background, is fine, and any little defects will be atoned for by memory and association. I hope the picture will sell for the benefit of the struggling membership at Brunswick.

On Monday night my father preached; nor did he give milk to babes, but strong meat to them who were of full age. How the digestion went on I cannot say. I hope unto salvation.

On Tuesday morning, some friends having provided a sail boat, a company of six preachers, with others, went out to the sound a fishing—a pre-apostolic occupation. We had a pleasant time—the day was fine, the company agreeable; some went ashore, wandering upon the beach, picking up the wonderful products of the deep; others fished diligently, and profitably. On our return we supplied several tables in the town bountifully. The most of us caught about equal numbers and had nothing to brag of, but Fullwood swelled with triumph, having pulled in a drum weighing fifty-four pounds. He quit the sport, resting upon his laurels.

At night, before a large audience, I occupied the pulpit, and Bishop Wightman concluded with a few pithy, seasonable words and prayer.

On the following morrow—the steamer which had been engaged failing to come—we took our sail boat for the island, fifteen miles distant. We made a good run and landed about noon at the base of Oglethorpe's old magazine. The fort built upon it is gone, but the barracks near by are still standing, but roofless, and tending to decay. These old structures were all built with shell and lime—tabby—and were connected by an under-ground passage. One old cannon remains corroded, almost devoured by time and rust. The inner embankment of the moat surrounding the town still remains. Just outside are the moldering tombs and vaults of the colonists, with considerable trees growing from the fissures in the crumbling walls. There is a sacred sadness about these fast-fading memorials of the past.

If I were rich enough to buy this island, and could settle my children and a few friends about me, I could have an earthly paradise. Here it is—land rich enough—water good—climate delightful—forests grand—flowers of every hue—open to the sea—the interior easy of access, the luxuries of land and water at command, and Brunswick—the American London that is to be—near by—communication with Savannah daily if you wish—is it not a nice place to live? Ah me!—I cannot buy it—I shall not go there to stay. This is not our rest. There is a better country, even an heavenly. Thank God.

On our return we had a stormy passage. The sky was clear, but the wind was blustering and gusty. There was some hesitation among us about returning on the sound in our little craft. We went aboard about eight P. M., and held a council. Some backed out and went ashore to await the steamer from Savannah next day. The rest concluded to go on. About nine P. M., the tide having turned, we hoisted sail and went down the river. As we approached the mouth the wind swelled and swept furiously. Things looked squally. We cast anchor, reefed our sail, and some wished we were on shore. The captain, proud of his seamanship and of his craft, thought he could put us through. On we went—we landlubbers trembling and anxious. At last we encountered the swell of the sea. Such pitching and rocking! We are in for it. It is as safe to go on as to go back. On we go through storm and darkness. Finally we are lost. The captain does not know where we are nor whither we are going. The boat is tacking about—no progress—the night is passing. At last I spied a light and called the captain's attention to it. It was a lighthouse. We were going wrong—plied the helm—turned about and finally landed safe at our wharf.

DEATH OF MRS. SALLIE M. WHITE

Mrs. Sallie M. White, wife of Rev. B. F. White, of the Louisiana Conference, died at the residence of her brother, Mr. Wynn, in Mississippi, on the ninth instant. Her last hours were peaceful and triumphant. Sister White was an accomplished Christian lady, and richly endowed in mind. She has been an occasional contributor to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for several years, and many who have never seen her face will feel that they have lost a dear friend. We hope that a suitable obitnary will be furnished. The following lines, written on the death of Alice Cary, are the last that she wrote for the press, and were published in the ADVOCATE of March 9, of this year. How well they apply to the author, whose spirit now mingles with the sisterhood of sanctified song on the heavenly shore!

ALICE CARY.

Let one most loving of you all,
Say: "Not a tear above her fall—
He giveth His beloved sleep!"

The sun-thus flashed a livelier flame
Through dew-drops brightened by her tread,
The waves went by with mellowed sound,
And sorrow looked up, comforted.

Soft childhood held her gentle robes,
And youth her happy garlands wove,
And age upon its tottering staff
Forgot its weariness for love.

The music of the silenced strains
Is hushed for us through earthly hours;
But echo sings them far away
Through memory's fairy-haunted bowers.

There breezes make more soothing sound,
There birds sing with more touching strain,
And holier fancies where she sings
Come through the casting of the rain.

Gone! But her loving hand has swept
Soft music from our heart's sad string,
When love had grown to weary days,
And life had lost the hours of spring.

Gone! But we feel that far beyond
The sky that night with radiance fills,
Beyond the moon's white light that streams
So saintly on the distant hills—

There is a spirit pure and fair,
Awakened to a sinless birth,
Singing to groves of Paradise
The dearest notes she sang on earth.

Forever free from tears of grief,
The Voice resistless called her home—
My faithful servant "Enter in;
Into thy Saviour's kingdom come."

THE WALLIS TIE.—Cotton planters and those dealing in plantation supplies will find it to their interest to examine the claims of the Wallis Tie, an advertisement of which appears in another column in this issue. Mr. Wallis, if we may judge from our interconrse with him, has that extraordinary gift of fine common sense which at once impresses us favorably in regard to the practical excellence of anything he might invent or manufacture; hence we are not surprised when we are informed that the Wallis Tie has taken the first premium over all competition at five agricultural fairs held during the year 1870.

We commend to the favor of our friends, in Texas and elsewhere, our near neighbor and long known friend, Colonel R. M. Ellis, of this city, who represents the Wallis Tie, and is about leaving on a visit to that State and expects to be present at the State fair in Houston. The friends of the tie predict another blue ribbon at the above named fair.

The above mentioned tie is made, as we are informed, of the best English iron, and combines great strength with extraordinary facility of adjustment.

REV. MILTON MAUPIN.—William C. Young, writing to the Texas Christian Advocate, says: "It is my painful task to give you the sad news of the death of another member of our Conference. Rev. Milton Maupin, of the Trinity Conference, breathed his last on Saturday, April 1, at six o'clock P. M. He went in great peace. His work is done. He fell asleep in Decatur, in the midst of his family and his pastoral charge. May the great Head of the Church take care of his family."

Married.

Obituaries.

Died, at the residence of her parents, in Floyd, Carroll parish, Louisiana, on April 7, 1871, after a short illness, PEARLE DOLLENHIDE, in the third year of her age.

She was a member of our Sabbath school here, and was a most precious and beautiful child.

Her mission on earth was brief and soon completed; and hence thus early she has been called to join the beautiful ones on the shining shore.

"One sweet flower has drooped and faded,
One sweet warbler hence has fled,
One fair brow the grave has shaded,
One dear schoolmate now is dead."

JAS. E. BRADLEY, P. C.

Sister ELIZA, daughter of David J. and Eliza Stott, and wife of Coleman O. Guinn, was born August 22, 1832, and died March 17, 1871.

She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in early life, and lived and died a consistent member of the same. Notwithstanding she had so short a notice of the final change, a life of such uniform Christian consistency as was hers assured all who knew her that death could not find her unprepared. In a few hours from the time she prepared a dinner with her own hands, and partook thereof herself, that perfect picture of health lay prostrate and speechless, and on the following day at nine o'clock her voice was silent in death. O God! how inscrutable are thy ways. One day a house all alive with health and hope—the next all draped in mourning.

Thus a devoted husband and three affectionate children are suddenly robbed of the brightest light that ever shone around the domestic altar. God bless and comfort the bereaved.

NEW ORLEANS, April 23, 1871.

BY AN APPLICATION of upward of fifty-two regular members of the Third African Baptist Church of New Orleans to be dismissed, to form a regular Church in the Sixth District of the city of New Orleans, to be styled the Second African Baptist Church of Jefferson City; and praying also to be set apart by the Mother Church and other regular Baptist Churches of the city of New Orleans; whereupon the prayer was cordially granted, and the following churches were invited to meet in council at Jefferson City, on the twenty-third day of April, 1871, for the purpose of organizing said church:

First Baptist Church in New Orleans—Rev. A. Armstrong and L. Quander.

First Baptist Church of Jefferson—George W. Walker.

First Baptist Church in Gretna—Henderson Williams and Thomas Campbell.

The Council was called to order by electing the Rev. A. Armstrong to the chair and John Marks as clerk. The meeting being opened by prayer, the Rev. George W. Merritt stated the object of the meeting. The secretary was then called on to read the petition and action of the Mother Church; all of which being satisfactory, the Covenant was read by the Rev. George W. Merritt and unanimously adopted. A resolution was offered and adopted that the standard work known as the Crowell Church Manual be the rule and practice of the Second Baptist Church of the City of Jefferson. After which the right hand of fellowship was extended to the Deacons in behalf of the churches. The Rev. George W. Walker charged the church in discourse from the one hundred and twenty-second Psalm, seventh and eighth verses. Benediction by the Rev. George W. Merritt. Rev. Henry Caldwell, Secretate, was left in charge of the church.

The Child's Corner.

MR. NOBODY.

I know a funny little man,
As quiet as a mouse,
Who does the mischief that is done
In everybody's house.
There's no one ever sees his face,
And yet we all agree
That every plate we break was cracked
By Mr. Nobody.

'Tis he who always tears our books—
Who leaves our doors ajar;
He pulls the buttons from our shirts,
And scatters pins afar.
That squeaking door will always squeak,
For, prithee, don't you see,
We leave the oiling to be done
By Mr. Nobody.

The finger-marks upon the doors
By none of us are made;
We never leave the blinds unclosed,
To let the curtains fade.
The ink we never spill; the boots
That lying round you see,
Are not our boots—they all belong
To Mr. Nobody!

A JEWEL SET IN SAND.

BY OLIVE THORNE.

How would you like to live where you'd have to wear, hanging from your cap, a bag of dirt, taken from the grave of Mohammed, to keep off cats, evil spirits and other dangerous things?

And not only a bag of dirt, but a hyena's tooth, a piece of carved wood and several other charms. I should think such a jingling fringe to a boy's cap would keep off cats—and everything else.

Do you think you'd enjoy being where it is considered very ill-bred to laugh or move quickly, where even the babies are grave and dignified, and where base ball is simply an impossibility?

Perhaps you don't see what this has to do with a "Jewel set in Sand;" but it has this to do with it, that the people I'm going to tell you about call their country a "Jewel set in Sand," because it is a rich country, surrounded by a desert.

We call it Tartary, and it's away off in Asia.

We are so taken up with the hustle of life in Europe we almost forget there's a large sleepy country over beyond the Himmalehs, and we're so very progressive ourselves we can scarcely realize that life goes on in the same quiet way, with the very same manners and customs that they had two or three thousand years ago.

It's almost like living over ancient history to visit that country.

What do you think of calling a religious society "Howling Dervishes?" If you think the name is funny, I can assure you they deserve it. One thing they swear to do when they join the order is to shout, day and night, "Ya hu! Ya hak! La illa hu!" which is a prayer in their language. One of these brawling creatures must be a delightful companion! No wonder they howl themselves into raving insanity.

These dervishes are the same as monks in a Catholic country. They wander about the country begging their living. Every good Mohammedan, however poor, feels obliged to give him something.

It's a convenient institution for people who like to be lazy, and don't like to starve. They often collect a good deal of money by begging, and then go into business—certainly a peculiar way of getting business capital.

The people of Central Asia, sleepy as they seem, are wide awake on one point—not to let a European into their country. They would not hesitate to cut off the head of any one whom they found in disguise among them.

Unfortunately for them, Europeans are somewhat restless and fond of exploring, and one gentleman, who had a longing desire to travel through Asia, disguised himself as a dervish, and joined a wandering band. He learned all their delightful ways, such as going barefooted and dirty, eating food they had begged, all mixed up in a half cocoanut shell, and so forth.

The hardest thing to learn was their incomparable laziness and indifference to everything. He traveled all through the country in that way, and on his return to civilized life wrote a very interesting book about it.

A very disgusting habit of the dervishes is this: After a long march, when they are tired and wet from rain, they take off their clothes, and just bury themselves in dry dirt, prepared for the horses' bedding at night, clear up to their chin.

What a dreadful thing that would be to me! Yet they seem to enjoy it, and even go to sleep there.

In that country if a man has a good deal of money he don't build a fine house and spend his money as we do, but his greatest desire is to hide it; because if it is known that one man has money every other man tries to rob him. Even the Khar (or King) himself will not scruple to have his head cut off, and seize all his money.

I can't see any use in having money if you can't use it—can you?

In their great city, Bokhara, the houses are simply mud and wood huts, which each man builds for himself. Their windows have no glass, and in winter only greased paper to keep out the cold and storm.

They have no furniture, and as they always sit on the floor they consider our sofas and chairs only so much useless lumber.

Did you ever think the waddle of a duck was a graceful motion? These Asiatics consider it so graceful and elegant that they cultivate it for themselves. Our way of walking seems to them the extreme of stiffness.

I think it would be funny to see a city full of people waddling around like so many ducks, and all wrapped up in bed clothes, too—for that's exactly what their clothes look like.

Of course they don't have thirteen pockets in one suit of clothes, as some of you boys do, so they use the folds of their clumsy garments instead of pockets; they even carry cooking utensils in them. As if your father should carry a frying pan or a coffee pot around with him! And besides the kettle, they often carry the meat.

But if the men look as if wrapped in bed clothes, the women look even worse. You see it is very vulgar for a lady to go out at all. Ladies of rank are never seen in public places, and those who do have to go into the streets disguise themselves so that their own mothers wouldn't know them. Besides muffling all up in a big cloak, with the empty sleeves hanging down outside, which makes them look like a stuffed bundle of clothes, they wear a veil of horse-hair entirely over their face.

You'll laugh when I tell you that the men do all the shopping. It is highly vulgar for a lady to buy anything.

Another funny thing is to see the clerks of the retail stores going to their place of business in the morning. In that droll country a merchant can't just lock up his store, goods and all, and leave it till morning. He must take down every article, pack it up, load it on to donkeys or porters, and carry it home with them.

There are no saloons in Bokhara, for it is a sin for a Mohammedan to drink wine, but they have "tea booths." Funny things they are, too.

Now in our country, you know, if a man goes into a coffee house he just orders his coffee of the one who keeps the house; but there each man carries his own bag of tea, hung to his belt, or stowed away in a fold of his clothes, and when he goes to a tea booth he gives the tea he wants to drink to the booth-keeper, who prepares it with hot water.

I think it ought to be called a hot water booth.

If the tea happens to be hot, don't imagine a grave Tartar would be so undignified as to blow it.

Goodness!—what do you take him for? He would just wait till it cooled. Is he a servant, that he must be in haste?

Those who affect to be stylish in their tea drinking place their right elbow in their left hand, take the cup in the right hand, and give it one graceful swing up to the lips. But what is stylish for people who cultivate a waddle wouldn't be quite the thing for us, who think waddling vulgar.—Zion's Herald.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL AGE.—Geologists have given us the age of fishes, mammals, man, etc.

Facts on every side prove that we have reached the Sunday school age.

The geologic ages have had their fossils. No doubt the Sunday school age has its fossils.

But they are becoming fewer; for it is found to be a fact that many of these things that are fossils in appearance have life beneath them, and the crust was more to blame than the heart. Method was at fault more than intention. Many opening their eyes to the great interests of the Sunday school work, become willing to give the school a place, character and power corresponding to its importance. Even a board of trustees in one State that thought the Sunday school would desecrate the church have now taken it from the school house into consecrated walls!

Ages are worthy as they tell on ages to come.

We have the heat and light which were treasured up long periods ago. The jewels of to-day were made in the dim past.

But no age can compare in influence on the future with the Sunday school. When temporal wants are no longer felt, its glow and light and treasures will be increasing for the unending years.

More workmen for this age are needed! Who will come? Will you?—Sunday School Times.

THE "human hair" exported from Bohemia to the United States during 1870 represented the value of $8,545.

THE long-expected volume of poems written by King Louis the Second, of Bavaria, will appear next fall.

The Farm and Garden.

FARM WORK FOR THE MONTH.

CORN.—If we have done as we ought the corn crop has been well plowed, thinned to a stand and hoed, leaving the soil around the young plants loose and friable, free from weeds and grass, and the middles also deeply broken, so that the tender rootlets can easily penetrate the earth to search for and find food to nourish and invigorate the crop. The next plowing should be done with a sweep or cultivator, running shallow, throwing fine earth to the plants, covering up the obtrusive grass, saving much labor to the hoe hands, and affording protection against the increasing heat of the season. When this plowing is complete let the hoe hands follow immediately, to remove all surplus stalks overlooked in the first thinning, setting up those that may be bent, pulling off suckers, and destroying every blade of grass and every weed which the plow has failed to reach. This being well done, the corn crop will need no further attention for three weeks.

COTTON.—The first thing in the cultivation of the cotton crop is to "side" it with a plow or sweep, then chop it into hunches, leaving the width of an ordinary Scovill hoe between the bunches, and then thin to a stand. Where the soil has been well prepared—deeply broken and pulverized before planting—the siding may be effectually done with a twenty or twenty-two inch sweep, as Mr. David Dickson, of Hancock county, recommends, going as close to the plant as possible, and running very shallow—not more than half an inch deep. But where this previous work has not been carefully done, or where the soil is stiff and tenacious, we believe that deep siding with a plow, running the har to the cotton, and running very close, is not only judicious but necessary. Where the stand is abundant the chopping into hunches can be done very rapidly, care being taken that it is done evenly, leaving as near as can be the same distance between the hunches. In thinning to a stand the utmost care should be taken. This is the most delicate and important work in the cultivation of the crop, and none but the steadiest and most competent hands should be employed to perform it, and even these should be continually watched. Many a good stand of cotton has been lost by being skinned and bruised when being thinned to a stand in a hurry or by careless work. Doctors differ as to whether one or more stalks should be left in a hill. Dickson leaves two or three, and allows only the width of a hoe between the hills. He leaves a wide space—four feet—between the rows, and believes that if distance is given one way—between the rows—the plants may be crowded in the drill. Others insist that distance be given both ways, and that one stalk in the hill, hills one foot apart at least, and four feet between the rows, is the best way to plant. The character of the soil and probable size of the weed must, to a great extent, regulate this. We have tried both modes of culture on land naturally poor, but made rich artificially, and are inclined to approve Mr. Dickson's plan. We believe that one stalk in a hill will bear more fruit than either of two stalks in a hill; but the two stalks together will bear a greater number of bolls than the one alone. When the cotton has been thinned to a stand not a particle of foreign growth in the shape of weeds or grass should be left undestroyed. The dream by night and thought by day of the cotton planter should be to keep out of the grass.

SMALL GRAIN.—Toward the last of this month oats, wheat, rye and barley will be ready for the reaper. Except what is needed for seed, which should be left to become thoroughly ripe, small grains should be harvested before they are "dead ripe."

COW PEAS, FORAGE CORN AND MILLET.—This is the time to sow cow peas broadcast to make hay. Drilled corn for forage should also be sown now on rich, well prepared ground. Sow three bushels of seed to the acre, in drills three feet apart, and cut when the tassels appear. Sow millet in the same way. We advise our readers to sow as largely as they can of these forage crops. Forage is scarce in the country (when was it otherwise?) money to buy it is terribly scarce, and Northern hay bought with money borrowed at two and a half per cent. a month, and secured by a lien on the crop and stock, never fattened a mule, horse or cow, within the range of our observation.

SWEET POTATOES.—Keep on setting out slips wherever you can, as long as you have any to set out. Nothing will pay better. If the weather is dry and hot set out the plants in the evening, and if you can dip the roots of the sets in a soft paste of cow manure and woods earth it will help the growth and be a protection against drought.

PUMPKINS AND SQUASHES.—If you have a spare patch of good ground plant it this month in pumpkins and squashes. They are first-rate food for milch cows, and are easily raised. The hills should be deeply broke and made rich with manure.

RUNNING GEAR, THRESHING MACHINES, ETC.—See that your running gear, threshing machine, fan, etc., are in good order for work when you need them to thresh your small grain. If they need repair have it done now.—Southern Farm and Home.

SALT FOR BEES.—I have been raising and managing a small stock of bees for the last ten years, and find the use of salt a great benefit to them. I salt each hive regularly once a week, as I do my cattle. One tablespoonful of salt to each stand of bees will do. The hive must be raised about an inch and a quarter high from the bench or stand. This enables the bees to have free access to the salt that I throw or scatter under the hives. The hives are raised from the bench by placing a small piece of stone under each corner. I never have had the moth to trouble my hives since I have adopted the plan of salting my bees.

The bee raiser will find it of great benefit to salt his bees once a week. It saves the bees the labor of hunting salt in the busy part of the season.—Correspondent of Christian Observer.

A CANADA correspondent of the American Agriculturist has been making experiments in grafting potatoes. He extracted all the eyes from a Garnet Chili, and replaced them with eyes from the Early Rose. In the same manner he grafted the Chili on the Rose. All the specimens did well: "The Rose grafted upon the Chili gave a fair crop—about one-half of the Rose type and color, and the other half of the Chili type, but pure white. As to the Chili, grafted into the Rose, the vines were extremely large, and, when dug, gave a large yield of beautiful potatoes, but all of them with clear white skins, except one or two to each point, which were red; both colors were of the Chili type, and no apparent sign of the Early Rose among them."

EARLY RISING.—I would inscribe on the curtain of your bed and the walls of your chamber: "If you do not rise early you can make progress in nothing. If you do not set apart your hours of reading, if you suffer yourself or any one else to break in upon them, your days will slip through your hands unprofitably and frivolously, and unenjoyed by yourself."—Lord Chatham.

A LITTLE boy, after saying his evening prayer, stood up and said to his irreligious parent: "Now, father, I have said my prayers; have you said yours? or are you too big to pray?"

The patentee and manufacturer of the celebrated ARROW TIE, J. J. MEDICAL.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR,

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, (to which localities, and especially to Fisher T. Rawson and James E. Bradley, he refers those who desire facts before trying it for themselves,) justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to durat on of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

BRACES AND TRUSSES.—DR. JOHN C. BANGELL informs the medical profession and others that he has constantly on hand and for sale a complete assortment of BANNING'S TRUSSES, Spinal and Shoulder Braces, and other appliances for the prevention, relief and cure of general debility, various weakness and derangements of public speakers and singers, palpitation of the heart, bronchitis and weakness of the lungs, spinal weakness and deformity, dyspepsia and nervous affections, constipation and chronic diarrhea, female derangements and extreme displacements of the womb, RUPTURE, PROLAPSUS, prolapsus-ani, and weakness of the male and female system.

These light, cool and springy auxiliaries are the special favorites of the profession, are intensely common-sense and rational in their action; supply a missing link in treatment; place the above affections in a new and more hopeful light, and often complete cures where medicine can only mitigate, and more than it can cure a hernia or a dislocated joint.

He specially desires an examination of these appliances by the profession and sufferers. Where necessary the professional application of the above braces will be under our supervision or that of the family physician.

These valuable appliances are sanctioned by a large number of the medical profession in the United States and Europe as the only adapted to fulfill the purpose for which they are intended, and the Trusses and Braces are adopted by the United States government for the use of the army and navy. Terms cash. Consultations free. Send for their pamphlet. It is better to call.

Guyot's Geographical Text-Books.

"Incomparably superior to anything published."—Agassiz.

Introduction to the Study of Geography.
Elementary Geography.
Intermediate Geography.
Common School Geography.

Guyot's System is approved and indorsed by the most distinguished literary and scientific men of our nation; such as Profs. Agassiz, Dana, Tenney, Henry and others, celebrated in science throughout Europe as well as at home.

The fact that ONE MILLION (1,000,000) copies of the work are in use in the schools of our country, at the present time, is proof of the unparalleled success attending the New system, for no other series of books ever published in America have ever secured so rapid and extensive introduction. They are the text-books in nearly all the colleges, seminaries, normal schools, etc., in the United States; in the public schools of the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Rochester, and most of the cities and towns of the Eastern States; Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Springfield, Toledo, Marietta, and most of the other important towns and cities, numbering nine thousand schools in Ohio, and hundreds of towns and cities in the other Western States, while in the Southern States and California they are being extensively adopted.

Believing that the publication of Professor Guyot's series has marked a new and better era in the presentation of geographical science, that by it the pupils of this generation will obtain a clearer, more definite and exalted knowledge of the world on which they live, and that it is so systematized as to render that knowledge more valuable and permanent, we commend it to the attention of all interested in educational improvements and progress.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—should not be offensive to the people—which are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

THESE are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. For sale by NERVE TEMPERATURE.—M. Schiff, a Frenchman—and who but a Frenchman of the school of Brown-Sequard could do such a thing?—has been experimenting on fowls by inserting into the brain small therma-electric piles of copper and bismuth. The wound will heal up in such a case and leave the wires issuing, one from each side of the head; these being attached to a most delicate galvanometer, the arrangement is complete—apparently, for determining with accuracy the heat of the brain tissue under different circumstances. It was found that excitements of various kinds to which the creature was subjected at once registered on the instrument an excess of heat. The different sets of nerves were tried in turn, as by pinching, by sudden noises, and by waving colored objects before the eye. In the latter case at first a twofold impression was produced—an effect on the sight, and another on the sense of fear—and the galvanometer registered twelve degrees. But as the fear subsided, by the animal becoming accustomed to the object, the galvanometer fell back to a stationary position at eight degrees. Inferentially we may judge that human brain activity increases the temperature of the brain mass or portions of it; but this is nothing very new, as every one's consciousness, under certain circumstances, gives the same information. Brain activity calls at once a determination of blood to the spot, and an increase of blood in any part brings heat to the surrounding tissues. It is probably the fact that severe mental labor, as in close original thought, induces a rapid circulation, and consequently extra heat, much more decisively than the mere exercise of thought in ordinary reading, or giving a casual attention to external objects. Severe application of this kind, bringing such a strain on the parts, should therefore not be long prolonged at any one time.

A CRUSADE FOR THE POPE.

The "Dieu le veult" which heralded the first Crusade was the spontaneous outburst of such a resolve. If kings took the cross and led their subjects to Palestine, they did but follow a movement which they had not initiated, but the strength of which bore them along with it. But your sober-minded, moderate men, your men of material progress, will say that a crusade in the nineteenth century, the century of liberal parliaments and constitutional kings, is an impossibility. The religious idea, they will urge, has no longer the same hold on the masses as it had in the middle ages; the minds of men have taken wholly a different direction, and are fixed on altogether different objects. So far from being impossible, we believe it to be both probable and easy of execution. Catholic Europe has been roused from the fatal slumber of indifference by the roar of the cannon which bombarded the city of Rome, the Christian Jerusalem. No one can deny that the awakening has been grand and sublime. It has corresponded in greatness to that of the iniquity committed against our common father by the enemies of God and his Christ. And if this be probable and easy to bring about, we may add that it is necessary. To say it is not necessary is equivalent to denying the necessary right of self-defense. Catholics have by degrees seen themselves despoiled by the revolution of their most precious rights. We have been patient, but we will not be slaves. What form the new crusade may take we know not yet; but a crusade there truly will be to deliver the sepulcher of Peter and the Catholic world; and the hour, we believe, draws nigh.—New York St. Peter (Catholic.)

AN ANGEL IN THE STONE.—It is related of Michael Angelo, that, while walking with some friends through an obscure street in the city of Florence, he discovered a fine block of marble lying neglected in a yard, and half buried in dirt and rubbish. Regardless of his holiday attire, he at once fell to work upon it, clearing away its filth, and striving to lift it from the slime and mire in which it lay. His companions asked him, in astonishment, what he was doing, and what he wanted with that worthless piece of rock.

"O there's an angel in the stone," was the answer, "and I must get it out."

He had it removed to his studio, and with patient toil, with mallet and chisel, he let the angel out. What to others was but a rude, unsightly mass of stone, to his educated eye was the buried glory of art. A mason would have put it into a stone wall; a cartman would have used it for filling in, or to grade the streets; but Angelo transformed it into a gem of art, and gave it value for ages to come.

What possibilities of virtue and usefulness may not a good man see in a child? Do we know how to get the angel out? Are our children to be only for "filling in?"

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market is without any material change. A moderate business has been done in most branches of the wholesale trade. Sugar has been in fair request, and the medium grades have commanded fuller prices. There has also been a good demand for molasses, without any material change in rates. Flour has continued quiet but firm, and corn sells freely to the local trade. Pork has ruled still more in favor of buyers, but stiffened on Tuesday, and bacon is without any material change. The demand for tobacco has resulted in sales to a fair extent (500 hogsheads) at steady prices.

Our accounts from the country corroborate the previous unfavorable reports. From every point we receive complaints of excessive rains, and an ungenial temperature, in some cases doing considerable damage, and in all retarding the crop.

The river has remained stationary since our last, and is now 3 feet 4 inches below high water mark.

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales..	10,290
Lake		2
Arkansas		323
Florida		92
Mobile		757
Texas		1,012
Total		12,476

On Saturday the demand was stimulated by the news from Liverpool and New York, where prices were respectively 1-16d and ⅛c. higher, and after the noon telegram from the latter, reporting a further advance of ⅛c., the demand was stronger, while factors were still more stringent in their pretensions. Under these circumstances, and with the movement checked by light supplies, the sales did not exceed 3,900 bales, and the closing rates showed an improvement of ⅜c. in good ordinary and the better qualities, and ¼ to ⅜c. in the lower grades. On Monday rather exciting news from Liverpool and New York induced factors to claim still higher prices—¼ to ½c. above Saturday's rates—and as buyers were unwilling to go on at the figures asked, the movement exhibited but little animation, and was further checked after the receipt of later telegrams reporting the New York market to have lost ⅛c. of the previous improvement. The business was consequently confined to 3,000 bales, and the closing quotations showed a net advance of ¼ to ⅜c. in good ordinary and low middling, and ⅛c. in the other grades. On Tuesday the market opened with very little movement, and, under the depressing influence of unfavorable telegrams from New York, continued extremely dull throughout the day, only a few buyers coming forward and taking barely 1,400 bales, at prices showing a falling off of ⅛ to ¼c. from Monday's rates. Most factors adhered to their previous pretensions, but sales could not be effected unless at the above concession, nor could they have been forced unless at a still more marked reduction.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 8,300 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,324,801 bales, against 1,073,354 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 986,335 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 673,426 bales to Great Britain, 275,150 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 242,071 to France.

Ordinary	11¼ to 12¼
Good ordinary	14 to 14¼
Low middling	14⅞ to 15¼
Middling	15⅞ to 15⅞

This arrangement lasts until the twentieth of September, when the full committee will meet and arrange a further programme.

Washington, May 20.—Captain Shufeldt, of the Tehuantepec surveying party, has arrived here. He reports that a thorough survey of Tehuantepec has been made, and he has no doubt of the feasibility of a surface canal, with no more cost than the importance of the work warrants. The supply of water is taken from a source never before thought of for that purpose.

Memphis, May 20.—The Protestant Sunday school celebration to-day surpassed anything ever witnessed here; fully ten thousand children participated in the procession, preceded by brass bands, the children singing as they marched along. The length of the road is to be nine hundred and seventy miles, and the route is as already published.

The capital has nearly all been subscribed in Europe, and the immediate construction of the road is positively determined on. It will form part of a continuous line from San Francisco to New York.

The Bulletin, Morning Call, Alta California and Sacramento Union have all published editorials congratulatory of the enterprise and giving details of it.

San Francisco, May 21.—The official reports of the authorities of Arizona on the late massacre of Apaches at Camp Grant are published by order of the department commander. They charge that the Indians were peacefully engaged on their reservation, and were entitled to the protection of the United States as prisoners of war, and that of the whole number killed eight were men and the others women and children. The butchery is denounced as simply an unprovoked murder.

The treaty committee failed to elicit answers from A. J. Kirby regarding who filed, and in whose handwriting the treaty was. Mr. Tinker, the manager of the telegraph office, declines to furnish the manuscripts asked for by the committee.

FOREIGN.

Paris, May 17.—The column of the Place Vendome fell in three pieces. The square in which it stood henceforth will be known as the Place International.

The Committee of Public Safety has by a decree associated the civil commissioners with all the generals of the Commune, in order, it is said, to prevent the danger of a dictatorship.

All trains leaving Paris are carefully examined.

The owners of petroleum are ordered to report to the Commune.

By two o'clock Place Vendome was thronged with people. Three bands played while the workmen were engaged chopping the base of the column. Engineer Abadie soon after arrived. Rochefort followed. The people cheered Rochefort. The arrangements were all completed; the bugles sounded.

The cables which had been attached to the column were stretched, but the column stood firm. One of the windlasses gave way. Abadie wanted two hours to repair the accident.

At five o'clock it was announced that the column would not fall until seven. A general cry of disapprobation arose from the multitude. Abadie was accused of complicity with the Versaillists, and threatened with the guillotine.

At half-past seven the cables were again stretched, the column swayed, then swept magnificently down, bursting into fragments as it struck the earth.

The crowd cried "Viva la Commune!" and the bands played "The Marsellaise." The statue of the Emperor separated first from the column and the head was broken off by the fall. The Nationals spat upon it and struck it with their rifles.

Orators made all kinds of extravagant speeches. The crowd then dispersed. The soldiers moved off waving the red flag. The excitement was tremendous and continuous.

Versailles, May 18, evening.—The Assembly adopted the entire treaty signed at Frankfort, between France and Germany.

General Chanzy objected to the proposed territorial exchange, but was answered by Thiers and Ducrot, who insisted upon the advantage of retaining and strengthening Belfort.

Paris, May 18.—Marshal McMahon has called upon the German army to aid him, and the German engineers are now throwing a bridge over the Seine to facilitate the passage of the Versailles and German armies. The decisive attack will come from the east, and the Germans and French will act together.

London, May 18.—The Prussians are approaching, and it is expected will attack Paris on the east side. It is said the Prussians have sent their ultimatum to the Commune.

Paris, May 18, evening.—The Versaillists are throwing up entrenchments two hundred yards from Auteuil gate. Fort Montrouge still coutinues a feeble resistance. The bombardment is incessant. The German troops are taking possession of many commanding positions.

Constantinople, May 19.—A force of fifty thousand Turkish troops have recently been concentrated at Shumla, on the main route between Wallachia and Constantinople.

Versailles, May 19.—General McMahon, in general orders, tells the soldiers of the destruction of the mouument in the Place Vendome, which foreign enemies have left undisturbed, and exhorts them to redoubls their efforts to preserve the country and its glorious memories.

Berne, May 19.—Austria has proposed and Switzerland agreed to a conference to prevent a spread of the rindsrpest.

London, May 19.—All official dispatches to London journals represent a reign of terror prevailing in Paris. Many eminent citizens are daily imprisoned, and those held as hostages disposed of.

Havana, May 20.—Juan Marquez Garcia, convicted of treason, was executed at Fort Cabanas this morning at six o'clock.

General Zea destroyed an insurgent camp on the tenth. On the twelfth five persons were killed. His troops killed Eloy Beauvilliers, an insurgent general of artillery.

Captain Antonio Bachiller, Adjutant Petro Lecerf, Lieutenant Pineres and five others were also killed on the thirteenth.

General Zea attacked Villa Mils forces on the fourteenth, killing ten. He returned to Puerto Principe on the sixteenth.

Paris, May 20.—The Prussians are at Bondy and Aubervilliers, and strongly reinforced.

The prisoners accused of causing the explosion will be shot to-night.

The first hostages selected for execution are the Archbishop of Paris and the Abbes De Guerry and Croze.

Frankfort, May 20.—Bismarck, Ponier Quertier and Jules Favre arrived to-day, for the purpose of exchanging ratifications of the treaty of peace.

Versailles, Sunday night, May 21.—A circular from President Thiers officially confirms the entrance of the troops into Paris. It says the gate of St. Cloud, having been battered down, General Donai rushed in.

Since the issue of the above circular good news has been received. Douai's men hold their position inside St. Cloud gate, where they have cut the telegraph wires communicating with other portions of the enciente.

A flag of truce was hoisted at Anteul Gate. Two regiments entered there, and proceeded beyond the viaduct of the circular railway, meeting with feeble resistance. General Cissey reports that Malakoff and Fort Montrouge have been abandoned by the insurgents, and will soon be occupied by his command; but the batteries on the ramparts opposite are still firing. There is a panic in Paris.

It is said Pyat, Grousset and other rebel leaders have disappeared.

Lisbon, May 21.—Dissensions have broken out between the government and the chamber of deputies.

Paris, May 22, A. M.—Over seventy thousand Versaillists have entered the city, and more are coming.

They marched in all night, coming through six gates, and met with but slight resistance.

The barricades were not defended. No mines were exploded.

The Versaillists are now moving on the Hotel de Ville, where the Communists will make their last stand.

The Versaillists behaved splendidly, committing no excesses.

Paris, May 22, afternoon.—The Versailles army has occupied Paris.

The headquarters of General Cissey, whose forces entered the city from the south, are in the Ecole Militaire, which fronts the Champs de Mars.

There was a great explosion near Esplanade des Invalides.

Versailles, May 22.—In the Assembly, to-day, President Thiers made a congratulatory speech on the surprising success of the government arms. He said he had not expected to effect an entrance into Paris for three or more days, and gave an account in detail of the movements on Sunday, which terminated so victoriously. He announced that the government was determined to visit with rigorous punishment the most criminal of the insurgents.

Bills were introduced to restore the Chapel of Expiation and the column of the Place Vendome, the latter to be surmounted by a statue of France.

Versailles, May 22, 10 A. M.—Troops of McMahon all moving this morning and pouring through Bois du Boulogne. Ten thousand men with fifteen pieces of artillery are concentrated on Avenue de la Grand Armee, about to move in a direct line for the Arc de Triomphe and the barracks thereof. The principal avenues leading toward the Champs Elysees are in the hands of the Versaillists.

The consternation among the Communists is represented as very great.

McMahon in person is superintending the operations.

The enthusiasm of the troops is unbounded.

Paris, May 22.—The city is in tremendous commotion.

The collapse of the Commune is imminent.

London, May 22, evening.—In the House of Lords to-night the Marquis of Salisbury asked if, in view of the evident dislike of the Canadians to the treaty of Washington, the government intended to press its ratification before the twelfth of June.

The Earl of Lauderdale quoted from the reports by the Atlantic cable of Senator Sumner's speech denouncing the treaty save as a peace measure, ridiculed the idea of an apology from England, and declared she never made any.

Earl Granville, foreign secretary, declined to answer the Earl of Lauderdale. It was inconvenient now to discuss the terms of the treaty. He personally sympathized as little with Sumner as with Lauderdale. The treaty was not a treaty until it was ratified. It had already been published in the United States, for the American Senate had commenced an investigation into the surruptitious means by which it had been obtained for publication; hence it should be submitted to Parliament. It was impossible to anticipate the decision of the Senate.

Lord Granville declined to pledge the government to a refusal to ratify before June 12, simply because notice had been given of the intention to raise a discussion upon it in Parliament.

The Earl of Carnarvon explained that the Marquis of Salisbury only desired an opportunity to discuss the treaty before the ratifications were exchanged. It was understood, moreover, that the Canadian Parliament was to be consulted.

Earl Russell insisted on the demand that an opportunity be given for discussion as a parliamentary prerogative.

Earl Grey said diplomacy was impossible, if it had to be submitted to Parliament, before ratification. It was the prerogative of the crown to conclude treaties on its own motion.

Lord Cairns concurred with Earl Grey.

Earl Granville stated that the official copy of the treaty was only received by the government yesterday. It was now printing and would be submitted on Tuesday. Other official documents would be withheld pending the debate in the United States Senate on the ratification.

After passing the consolidated fund bill and the customs income tax bill the House of Lords adjourned.

Madrid, May 22.—To-day's session of the Spanish Congress was exceedingly stormy.

The radicals presented a resolution for the establishment of a republic, and the Carlists submitted a motion declaring the election of King Amadeus void, and Don Carlos of Spain the rightful King.

The discussion was long and excited, but finally adjourned without a vote upon either proposition.

St. Denis, Tuesday night, May 23. Fighting in Paris has ceased. McMahon and Thiers enter to-morrow.

The losses of the Communists were fearful, as the troops gave no quarter. Many leaders of the Commune were captured and immediately shot.

Frankfort, May 23.—Bismarck, Favre and Ponyer Quertier have returned home.

The Frankfort papers contain a statement that Prince Bismarck says the German authorities have notified the Commune that they will bombard Paris in case the residence of Mr. Washburne, American minister, be sacked.

Versailles, May 23.—The heaviest fighting yesterday was in the Rue Royale, and the slaughter was terrific. Colonels Dubois and Morau, nephews of Guizot, commander of the Versailles troops, were killed by an explosion of torpedoes.

The barricade in the Rue St. Honore was captured and recaptured six times.

It is rumored the Archbishop of Paris and the Abbes Francois and Villimessant have been shot by the insurgents.

The operations of the government troops are progressing satisfactorily everywhere, and a complete suppression of the insurrection is expected to-day or to-morrow.

Versailles, May 23, noon.—Advices from Paris report a terrible fire of cannon and musketry since daybreak this morning in the direction of Montmartre. The isolation of Paris by the Prussians is now complete.

Dombrowski was wounded in endeavoring to make his escape from the Versaillist troops, but was prevented by the Prussians.

The enthusiasm among the delivered population of Paris is immense. Battalions of the friends of order are reorganizing.

The insurgents make no attempt to break the Prussian line of encirclement. The Prussian troops have been ordered to open fire on the insurgents if they approach within four hundred paces.

COMMERCIAL.

From the Picayune of the twenty-first instant we make the following extracts:

Slowly but steadily business is sinking into the summer lassitude. The stock of cotton on sale has dwindled down to about 40,000 bales—an amount which a few brisk days' business would sweep off. Average sales of 3,000 bales a day for a while longer will so finish up the season as to allow those merchants, factors or brokers who are inclined to do so to enjoy a summer vacation. Tobacco factors, however, are just "opening the ball," and will have to tug through many a scorching day, showing samples on their third floors, before their labors shall have finished.

There are now in port 47 ships, 22 barks, 11 brigs, 7 schooners and 6 steamships. Up to the latest mail dates there are 51 vessels on the way to this port, of which 22 are ships and 15 are barks.

Boston steamers are again running regularly to this port, and we believe are doing well.

The freight on leaf tobacco from New Orleans to Liverpool by sail is now 32s. 6d. per hogshead, to Bremen 32s. 6d. @ 35s. The sail rate from New York to those ports is the same. With such cheap freights down the river, what is to prevent New Orleans from getting all the Western tobacco? The freight from Louisville to New Orleans is $4 per hogshead, while from Louisville to New York it is $8.50. Let these facts be disseminated through the West by our factors, and all the tobacco will come down the river.

The receipts of cattle during the last ten days have been 12,639 Texas beeves, 7,845 calves and yearlings, 5,221 hogs, 7,943 sheep; or a weekly average of 2,057 beeves, yearlings and calves, 522 hogs, and 794 sheep. During the same time last year the average receipts weekly were 1,854 beeves, calves and yearlings, 377 hogs, and 706 sheep. The quality of the beef this season is very poor, and prices are therefore lower here, though higher in Texas. Sheep are a little dearer than last spring; but hogs are now selling at 6½ @ 8c. ₮ lb. gross, where they were worth last season 10c.

The track of the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas railroad was completed yesterday, the eighteenth instant, to Donaldsonville, sixty-three miles west of this city. About twenty miles of grading is already completed west of Donaldsonville, and a large force is now engaged upon its extension. We learn that the division between this city and Donaldsonville will soon be opened for traffic, in order to accommodate the business of the coast.—Times.

FAINT, YET PURSUING.

BY MARIE BELL.

Longing, with misty eyes,
For the blest boon I seek,
Hiding within my breast
Words that I cannot speak.

Full many a prayer I pour
Into his listening ear,
Telling him all my need:
Doth not a Father hear?

Is heaven so far away?
Will not his watchful eye,
Noting the sparrow's fall,
See when his children cry?

Surely I have "believed."
Clinging, tho' tempted sore,
Fast to the promises,
Leaning on Jesus more.

Planting my slipping feet,
Bidding fresh doubts be quelled,
Clasping anew his hand,
"Holding and being held."

Answer there cometh none,
Waiting and weary I;
Brother of longing men!
Let not my courage die.

Help me to wait thy time,
Help me to choose thy way,
Sure of my loving God,
E'en in the darkest day.

Rest quiet here, my soul!
Bid every doubt be still!
Cheering the lonely ones,
Doing thy Father's will.

What tho' the answer waits?
He knoweth all thy needs;
What tho' the path be rough,
Since it to glory leads?

BISHOP McTYEIRE'S ADDRESS

On the Relation of Pastors to Sunday Schools.

DELIVERED BEFORE THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION, NASHVILLE, MAY 11.

MR. PRESIDENT AND DELEGATES: The Sunday school is of the church; in every way it has been so recognized. It is set on the Lord's day; our houses of worship are open to it, notwithstanding they have been "set apart from all unhallowed or common uses;" in general, annual and quarterly conferences its interests are inquired into and its affairs are regulated; ministers are detailed for its agency and its editorial department; its statistics are displayed everywhere on the face of ecclesiastical journals. It is not an alien and foreigner; it is not an outside, friendly institution. It is nearer than that. The Sunday school is the catechetical institute of the church. It is maintained by and for the church, and under the church's control.

This convention is the last and most pronounced expression of the interest the church has in the Sunday school.

The relation of the pastor to this work may be inferred from several considerations. The commission from the Lord Jesus Christ, which he has received, stretches his care over all. Specifically, it embraces children. "Feed my lambs," said the risen Saviour, and "feed my sheep." This directly invests the pastor, and he cannot divest himself. The responsibility is inalienable. No convention or General Conference can come between the shepherd of the flock and the lambs of that flock. No church council can absolve the pastor of this duty which the Head of the Church has laid on him. It is primary and paramount and peremptory. In this work he may have helpers, but not substitutes. He may accept aid, but he cannot be set aside. There may be teachers, librarians, superintendents and assistant superintendents, but the pastor ex officio is and must be principal.

In church government the ministry have made large concessions of ecclesiastical power in favor of lay representation. But pastors cannot yield up the spiritual oversight and religious instruction of the children. It is not for them to say whether it shall pass out of their hands and beyond their control. To "instruct the children" belongs to their calling, and they vow to do it.

The Discipline of the Methodist Church very consistently, from the beginning, gave them the initiative in Sunday schools:

Ques.—"What directions are given concerning Sunday schools?"

Ans.—"Let Sunday schools be formed in all our congregations where ten children can be collected for that purpose. And it shall be the especial duty of preachers having charge of circuits and stations, with the aid of the other preachers, to see that this be done; to engage the co-operation of as many of the members as they can; to visit the school as often as practicable, and to preach on the subject of Sunday schools and religious instruction in each congregation."

Happy is the pastor whose members are able and willing to co-operate. If they are engaged to co-operate, that does not relieve him. He must "visit the schools as often as practicable," to see how they are attended by the children, how they are conducted by the teachers, and with what kind of literature they are supplied.

The Discipline is express: "Let our catechism be used as extensively as possible in our Sunday schools; and let the preacher faithfully enforce upon Sunday school teachers the great importance of instructing children in the doctrines and duties of our holy religion."

It is encouraging to superintendents and teachers to see the pastor among them. They can do much by their manner of receiving him, and by their recognition of him, in his true relation, to make his visits useful. Opportunity should be given him to open the school with prayer, and to make remarks before this interesting portion of his charge. In him the teachers and pupils will see themselves and their work related to the church. His visitation is official.

These Sunday school visitations enable the pastor to form a personal acquaintance with the children, and will beget endearment and influence. The opportunity is great and good.

It may be doubted whether the pastor should be confined as teacher to any class. Sometimes this may be necessary; oftener it is not expedient. He belongs, and equally, to them all.

Suppose the pastor cannot engage co-operation. In the rounds of his circuit the Sunday school is neglected by those in whose hands he leaves it, and disbands or dies out. Must the man of God forget his vows to instruct the children? No. Alone and without a helper, he can do much. In my late visitation to the West I was pleased with a practice, on the part of some, which came to notice in the district conferences. The people lacking zeal or intelligence or godly devotion to the cause, and the Sabbath schools organized by the pastor coming to nothing, he gave out notice that on a certain Sunday (the day of his regular appointment) he would meet and catechise the children at each church. They loved to be met, and talked to, and sung with. Soon the once-in-three-weeks or once-a-month Sunday school became an institution. The children came out well, and their parents too. The pastor stood among them, hearing them and asking them questions. They were instructed in the Commandments, the Lord's prayer, the creed and the nature of the sacraments. The machinery of the Sunday school was wanting, but some of its highest benefits were realized under the arrangement. Where there's a will there's a way.

It came to notice also that another pastor gathered about him weekly the baptized children of his church, instructing them in the nature and design of baptism, and teaching them as well how to live as what they ought to believe. To be a "child of the church" is thus shown to have a privilege attached to it. Isaac Taylor meant an unfriendly criticism of Methodism when he said: "Where children are not thought of as members of Christ, and where they come under no discipline as such, the rite of baptism administered in infancy is a five minutes' operation—profitless, perplexing, unintelligible, and out of harmony as well with the Christian scheme as with the system under which it takes place. An incongruity, not perceived by the parties, but yet serious, was it when these preachers, whose function was only convert-making, welcomed infants into a society from which they were instantly afterward thrust out, and thenceforward forgotten by it until they were of age to listen to sermons."

Mr. Taylor, in this as in other things, has done injustice to our system, though it must be allowed he has but too faithfully described some preachers. An itinerant ministry is not incompatible with the religious instruction of children. "Convert-making" among adults is not its only function. The care of the children of the church is not ignored in the charges and injunctions laid on our ministry. And where they take advantage of the aid of Sunday schools we have seen the baptized children well instructed in the doctrines and duties of our holy religion, and coming forward early and well prepared to assume their vows, and be "recognized" as members of the church.

The pastor's relation to the Sunday school is not so much that of a teacher of any particular class as that of a teacher of the teachers. One of our most successful pastors may be seen, once a week, in company with his corps of Sunday school teachers, proposing the uniform lesson for the Sunday following. If you have been admitted into that assembly you have never seen a pastor more in place, as he presides in the teachers' meeting, propounds the questions, assists in the solution of difficulties, gives his exegesis, enters into the discussion of proof texts, and into the examination of commentaries and sacred geography bearing upon the lesson. This plan secures thoroughness; it excites interest; it magnifies the office. Where it prevails there will be no clashing between the doctrines of the pulpit and those taught in the Sunday school. They will all speak the same things.

It has been well said by Vinet: "The pastor who can catechise well will not preach badly." The effort at a clear comprehension and statement of fundamental truths will be no disadvantage to his ministry.

The associations of the house of God, and the presence and influence of him who leads the congregation in public worship, are very helpful in another respect. By these the Sunday school is differentiated from other schools. The tasked attention, the labor of learning, the enforced order, are not secular, but they are religious. It was a profound remark of Madam Neckar: "Religion will never assume its most sacred aspect to young people unless the very teaching of it is a mode of worship."

To set in a clear light the relation of the pastor to the Sunday school, let us suppose that to be true which, in some cases, seems to be the theory that the Sunday school of a church is a friendly, useful, moral institution ran by volunteers, and on an independent line; that the pastor is interested in it only as other good citizens and members are; that when present he is merely a visiting brother, entitled to no particular consideration; that he has no control over anything there. See what would follow:

The law of the church requires the pastor "to lay before the quarterly conference, at each quarterly meeting, to be entered on its journal, a written statement of the number and state of the Sunday schools" within his circuit or station. He is also required to return these statistics to the Annual Conference.

But how is he to get at them? By what authority does he claim access to records or call for reports to be made to him? If they refuse to make returns, what redress has he? Or, if the returns are incorrect, what remedy has he?

Again, suppose while the pastor is preaching Arminian doctrines to the adult congregation the Sunday school superintendents are teaching Calvinism to the children. Or, while the pastor is preaching that Jesus is God, the Sunday school is inculcating a Unitarian theology. The pulpit may be insisting on Wesleyan theology, the Sunday school may be reading and singing and learning views of doctrines and discipline widely at variance.

What is to be done in the presence of such evils? Must the pastor be helpless while he looks upon the destruction of his labor and his hope? The contest will not be long, nor the issue doubtful. Those who have the children in hand, and use their opportunity to teach them error, have the advantage. They will carry it over him who is confined in his ministrations to adults. These die—those come on. The elders decrease—the children increase.

Our law provides that "each quarterly conference shall be deemed a board of managers, having supervision of all the Sunday schools and Sunday school societies within its limits." It also makes superintendents members of the quarterly conference.

A more specific statement or direction has yet to be given for the election of a superintendent and teachers. Reason and analogy indicate that this matter should be under the control of the pastor and quarterly conference; not appointed, as class leaders, by the pastor alone, but as stewards and trustees are, by the joint action of the preacher in charge and the official members.

We rejoice in the Sunday school movement—its power, its scope. It has received ecclesiastical recognition. The church is responsible for it. Great is the advantage and the blessing, under God, that may come of it. But there are two points to be guarded, and it is suggested that this ecumenical convention of Southern Methodism may do much in these respects.

Make the institution valuable to the church; and when we say church we mean that branch of it which you represent—not unchurching others.

The Sunday school is not a holiday affair—an occasion of picnics and banners and scene shifting. Catechisation is to lay the foundation of religious life; to prepare for hearing sermons and for preaching them; to inculcate a knowledge of doctrine and discipline; to provide a church membership better grounded and trained than the present or past generations are or have been. The vast number of teachers and children engaged in this work furnishes a market, which shrewd bookmakers and publishers have not overlooked. Unless we beware our Sunday schools will be fed on worse than husks. Our own publications, provided with official care and oversight, are even now ruled out of hundreds of Sunday schools taught in our churches and by our members. A latitudinarianism of dangerous tendency is allowed in the literature of the children. They are taught we know not what—only this we know, in too many cases they are not taught what their parents believe, and what our standards declare. "A mixed multitude," instead of bands trained and harnessed for the march and the fight, is passing through our Sunday schools into the church of the future. Children have gone through them who don't know the difference between John Wesley and John Knox—between a discipline and a confession of faith; don't know the warrant of their infant baptism; don't know a Scripture proof of the peculiar doctrines of our church; don't know the difference between a love-feast and a quarterly conference. What fruit shall we have of these? What moral revenue will they bring to the church which has the responsibility and opportunity of molding and shaping them? They are ready to be driven and drifted before any wind of doctrine. If Methodism is good for grown people, it is good for children of smaller growth. If we believe in it, and accept it as the purest and most efficient form of Christianity, then we owe it to our own convictions, and to the rising generation, to teach it to them, without adulteration, distinctly articulated, and well pronounced in its doctrines, ceremony and usages.

Let the Sunday school be kept close to the church, under its watchful eye, near its warm heart. Let the pastor of the parents remember that he is in charge of their children, and that Sunday schools may help, but cannot supersede him. Let him be seen moving often among them, thus giving aid and assurance of his interest. Bishop Andrew's last Sunday on earth saw him in the Sunday school. Among his last words to the preachers were these: "Take care of the children; look after the Sunday schools."

And this convention, though it has no legislative powers, may do much for securing these ends. To promote them is worth your meeting here, if nothing else is done. See to it that the intercourse between the pastor and the Sunday school superintendents, teachers and pupils be pleasant and profitable. See to it that no questions of official etiquette, no jealousy of jurisdiction interrupt this interconrse. Such questions and jealousies have, in a few cases, grown up; you can set them at rest. Your deliverances will go far to settle such questions, and thus open the way for the timid and over-sensitive to do their full duty, and leave delinquent pastors without excuse. And more: Though you cannot make laws, if any additional legislation on this point is necessary, your well considered recommendation will have great if not determining weight with that body which legislates.

And may the Shepherd and Bishop of souls guide you to pleasant counsels and to profitable conclusions.

TRUTHFULNESS.—Of all happy households, that is the happiest where falsehood is never thought of. All peace is broken up when once it appears there is a liar in the house. All comfort has gone when suspicion has once entered—when there must be reserve in talk and reservation in belief.

Anxious parents, who are aware of the pains of suspicion, will place general confidence in their children and receive what they say freely, unless there is strong reason to distrust the truth of any one. If such an occasion should unhappily arise, they must keep the suspicion from spreading as long as possible, and avoid disgracing their poor child while there is a chance of its cure by their confidential assistance. He should have their pity and assiduous help as if he were suffering under some bodily disorder. If he can be cured, he will become duly grateful for the treatment. If the endeavor fail, means must of course be taken to prevent his example from doing harm, and then, as I said, the family peace is broken up, because the family confidence is gone.

I fear that, for some cause or another, there are but few large families where every member is altogether truthful. But where all are so organized and so trained as to be wholly reliable in act and word, they are a light to all eyes and a joy to all hearts. They are public benefits, for they are a point of general reliance; and they are privately blessed within and without. Without, their life is made easy by universal trust, and within their home and their hearts they have the security of rectitude and the gladness of innocence.—Harriet Martineau.

THE Baltimore Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church met at Easton, Md., April 26, Bishop Wayman presiding. The transfer of the Rev. Dr. Revels (Senator) from the Tennessee Conference was announced. The Rev. W. H. G. Brown was reported deceased. The usual business was transacted in order and with expedition.

I would never desire a better proof of a false teacher than flattery. True meaning has no need to uphold itself by soothing.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

SECOND DAY.

FRIDAY, May 12, 1871.

The convention met at nine A. M., Mr. Foster in the chair. Religious services conducted by Rev. C. H. Hall. Bishop Paine then took the chair.

Upon motion a committee was appointed to digest the various discussions of the convention during its progress, and make a report at its final session, embodying the results of these deliberations in such form as to them shall seem best.

The regular subject for discussion, as per programme, The Importance of the Missionary Work in our Sabbath Schools, was now taken up, Rev. C. H. Hall opening the same with the reading of an essay thereon. In the first place he examined the importance of this work in relation to the spiritual development of our children. In the second place he noticed the more remote results of this missionary work among the young. We give the closing sentences of this masterly essay:

"But the result of all results in this connection is the truth that the children constituting the missionary society of the school may, in a few years of growth, become the church itself. The success of our church in the future depends upon the animus of its membership—their conception of duty to Christ and his cause, the breadth and liberality of their views, and the habits and devotion and consecration to the great work they shall have formed. The sacrament of this success lies now in our hands. The arrangements of Providence, by which generations overlap each other, places the fortunes of every age in the hands of its predecessor. This is seen in the advancement of civilization and the development of the sciences, where the young are enriched by the experience of the old, in diligently prosecuted systems of instruction. This is eminently true of all religious progress. Taking advantage of this, the church may not only perpetuate itself, which is the unambitious aim of too many; may not only enlarge its membership, which does not always bring with it increase of strength; may not only elevate its social standing and its intellectual attainments by the religious cultivation of its youth, but may also lay the sure foundation for the successful accomplishment of God's great plan of converting the world. Out of the infant church of to-day may grow the adult church of the next generation, in all its magnitude and grandeur; and the same missionary fire that now burns in the school, in many a flattering and flickering light, may burn with a holier and steadier flame upon the altar of the sanctuary. Within a few brief years, by means of this work in the Sabbath school, we may give a new and more glorious character to the missionary work of the whole church."

After the reading of the essay Dr. Haygood called the attention of the convention to the fact that the late General Conference had called upon Sunday schools to organize themselves into missionary societies.

Rev. J. E. Evans said if this great work was not carried forward among the children of the church they would have to meet the error when the children came to riper years.

At the suggestion of Bishop McTyeire the following questions were propounded in this connection:

1. Does the system of organizing the Sunday schools into missionary societies work successfully?

2. Can our child's paper contribute more to quicken the interest and guide the operations of Sunday schools in this important work?

3. Does the large amount contributed by the Sunday schools lessen the adult contribution?

4. In what manner do these societies operate?

The following resolution was also presented and adopted:

Resolved, That we cordially recommend the organization of missionary societies in all our Sunday schools, and that earnest efforts be made to interest and engage the children in the missionary work of the church wherever practicable.

The question as to the best manner of securing the attendance of Sunday school children at public worship was now resumed.

Dr. Abbey said that in securing the attendance of children upon public worship the co-operation of three parties had to be gained—parents, Sunday school officers and pastors. The pastors of churches were pastors of Sunday schools, for the Sunday school is a part of the church. It seemed to be generally taken for granted that one kind of preaching was needed for children, and another for grown people. Now four-fifths of the congregations to which sermons are preached rank with the children in intellectual capacity, and hence would be interested in plain, simple preaching, while the remainder could well afford to sit and listen to such preaching when it reached the hearts of so many people. He thought a great deal too much is directed to the supposed intelligence of the congregation. He thought something might be accomplished by a change of time, say to three o'clock in the afternoon.

Dr. Hamilton thought that, like Romanism, Protestantism had tacitly but consciously pandered to the convenience and laziness of its members in giving them all of the Sabbath to lounge and take their ease, if their seats were only filled at the eleven o'clock service. Everything must bow to this, the preaching hour. The hour, manner and arrangement of Sunday schools had to be adjusted to this. He suggested that the Sunday school might be held at half-past ten A. M., and, without any ceremony, the preacher might take his text at the appointed hour, in the presence of the children and congregation. This might be accomplished if there was not a dread of jostling the views of gentlemen of wealth in regard to the order and properties of worships. He thought much could be accomplished by plain preaching, and related an incident to show how it operated upon the hearts of the congregations. A clergyman, in the habit of writing fine sermons, had noticed that it produced but little visible effect upon his congregation. On considering the subject, he determined to deliver one plain, simple, practical sermon. When he had written it he called in his servant girl to get her opinion of it. She said: "Master, can't you place it a little more?" He tried it, submitted it to her again, and was met with the same request, which he complied with again and again, until she told him it would do, and then delivered it to his congregation, and was surprised to see many of them in tears. The nearer they came to the children the better preachers they would be, and the more demonstration of power would follow their ministry.

Dr. Green thought that the point could be gained by making the service attractive to the children. Give each child a little red hymn book, and let him sing, and he will soon be interested in the church service. "Be sure and let the hymn book be red."

In the evening the convention assembled at eight o'clock, W. H. Foster in the chair. Religious services were conducted by W. M. Rush. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. The president called for the experience of delegates in Sunday school matters upon which several related at length their Sunday school experience, giving to the whole a decided spiritual tone. Much feeling was manifested in the congregation as the spiritual life of those who now occupy prominent, responsible positions in the church of God was traced, step by step, back to the influence of the Sunday school whose lessons of love were written in indelible characters upon so many young hearts, now developed into full, ripe, spiritual manhood, and are still working their influence upon the hearts of those generations that are destined to take their place in the great work of the evangelization of the world.

A solemn stillness pervaded the house, and the Spirit of God seemed to be brooding over it.

At ten o'clock Dr. Young moved an adjournment, and the large congregation retired with the benediction by W. M. Rush.

THIRD DAY.—MORNING SESSION.

SATURDAY, May 13.

The convention met at nine o'clock, Bishop Keener in the chair. Religious exercises by Rev. Daniel Dorrean.

The minutes of the previous meeting read and approved. The reports of committees were called for.

R. N. Sledd offered the following:

Resolved, 1. That we regard the thorough instruction of our children essential to our permanent prosperity and success as a denomination.

2. That our church catechism, containing, as it does, the simplest and most concise statement of our doctrines, is the very best instrumentality that we can employ to attain this result, and we therefore earnestly insist on its use in all our schools.

3. That we respectfully recommend to our book agent to publish in connection with the catechism such a synopsis of the Book of Discipline as will give to our children correct ideas of our form of government.

This resolution was discussed at length, and adopted.

The convention then took up the subject of "The Proper Literature for the Sunday School."

Prof. Carlyle said that he had been startled by the question which he had seen stated in a Sunday school paper: "Is a library a ban or a blessing?" There was, it was true, some ground for that question. He did not propose to enter into that question; nor would he touch the question of publication, nor would he speak of [illegible] literature. But the question which he would take up would be, What books should be introduced into the Sunday school? Some must be. Some must not be. Some may or may not.

1. Those must be there that throw light on Scripture. The geography of the Bible had been too much neglected. Clear thoughts were gregarious, and a child who went over such names as Bethany, Jerusalem, etc., with but a vague idea of their position, would be apt to have cloudy views of repentance, life, death, resurrection and all the great doctrines of the Bible.

2. There must be there the lives of good men—such men as Samuel Dunwoddie, who perchance handled the bread of life with an ungraceful gesture. It has been said that the path of Bishop Asbury might be traced all through the Atlantic coast. The lives of such men produce a good influence on the minds of children.

3. Doctrinal works and hymn books must be there. Wesley's hymns are full of rich theology, and the church should be familiar with them.

Again: There are those that must not be there, as those which assail the vital truths of the Bible or the existence of God, and those which assail the purity of woman, the sacredness of home. None should be there that ridicule any of the institutions of the church; none that defend truth in an unchristian or bitter spirit. None of these should be introduced, though interleaved with bank notes.

But what books may be there?

1. Works of imagination—not coarse, gross, sensational; not filled with pictures that degrade the god-like frame of man; but those that, through the imagination, appealed to the higher spiritual nature. Works of science may be there, for they treat of the works of God. He concluded by calling down the benedictions of heaven upon the convention, and the cause of Christ at large.

After this address Dr. J. T. Wightman, of Charleston, illustrated in an eloquent lecture the symbolic representation of Scripture. He took for his text Hebrews xii, 22, 23, 24, and illustrated by a painting, about six feet long, the ideas involved in these verses. Mount Zion was represented by a pyramidal-shaped figure, in the center of which God was represented by an eye. Around the top of the figure, and above the eye, were stars "differing from one another in glory." Around the sides of the mount were the "spirits of just men made perfect," and in the midst of them was a cross representing Christ in the exercise of his mediatorial intercessory functions. Around the base of the mount flowed the dark river of death, separating all above from the church on earth, which was likewise represented by stars. The speaker elaborated all these points with taste, eloquence and exegetical skill.

After his lecture the congregation sang "Coronation" with enthusiasm; at the conclusion of which Dr. Kelley said he could not calmly listen to what he had just heard, and see what he had just seen—a Methodist congregation growing enthusiastic over that "be gum." He had claimed on the night before an increasing spiritual power for the Methodist Church, but he had lived longer than he had ever expected, to see such a scene as that which he had just witnessed, and in the name of the great Apostle he would protest against such a caricature of his grand spiritual conceptions to which they had just listened. He distinctly stated that for the speaker he had the highest respect and most profound esteem, but he directed his remarks against the degradation of spiritual ideas by the vain attempt to embody them in a material form. Like all the representations of Jesus Christ which he had seen in the grand art galleries of the world, it always tended to degrade the spiritual conception. Art had her place, and he was a worshiper at her shrine; but she deserves no place in God's house, and before God's altar, when she tears the diadem from the brow of Faith. Faith climbs to a sublimer height than can be ever reached with pencil and with chalk. God forbid that the greatness of the Methodist Church should take such a turn as this—to rake up from the dark ages such tendencies to materialize spiritual truth, against which her fathers so nobly contended. The speaker concluded by disclaiming any personal hard feelings, but thought Dr. Wightman was laboring under mistaken views.

Dr. Hamilton hoped that personalities, such as the speaker had indulged in, would not be any more tolerated.

Dr. Wightman explained his position further, and disclaimed any such intention which Dr. Kelley had charged upon him.

Dr. Green said that he thought both parties were laboring under a misapprehension as to the spirit of the speeches made. He thought Dr. Kelley had expressed his views somewhat too emphatically, but as that was his style he understood him perfectly. Dr. Maddin indorsed Dr. Kelley's views on the subject, and related his own experience. He had been brought up amid all the gorgeous paraphernalia of the Romish Church, and they had entwined themselves about his youthful heart until he almost worshiped the images continuously presented before his eyes. But when converted to God he had no more use for images and pictures; for, with the eye of faith, he was able to discern spiritual things.

After the subject had been further discussed, and explanations made, the convention, in all good humor, adjourned with the doxology and benediction.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The convention met, Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair, and religious exercises by Dr. Hamilton.

The minutes of the morning were read and approved.

Reports from Sunday schools were received, after which Dr. Haygood delivered an address on the Uses and Practicability of Uniform Lessons in the Sunday Schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He announced in this connection that about one-third of the Sunday school children of our church are now using the uniform lessons.

After the reading of the address the following resolutions were offered and referred to a committee, composed of Prof. Carlyle, W. H. Foster and Dr. Ahbey, to report on the same to the convention:

WHEREAS, The General Conference did, at its last session, order the publication of a Sunday School Teachers' Magazine, together with a system of uniform lessons; also a weekly edition of the Sunday School Visitor, with the Rev. A. G. Haygood, D. D., as editor; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That in the opinion of this convention the experience of the past year has proved the wisdom of this action.

2. The above Sunday school periodicals, together with Our Little People, contribute largely to the success of our Sunday school work.

3. That the Rev. A. G. Haygood is the right man in the right place.

4. We earnestly recommend to every Sunday school superintendent in our connection the adoption in their schools of the uniform lessons, and that they place in the hands of every teacher a copy of the Sunday School Teachers' Magazine, and in the hands of every pupil a copy of the Sunday School Visitor and Our Little People.

J. WICKERSHAM.
THOS. E. THOMPSON.

AT NIGHT

the children of the McKendree Sunday school met in the church for singing. The convention was present, and also a large audience. The children sang admirably, and their songs were interspersed by short, pungent speeches from Prof. Carlyle and Drs. Hall and Huston. The especial attraction of the evening was the solo, "He leadeth me," by Master Willis Sawrie, the whole school joining in the chorus; and the duet by Misses Sawrie and Morgan was pronounced by Mr. Magruder equal to, if not better than anything in that line that Baltimore could do. The congregation retired feeling well repaid for going.

The convention adjourned to Monday at nine o'clock A. M., with the doxology and benediction.

FOURTH DAY.

MONDAY, May 15.

The convention assembled promptly at the appointed hour. Religious services by Rev. Dr. Pierce.

A lengthy debate took place on the presentation of a series of resolutions respecting the proper authorities to appoint superintendents, but no action was taken on the subject. The resolutions were laid upon the table.

Rev. Dr. Huston then addressed the convention upon the Work of Grace in the Hearts of Children. He took the ground that a child had an ante-natal character impressed upon it by the blood of the parents. If the father and mother were holy persons, then that child would have an advantage over the child that was born of unholy parents. He concluded by saying that the kingdom of heaven is flexible enough to suit the wants and the condition of a child. In time of man's extremity there was God's opportunity, and he called fishermen to labor in his cause, and endowed them with power from on high; but God is not going to do for us what we can do for ourselves, and this religious education of our youth is now the basis of the future structure we are to build. If you wait till your child can articulate the name of mother and of father, you have waited too long. Let your first look be a look of love. Let your very voice be a gospel to your child. God never instituted a system of grace that is not flexible enough to take in every child, and in that innumerable company on high the treble voices of the children shall join with the grand bass of sages and seers to swell the glad hallelujahs of heaven

At the evening session the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That this convention recommend that our Sabbath school secretary prepare and publish, as early as possible, for the use of our Sabbath schools, a Sunday school scholar's certificate of admission; a Sunday school scholar's certificate of dismission; a Sunday school teacher's certificate of dismission; a Sunday school admission record book; a Sunday school minute record book; a teacher's class book; proper blanks for Sunday school statistics for reports to quarterly and Annual Conferences.

Resolved, 1. That the use of uniform lessons is not inconsistent with, nor does it supersede the necessity of the free use of the commentaries on the Bible or of question books to some extent.

2. That the learned, able and judicious commentaries on the gospels, by Dr. Thomas O. Summers, are highly appreciated by the members of this convention, and their use is earnestly recommended to all our Sabbath schools, as well as to the church generally.

Resolved, That we urge upon our pastors and people to abide faithfully by the direction of the Discipline concerning Sunday schools, namely: "Let Sunday schools be formed in all our congregations where ten children can be collected for that purpose."

Resolved, That the subject of the relation of baptized children to the church is one which does not come properly within the design of the call for this convention, and therefore it is inexpedient for us to give an expression of opinion concerning it.

A resolution was also adopted recommending, as suitable for our Sunday school libraries, the publication of biographies of the great men and women of our church, in a form adapted to the young.

Upon motion of Mr. Foster, of New Orleans, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, 1. That the Sunday school secretary be requested, in all the publications of text books for the schools, to have in view the idea of a regular systematic course of study.

2. That the secretary be requested, at the earliest period practicable, to have prepared and published, including the uniform series, a full and complete course of Sunday school text books, embracing:

1. A catechism for the infant class.

2. A catechism for the medium class.

3. A catechism on the history, polity and doctrines of our church, for the advanced class.

4. Text books on Bible history, biography, chronology, and prophecy and its fulfillments, and on church history.

The Amaranth received the cordial indorsement of the convention in a resolution to that effect.

From the report on Sunday school statistics the following extract will be found interesting:

Number of Sabbath schools, 6,048; number of officers and teachers, 42,558; number of officers and teachers under 15 years of age, 1-10; number of officers and teachers from 15 to 20 years of age, 2-10; number of officers and teachers from 20 to 30 years of age, 3-10; number of officers and teachers from 30 to 60 years of age, 3-10; number of officers and teachers over 60 years of age, 1-10; number of officers and teachers members of the church, ¾; number of officers and teachers converted through the influence of the Sunday school, 15,120; number of scholars on the roll book, average 46½ to each Sunday school, 281,022; number of scholars in actual attendance, 80 per cent., 224,817; number of scholars in average attendance, 72 per cent., 202,336; number of scholars under 5 years of age, average 4 to each Sunday school, 24,093; number of scholars from 5 to 10 years of age, average 14 to each Sunday school, 83,672; number of scholars from 15 to 20 years of age, average 16 to each Sunday school, 95,768; number of scholars from 15 to 20 years of age, average 10 to each Sunday school, 60,380; number of scholars over 20 years of age, average 3 to each Sunday school, 18,110; number of scholars members of the church, 39,312; number of scholars converted through the influence of the Sunday school, 35,240; number of scholars converted last year, 18,144; number of scholars connected with the Sunday school missionary society, 72,576; number of volumes of books in library—the 65 schools reported, 23,548; number of books in the library of our church publications—the 65 schools reported, 4,023, or 17 per cent.; number of copies of Sunday School Magazine taken, 10,300; number of copies of the Visitor taken, 49,500; number of copies of Our Little People taken, 32,000; number of copies of other papers taken, 40 per cent.; amount of moneys raised for the schools—the schools reported show $2,955.88, average $45.47; amount of moneys raised for other schools—one school reported $40; amount of money raised for missions, —; number of members of the church, 567,038.

A report from the Committee on Attendance of Sunday School Children on Public Worship was next read and adopted. After stating the difficulties of securing the attendance of children at public worship, the report goes on to say:

The solution of the problem seems to be this: Strengthen authority where it can be strengthened; at the same time add to your motives.

1. Begin with the pastor.

1. Let him know the children; 2, love them; 3, beget their love; 4, visit them in the Sunday school; 5, invite them to attend public service repeatedly—never let them forget that this is expected of them; 6, let him remember them, while preaching, as the lambs of the fold whom he should feed, and adapt, as far as possible, his teaching to their comprehension, and elicit their interest in it.

In some instances this will be found extremely difficult on account of constitutional unfitness in the minister; but it is indispensable that these disqualifications be removed from our ministry to as great degree as possible, remembering the Saviour's commission to Peter to feed the lambs, and recognizing the ministry as divinely appointed to do this work. Every attraction thus offered to the children of the church will encourage the efforts of parents, and supplement defective authority on their part.

In the meantime let the parents be taught from the pulpit, and in pastoral visiting, that God, according to the teachings of his word, and the church, according to the declarations of its Discipline all parents are held solemnly bound to bring their children to the house of God, to join in the public worship of the people; and that all parents be exhorted to do the same.

Let the Sabbath school be so dismissed that the children may be taken by their teachers into the church for worship, where there is church accommodation for that purpose; and where there is not, let the officers of the school complain to the quarterly conference that the trustees have failed to furnish a place in the house of God whereby the children may join in the worship; a complaint looking to church extension, a failure to supply which should be accounted a great fault.

After sundry resolutions of thanks, and some general remarks by Bishop Kavanaugh, a motion to adjourn sine die prevailed. The closing prayer was offered up by Bishop Keener, and the benediction was pronounced by Bishop McTyeire.

NASHVILLE, TENN., May 16, 1871.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

HON. BENJAMIN W. PEARCE.

Died, at his residence in Sparta, Bienville parish, Louisiana, on the ninth of October, 1870, Ex-Lieutenant Governor Benjamin W. Pearce.

Mr. Pearce was born in the State of Georgia; removed thence in early life to Alabama, where he was chiefly reared and educated, and married on the twenty-first of July, 1842. Soon after taking upon himself the cares of a family he emigrated to Arkansas, and settled in the southern part of that State, where he devoted himself to planting, though he had been educated for the bar. But possessed of many of the mental and moral elements of true greatness, and, to a large extent, of many of the genial qualities of head and heart which usually captivate the multitude, Bro. Pearce was not destined to pass his life in the pleasing but secluded duties of agriculture. We find him returned at an early day to the Legislature of his adopted State, as a member of that body, by the electors of his county. Here he spent the succeeding five or six years of his life, a constant and useful member of the legislative body, filling with acceptability his post of honor and trust. But the nature of his public duties, the habitudes of the country in which he lived, the characteristics of the population—some or all of these considerations proving uncongenial to his cast of mind, inclined him to seek a new residence, and we find that about fifteen or twenty years ago he located himself permanently at the place of his last residence, in Bienville parish, Louisiana.

Bro. Pearce had not long been a resident of this section before his talents and sterling qualities were ascertained, and he was elected a member of the Louisiana Senate, which post he filled until the opening of the war in 1861, laboring acceptably and usefully for his section and for the advancement of his State. When the unhappy dissensions of our country culminated in open hostilities he was one of the first to espouse his country's cause, and repaired to the seat of war in command of a company composed of the flower of his parish. From this stage of action he was soon recalled, however, to fill the high and honorable position of lieutenant governor of the State, the functions of which he was discharging at the close of the civil strife. This ended his political career. He subsequently devoted himself to the practice of the law, and had the promise of a brilliant future before him, when he was unexpectedly and suddenly cut down by the Reaper in the prime of his life and usefulness.

Bro. Pearce was early trained in the school of Christianity by his pious mother, who still toils on the shores of time, bending beneath the weight of years, but yet cheered by the hope of being reunited with her honored son in the land of eternal bliss. From her he imbibed the love of the religion of our blessed Saviour which always distinguished him in every vicissitude of life, and of which he was the early, the constant and the efficient advocate. From his earliest manhood he was a Christian, and ever filled some official position in the church.

Bro. Pearce has left behind him his beloved companion and five dear children to mourn their irreparable loss. But they mourn not without hope.—Their loss is his gain. In all the relations of life—as son, husband, father, patriot and Christian—his character stood pre-eminent. Blessed be his memory, and peace to his ashes.

R. M. CROWSON.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Cumberland Presbyterian, of Alton, Illinois, counts from the records of its own columns two thousand and seventy-eight additions to the church by profession of faith during the first three months of this year.

JEWS.—The secretary of the Universal Israelite Alliance, at Paris, has issued a circular, announcing that the operations of the society have not been suspended by the war, although its resources have been greatly impaired. The Agricultural School at Jaffa, Palestine, has progressed finely under M. Netter's administration, and the Normal School at Paris has held its sessions regularly, notwithstanding the siege.

BALTIMORE CHURCH STATISTICS.—The church statistics of the leading denominations in Baltimore, as reported in the ninth census, are as follows:

	Church sittings.	Value.
Baptist	3,600	$40,000
Methodist Episcopal	26,020	1,214,900
Methodist E., South	5,000	130,000
Methodist E., African	6,600	113,600
Methodist Protestant	4,600	157,600
Methodist Independent	1,300	55,000
Presbyterian	14,275	983,000
Protestant Episcopal	14,050	898,000
Roman Catholic	25,000	2,080,000
Total	100,445	$5,672,100

The total of Methodist Church sittings is 43,520; that of the Roman Catholics about one-fourth of all.

THE reported gains of the Baptist denomination for 1870 are 2,602 churches, 2,031 ministers, 7,623 baptisms, and 198,144 members. The large gain of members over baptisms is owing to the fact that many associations have reported for 1870 which did not report for 1869. Maine falls back a little in its figures, as it did in 1868 and 1869. Nebraska has increased her 756 Baptists to 1,000, and also reports 7 new churches. New York State is not doing well. Her net gain in members is only 114, while the number of her churches has retrograded from 842 to 839. The three States having the largest number of Baptists are Georgia, with 134,337; Virginia, with 122,120; and New York, with 100,616.

ROMANISTS IN PHILADELPHIA.—The Presbyterian shows that during the last sixty years the ratio of increase among the Roman Catholics in that city has been no greater than among the Protestants. In 1811 there were 44 churches in that city, of which the Romanists claim four or one-eleventh. In 1871 there are 429 churches in the city, of which thirty-eight, or not quite one-eleventh, are Roman Catholic. On the other hand, the Episcopalians, who in 1811 had one-ninth, now have more than one-sixth; and the Presbyterians, who in 1811 had less than one-seventh, now have nearly one-fourth. The Lutherans from 4 in 1811 to 26 in 1871. The Baptists from 6 to 44. The Methodists have some 70 churches. Thus at least two Protestant denominations have outstripped Rome in their growth during the past sixty years.

MISSIONS OF THE M. E. CHURCH.—We commenced the year 1871 in our foreign missions with a force of 367 laborers, including missionaries, assistant missionaries and helpers; 12,353 members; 3,387 probationers or candidates for admission into the full communion of the church; 4,078 in the day schools, and 5,323 Sunday school scholars. Foreign populations at home, namely, Welsh, German, Scandinavian and Chinese, 161 missionaries, and among the Indians eight missionaries. Missionaries in territories, or regions of country beyond or without the bounds of any Conference, 9. Domestic missions proper, or those within the bounds of sixty-five Conferences, so far as we could ascertain them, 1,812, or nearly, if not quite, one-quarter of the whole number of the effective preachers in the entire home work.—Western Christian Advocate.

THE New York Observer says: "One of the enterprises proposed for the memorial year of the Presbyterian Church was the erection of a Presbyterian house in this city for the accommodation of the Boards of the Church located here, and designed to be a center of Presbyterian operations. Arrangements are now nearly completed for the purchase of the lots and buildings, situated on the northeast corner of University Place and Ninth streets, which is regarded as a very desirable location. They can be purchased for the sum of $90,000, and it is proposed to expend $5,000 or $10,000 in remodeling them for the uses designed, the title of the property to be vested in the Presbytery of New York, which will have the charge of it. The money for the purchase will probably be raised in this city, while the practical use of the building will be for the church at large."

SENOR CARRERA has overflowing congregations at his Protestant service in Seville, Spain. We are glad to learn that for some $8,000 the stately and spacious Church of San Francisco de Paula has been bought for it. By this time the needed alterations must be finished, and the building, with all its splendid attractions, made helpful to the new era of religious life in Spain. At the training school in this city twelve young men are already in preparation for that native Protestant ministry which is to come in place of the effete priesthood; and there is prospect of an early increase to that number. At Cadiz the pastor of the young church, Senor Hernandez, is an earnest, enthusiastic man, and has gathered a noble congregation. At one of his recent services "three Romish priests were present; not as spies, I believe, but inquirers." But yet the bitterest hatred is constantly shown by the old party to every effort in preaching Christ and him crucified—the one Mediator.—Independent.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.—We learn from the Herald that the Moravian missionary ship Harmony—the ninth vessel of the same name—returned lately in safety from the one hundred and first annual voyage to the coast of Labrador. Though the reports she brings of the missions are not without some discouraging things, they are on the whole favorable. Certainly the indomitable energy, under sharp trials often, and difficulties manifold, which the United Brethren have shown not only in planting the cross in the most inhospitable and forbidding climes, but in maintaining it there with the tenacity growing out of a faith and zeal that know no faltering and prayer that overcomes by wrestling, is an exhibition of missionary earnestness and devotion worthy to be proposed as an example to the whole church. The Moravians have 89 stations in all, 313 missionary agents, 1,041 native assistants and overseers, 20,571 communicants, 23,288 baptized children.—Interior.

THE AMERICAN BOARD.—What has God Wrought?—In 1810 the American Board was organized. It commenced with $1,000, since which it has raised more than half a million in a single year. Dr. Anderson, who was its secretary for many years, says: "I myself well remember when there was no missionary in Turkey; when missionaries were debarred from the greater part of India; when none were in Burmah, none in China, none in the Indian Archipelago; when there were none in Africa, excepting Sierra Leone and the southern extremity of the continent, and none in the great island-world of the Pacific ocean, except some small groups in the South." The board now reports—not including the missions transferred to the United Presbyterian Board—as follows: "The whole number of laborers connected with their missions, 1,372, of whom there are native pastors, 118, native preachers and catechists, 315, school teachers, 400, other native helpers, 208; whole number of native helpers, 1,041, leaving but 331 laborers sent from this country."

ANOTHER LETTER OF MR. WESLEY.

The following has recently appeared in England. It was written to Mrs. James Freeman, of Lisburn:

ABERDEEN, May 26, 1763.

My dear Sister: If you are likely to fall into a consumption, I believe nothing will save your life but the living two or three months upon buttermilk churned daily in a bottle. Change of air may do something, if you add riding every day; else it will avail but little.

Your conscience will not be clear unless you find fault wherever occasion requires. Then shalt in anywise rebuke thy brother, and not suffer sin upon him. Regard none who speak otherwise. You have but one rule—the oracles of God. His Spirit will always guide you according to his word. Keep close to him, and pray for, dear Jenny,

Your affectionate brother,

J. WESLEY.

THE BISHOPS' DEFICIT.

The statement of the book agent, which appears in this issue of our paper, will, we hope, stimulate our preachers to attend promptly to the stated collection for the Bishops' fund, and also lead our congregations to increased liberality in meeting the demand.

We know that it is disagreeable to the Bishops to have the matter paraded often before the public, and there should be no occasion for it. The preachers, by presenting the claim once a year, and explaining the importance and the justice of the appeal, can easily obtain all that is required, and the more quietly it is done, the better. A plan most agreeable to the feelings of all concerned would be to enter the amount apportioned to each charge in the estimates of the stewards, and provide for it in the same way that they do for the support of the pastors and presiding elders. But where this is impracticable, and the amount is not likely to be realized in this way, let the preachers or presiding elders charge themselves with the duty. In some Conferences the presiding elders are required to make the collection; in others, as in Louisiana, the preachers in charge have it to do. The Bishops are placed at a disadvantage by the fact that they seldom come in personal and social contact with the great body of the people. This they cannot help, but their ministrations are, nevertheless, laborious, and vital to the general prosperity of the church. Many a Bishop has spent anxious hours, and prayerful, over the interests of an appointment whose members have never seen him. The care of all the churches, the weakest and most remote, comes upon him sooner or later, and his administration touches every point in some way. No class of preachers work harder, and it should be the care and pride of the connection that they be well supported.

THE FALL OF THE COMMUNE.

The latest intelligence, as found in our news columns on the first page, announces the overthrow of this organization. Its persistent and bloody resistance to the Assembly indicates the existence of a formidable party of the most ultra and desperate school of political opinions. Marshal McMahon and his veterans have overcome this formidable mob for the present, and the Assembly must now enter upon the difficult work of reconstruction. They must shortly determine a form of government for France, and in doing so will meet with new complications. Marshal McMahon occupies a position of great influence, and he is said not to be an imperialist. Neither he nor Thiers is friendly to Napoleon, and if a republic be found impracticable some member of the Orleans family will probably become the successful candidate for the throne.

THERE are to-day many mourning Christians in the world who are perpetually wishing themselves in heaven, while they ought to thank God that they are still on earth, where they can work for him.

ALL our purposes should be formed in subordination to Divine Providence.

THE GREAT NECESSITY.

The necessity of a change of heart cannot be abated in the smallest degree. It is the paramount requirement of the word of God, and distinguishes the precious from the vile, the spiritual from the natural man. It is something marvelous, transcending all understanding, and yet so obviously necessary as not to be marveled at. No manifestations of natural goodness and no aspects of moral conduct can be permitted to set it aside. Neither does any connection with the outward ordinances suspend the demand. All are presumed to be in a state of guilt and condemnation, and to possess the carnal mind, until a felt and mighty transformation takes place within. The necessity lies in the supernatural and the wonderful, because nothing less can overcome the enmity and the blindness of the natural man. Only the Divine Spirit acting incomprehensively can bring a clean thing out of an unclean. Nothing but a new creature avails anything. Until this experience takes place there is no apprehension of spiritual things. Views of doctrine are obscure, and the perception of duty is imperfect and perverted. The unconverted church member does not comprehend the disciplining rules which forbid certain diversions as tending to evil; neither does he see the reasonableness of so much watchfulness and prayer.

Warnings against the worldly spirit and the love of the world are beyond the appreciation of those who know nothing of communion with God. Religion without regeneration is indeed a wayward and dangerous thing, inasmuch as it may put the conscience to rest without saving the soul. The things of the Spirit are spiritually discerned, and the kingdom can neither be seen nor entered until the birth from above takes place. Whether appertaining to doctrine or experience, to principles or to practice, the natural man looks upon the things of the Spirit as foolishness, and because all spiritual discernment is wanting. The blindness of the unbelieving heart is so absolute that all sense of spiritual objects is lost. These objects in God or his holy creatures are not truly perceived until the eyes are opened by the Holy Spirit. The office of the gospel to sinners is emphatically "to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." Christ's counsel to the backslider is to "anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayst see." Christians are described as "filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding," and "the eyes of your understanding being enlightened." The strait gate of faith, leading to the regeneration of the soul, is the only entrance to to the kingdom of God, and the essential qualification for a true apprehension of its doctrines and precepts.

The attempt of the carnal mind, though invested with the form of godliness, to expound these matters is as absurd as for a blind man to talk of colors, or for a deaf man to expatiate on the phenomena of sound. And yet this is what worldly people are doing continually—endeavoring to interpret the oracles of God for the church, and seeking to impose their interpretations of spiritual truths upon its practical life. It is not conceivable that a converted man should argue for theaters or dancing. One of shallow moral and religious convictions might; but the purer feelings of a child of God would revolt at the bare suggestion of an attempt to vindicate them upon Christian grounds. There are reasons against them which are calculated to impress the unregenerate mind to some extent; but their unfriendliness to a life of faith and divine communion reaches only those who have set their affections on things above. To expect that the unconverted, in or out of the church, will ever look upon these forbidden diversions as they are regarded by the spiritually-minded is utterly without foundation. The conflict will go on while there are sinners on the earth, and while there are in the church those who know and care nothing for holiness of heart. Argument and discipline will tell somewhat upon public opinion, and will throw helpful restraints around the weak and unspiritual professors; but the great necessity is the birth of the Spirit. This will cure the most inveterate cases of worldliness, and silence the most wordy advocates of sin disguised in the garments of social pleasure.

The only way for the church to relieve herself of those who bring reproach upon the cause is to turn them out or get them converted. Those that are without will be of a better mind when the power of the gospel reaches their hearts. We can well believe the declaration of many amiable people who affirm that they see no harm in the elegant dissipations of the opera and the ball room, nor will they see the harm until the eye-salve of converting grace is applied. Conformity to the world will appear right enough until they are transformed by the renewing of their minds, that they may "prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." The carnal mind, though invested with a decent morality and with a respectable religious profession, is enmity against God; and the natural man, even when decked in sacramental robes, cannot understand "the things of the Spirit." False teachings from the pulpit and the press, and scandalous practice on the part of those who claim to be under the guidance of divine truth, are due to this cause. Mere instruction and sound precepts will not reach the evil in the young. They will leave the church, or seek a fold that tolerates forbidden pleasures, or they will abuse the sufferance which lets them alone where they are. The testimony of the classics, the deliverances of venerable councils, assemblies and conferences, and the fatherly advice of bishops and pastors, will fail to convince. The scales will fall from their eyes only when God opens them to a new and spiritual life. They must be born again. Get them converted and there is hope for them; get them out of darkness into the light of the Holy Spirit, and they will then comprehend "that the friendship of the world is enmity with God." The message for the frivolous and superficial in the church, and for all those who are the advocates of the proscribed diversions, is emphatically, and first and last: "Ye must be born again."

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

The following communication is from a gentleman whose views are always worthy of consideration. The suggestions of our correspondent, we hope, may lead to the accomplishment of the plan of endowment stated.

AN IMPORTANT MOVEMENT IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION.

Mr. Editor: Dr. Lewis G. Perkins, an eminent physician of East Feliciana, and a graduate of Centenary College, proposes that the alumni of the college should endow a professorship therein.

We consider this an important suggestion. The alumni at present number over one hundred, and a moderate sum from each would amply endow a chair. We earnestly hope that others will co-operate with the doctor in this important movement, giving it a bodily shape; and let it be called the Chair of the Alumni, in honor of the worthy gentlemen who have already reflected so much credit upon the institution, and not the least in the movement about to be inaugurated.

ACTION OF THE BOOK COMMITTEE.

The following resolutions were passed by the Book Committee at its recent meeting at Nashville:

Resolved, That the report presented by the book agent to this meeting of the committee gives a highly gratifying account of the affairs of the Publishing House, and shows it to be in a prosperous condition, and conducted on a safe financial basis.

Resolved, That Dr. Redford's administration of the affairs of the Publishing House meets the unqualified approval of the committee, and entitles him to the confidence and combined support of the church.

NOTHING is more contrary to the spirit of charity than rash and hasty censures.

THE SUPPORT OF OUR BISHOPS.

The liberality of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, during the past few years, finds scarcely a parallel anywhere. A few years ago our Publishing House was prostrate, our missionary treasury bankrupt, and all our financial interest in ruins. A very short space of time has elapsed, and the credit of the Publishing House is fully restored; and the debt that has for so long rested like a mountain of lead upon our missionary treasury is melting rapidly away.

With the embarrassments under which the church was labering, a question of no ordinary importance presented itself to the liberal-minded membership as to the best method of supporting our Bishops. In the Northern Methodist Church the Bishops draw their salaries quarterly from the Book Concern, but the adoption of a similar policy was impracticable with us. After mature thought, the only method that suggested itself was that their support, like that of other ministers, should come from the church. The amount necessary to support them was fixed by the General Conference, and divided out among the several Annual Conferences, and then subdivided among the several circuits and stations. This method, so judicious and surrounded by no difficulties whatever, ought to have secured the entire amount necessary for their support. The exhibit, however, of all the receipts and disbursements during the four years preceding the late General Conference showed a deficiency that was exceedingly oppressive to the Bishops, as well as humiliating to the church.

Entering upon a new era, and all the machinery of the church properly at work, it was hoped that the amounts allowed for their support by the late General Conference, and divided among the several Annual Conferences, would be fully met. The settlement we have just made shows a deficiency of $4,471.73, which, when divided among the Bishops, falls very heavy on each.

Six Conferences in the connection have paid above the amount required of them the following sums: The South Carolina, $287; the Florida, $8.55; the Alabama, $352.60; the North Mississippi, $163; the Texas, $31.50; and the West Texas, $2.

Of the remaining Conferences the following have met their assessments in full: The Little Rock, White River, East Texas, Northwest Texas, and the Pacific.

Twenty-three Conferences have failed to collect the amounts apportioned to them, namely: Baltimore, Virginia, Western Virginia, North Carolina, North Georgia, South Georgia, North Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, Memphis, Tennessee, Holston, Kentucky, Louisville, St Louis, Missouri, Western Arkansas, Indian Mission Territory, Columbia, Los Angeles and Illinois. Of these Conferences the greatest deficiency occurs in the North Georgia and Memphis, and the smallest in the Holston and Arkansas. The deficiency, however, is large in the Virginia, North Carolina, South Georgia, North Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, Louisville, St. Louis, Missouri and Baltimore.

The failure to collect the salary of the Bishops is mainly attributable to the presiding elders to whom the General Conference intrusted this duty. I therefore appeal to them, at this early day, previous to the annual sessions of the Conferences, to either collect in person the amounts apportioned to their several districts, or see that the amounts are collected by the preacher in charge, so that there will be no deficiency hereafter.

Nor is it proper that the deficiency of the current year should be left unpaid. In addition, therefore, to the amounts necessary for the ensuing year, we earnestly request the presiding elders everywhere to make an extra effort to meet the present deficiency. If you will add twenty per cent. to your collections for this year it will meet the deficiency.

All money collected for this purpose may be sent to me.

A. H. REDFORD, Agent.

Organization of the M. E. Church South.

The Bishops have placed this excellent work in the first year's course of study of candidates for orders. They have done well in so doing; for every minister—and, for that matter, everybody else—ought to be acquainted with the causes which led to the organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The candidates will not be examined in this work at the next Annual Conference sessions, but we advise them to get the book and give it a careful perusal. It will furnish them with weapons with which they can defend the church from all the aspersions of its enemies.

IT IS much better to decide a difference between enemies than friends; for one of our friends will certainly become an enemy, and one of our enemies a friend.

FROM CHINA.

MR. EDITOR: I send you an account of what funds I have received for schools, etc., and how used. If you think best, I would like to have it published, that our good people at home may see what we are doing. You can abbreviate these accounts a great deal by throwing them together, or, if you think best, leave them as they are. Our heart's desire and prayer to God is for the conversion of China. We labor for this, and we trust we may yet see good resulting from all our labors. I trust you will have what I send published for the benefit of all who take an interest in the work of the Lord among the heathen. I see our beloved secretary, Dr. McFerrin, is calling earnestly for help. He is doing a noble work. I send you some notes of the latest news from Peking. You will see what the heathen are determined to do if they can. Do not fear for us, for we are safe in the hands of a loving God. Pray for us and for the work in which we are engaged. I remain your brother in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

IMPORTANT NEWS FROM THE NORTH.

We have received from Peking and Tientsin advices of such importance that we shall give them almost without comment, hoping to return to the subject soon. We shall merely premise that our sources of information are so varied and so reliable, and they agree so well in their main statements, that the result of their communications, which we have run together into an epistolary, may be received as quite authentic:

At the date of my last note the Peking cabinet were said to be busily occupied in the consideration of certain propositions relative to the operations of missionaries, etc., which, if adopted, might prevent all Yangchow riots and Tientsin massacres for the future. The result of these deliberations has been the presentation, it is said, of two memoranda, viz: to the French (Romish) and to the other ministers severally. Of the dispatch of the Tsungli yamen relating to Romish missions, I only know that it forbids orphanages and foundling hospitals, demands the deportation of the Sœurs de Charite, and the cessation of the special official powers assumed by the priests; but doubtless its character as a whole may be fairly judged by the companion document which deals with the work of Protestant organizations. I must premise by cautioning you that I do not pretend to give you a full and accurate, much less orderly or verbatim, statement. My authority is unquestionable, but I have neither seen a copy of the dispatch, nor do we know the exact form it assumes. I hear, however, that it has been replied to already by the United States minister, Mr. Low, and presumably by others. It is also reported that the whole was forwarded by the various legations to their respective governments three weeks ago. It seems, however, to have only just become generally known.

These are the points:

That in future no communities shall be mulcted for injuries to missions; only the villains who strike the blow shall be punished. That there shall be no compensation for confiscated property, or for destroyed buildings, lost furniture, etc.

That all foreign ladies shall be sent home, such teachers being injurious to the peace and retirement of Chinese female society; and no native women shall be allowed to attend meetings for worship.

That missionaries in the interior or elsewhere shall have no ex-territorial privileges, but when summoned to the yamens, or having occasion to seek official aid, shall present themselves as a native would have to do (prostrate, etc.,) and shall in all respects conform to native custom.

That if a missionary take up the cause of a Christian convert who is proceeded against at law, the Christian shall be at once punished as guilty on account of such interference.

That all mission establishments shall be under supervision by officers appointed for the purpose, and that no foundling hospitals or girls' schools shall be allowed.

That no heathen children shall attend mission schools.

That a public registration office shall be established, in which all baptisms shall be noted, and the history, residence and condition of the applicants recorded. And that no missionary shall receive more than forty-five converts!

The much-lauded Wen-siang said to have had a main hand this precious document, I say no more. It strikes me deluge is not far away now. what are we to think of the di macy which could make the sentation of such a dispatch pos

Annual Meeting of the Board of Missions.

The first annual meeting of the Board of Missions since the consolidation of the two boards, foreign and domestic, was held in the mission rooms, May 9 and 10, 1871. All the members of the board, including the Bishops, were present, except Bishop Early, Dr. N. H. Lee, Dr. Alexander and T. J. Magruder, Esq. The meeting was one of interest. The work of the past year was reviewed, and plans for its enlargement in the future were matured. A full report will be furnished by the secretary in a short time. In the meanwhile it may be proper to say:

1. That provisions for the payment of the old debt, as assessed to the different Conferences, have been nearly completed. Three Annual Conferences only yet remain to take action on the question. When the matter is submitted to these, the work will be finished, nothing remaining to be done only to receive and pay out the amounts.

2. The appropriations for the ensuing year, beginning with the meetings of the Conferences, are as follows:

For China Mission	$10,000
For the Indian Mission Conference	12,500
For the German work in the city of Baltimore and vicinity, supplementary to what had already been appropriated by Annual Conference Boards	500
For the German work in Louisiana	1,000
For the German work in Texas	3,000
For missions in the Los Angeles Conference	1,500
For missions in the Columbia Conference	1,000
For missions in the Western Conference	5,000
For missions in West Virginia Conference	300
For missions in Holston Conference	200
To aid in publishing a German hymn book	500
Total	$35,500

To this must be added the current expenses, embracing salary and traveling expenses of the secretary, and printing reports, etc., which will swell the amount to at least $40,000. It will be remembered that this sum is to be added to what is to be appropriated to domestic missions by the various Annual Conference Boards, which will swell the amount to about $130,000.

Now let our brethren know that between this and the close of the Bishops' rounds of holding the Annual Conferences they must raise at least $130,000 for missionary purposes. This, to be sure, is no great amount, but it will require effort to collect it in due time. Other important interests will appear in a subsequent communication from the secretary.

The following resolutions were adopted, viz:

Resolved, That Bishop Pierce be respectfully requested to furnish for publication a copy of his discourse, preached on Sunday, the seventh of May, 1871, in memory of our late senior superintendent, Bishop James O. Andrew, D. D.

Resolved, That the board has no power to remit the forty per cent. due by any Annual Conference.

Resolved, That the amounts appropriated to the respective Annual Conference Boards, for the ensuing year, be paid on drafts drawn by the presidents of the several Annual Conferences, payable at three, six, nine and twelve months from the time of the meeting of the Conferences. J. B. McFerrin, Sec.

Death of a Distinguished Gentleman.—We have to announce, says the Picayune, the death of Colonel Charles S. Todd, of Kentucky. He came to his end at eleven o'clock on Wednesday night, after several weeks of illness, at the residence of his granddaughter, the wife of Judge Posey, of Baton Rouge.

Colonel Todd was a native of Kentucky, born January, 1791, received a legal education at Litchfield, Connecticut, and became the son-in-law of Isaac Shelby, first Governor of Kentucky. He was a gallant soldier, serving as aid-de-camp to General Harrison, and on the election of Harrison to the presidential chair was constituted envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Russia, which appointment he continued to hold under Tyler's administration. He was one of the early projectors of the Southern Pacific railroad.

SOUTHERN REVIEW.

Several weeks ago we announced through the church papers that the Southern Review would be published at Nashville, beginning with the July number.

A change of the conditions on which we consented to become the publisher having rendered it impracticable for us to assume this responsibility, we take this method of informing all whom it may concern that the Review will not be published here.

We take pleasure, however, in announcing that an arrangement has been made between the Rev. Dr. Poisal, the former publisher, and Logan D. Dameron, the president of the Southwestern Book and Publishing Company, of St. Louis, Missouri, for the publication of the Review. It will hereafter be issued from St. Louis. We are gratified at this arrangement, and hope the church will rally to its support with an energy and unanimity equal to the merits of this ably conducted periodical.

Obituaries.

Died, March 14, 1871, Maurice, infant son of Rev. M. T. and Mary Leach, of Pittsburg, Texas, aged two months and fifteen days. W. C. C.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hunter Cotton died at the residence of her son-in-law, Rev. J. A. B. Jones, in Port Gibson, Mississippi, April 14, 1871, in the seventy-third year of her age.

She had long been a most worthy and faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and a sketch of her exemplary life and triumphant death ought to be published for the instruction and encouragement of living Christians. Her maiden name was Harris. She was born in Halifax county, North Carolina, August 28, 1798, and married Major Joseph Cotton, a young gentleman of cultivated mind and promising fortune, in the same county, October 19, 1813. Some time after their marriage Major Cotton moved to Jackson's Purchase, in west Tennessee, and settled as a planter near Memphis. Up to this date neither of them had made any public profession of religion; and though Mrs. Cotton had been often and deeply impressed with the importance of securing a personal interest in Christ, she kept her feelings to herself, supposing, from the gayety and apparent worldly-mindedness of her husband, that he would be opposed to her forming any connection with the church. But in this she was mistaken; for when she could no longer neglect what seemed to be so important to her safety and final salvation, she made known her wishes to her husband, who not only consented for her to do what she thought was right in the premises, but ever afterward made the most ample provision for her to enjoy all the public means of grace within her reach. Noble man that he was! Though not a professed Christian himself, he seemed to glory in having a Christian wife. In the early struggles of Methodism in west Tennessee, when Memphis was yet a small village included in a large circuit, Mrs. Cotton publicly united with the church, and ever afterward remained a prominent, exemplary and useful member thereof.

Several things in her Christian experience and practice are noteworthy. She deprecated, above all things, the idea of being misled about her spiritual condition. She felt the danger of taking the shadow for the substance. She prayed to be truly converted, and to know that she was converted; and she never ceased to seek a knowledge of salvation by the remission of sins, with ceaseless prayers and penitential tears, until she felt assured of her adoption into the household of faith. She placed a very high estimate upon all the public means of grace, especially the preaching of the gospel, and she not only felt it to be an imperious duty, but also a great privilege to wait upon God in the congregation of his people. There was a large amount of wealth in the family until it was finally swept away by the war, and she was remarkably conscientious in casting what she considered her dues into the treasury of the Lord. It was never necessary for church stewards to assess her quota and enforce its payment. She delighted to bring her offerings voluntarily to the temple and lay them upon the altar. The quarterly fasts of the church were most rigidly observed by her, even in the extreme feebleness of old age. In her closet, as Bishop Asbury used to say, she prayed at full length, and delighted greatly in private communion with God. In one thing she excelled the great majority of devout men and women, and that was, conversing with all she had any intercourse with on the subject of religion. She not only felt this to be her duty, but her love for blood-bought souls prompted her to embrace every opportunity to do good in this way, and she had by constant practice acquired such a talent for it, and withal did it so lovingly, that she often held stubborn sinners enchained, where even ministers of the gospel would have been repulsed.

In the days of her worldly abundance she was often known, when seeing her friends coming along in the distance, to order her driver to rein up his horses, that she might have the opportunity to invite them to church, to send their children to the Sabbath school, or to say a few appropriate words to them about their spiritual interests. Her husband died in Christian hope about the time the family were in the act of moving to East Baton Rouge, Louisiana, where Sister Cotton resided until after the marriage of her youngest daughter to Rev. J. A. B. Jones; thereafter she generally resided in his family. For a year or so previous to her death—because of "age and feebleness extreme"—she was confined to her home, and her greatest grief seemed to be that she was deprived of the social and congregational meetings of the church. The last six weeks of her long and successful pilgrimage she was confined to her room and bed. She evidently died more from the natural effects of rather premature old age than from disease. Her gradual descent to the tomb was truly Christian-like and triumphant. I shall thank God forever that so many of my family were permitted to be with her, day and night, to hear her gracious words of cheer and to witness her heavenly retirement from the scenes and sorrows of earth. We can never think of her victory in death again without saying: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." Her patience had grown to perfection. She seemed to be constantly filled with unutterable peace, love, joy and hope. To her there was nothing forbidding in the coming future. If at any time she desired to live longer, it was only that she might have the opportunity of doing something more for the salvation of souls and the interests of the church. She seemed to be greatly comforted to have me go into her room and pray with her, which I often did to my own edification. For two weeks before her death, such was the holy glow on her countenance, and such her words about peace and love and holy hope and heaven, that I could scarcely realize that she yet belonged to earth. It seemed to me as though she had already crossed the border and was within the precincts of paradise. Her remains were taken to our church, where the writer preached her funeral to a weeping audience; after which we laid her body in our cemetery, to await the hour when "the dead in Christ shall rise." All in all, she was one of the most lovely Christians I ever knew. Her tomb will often be visited by her fellow-Christians here. Already the flowers of affection have been strewn there by unseen hands. J. G. Jones.

The Child's Corner.

IS IT YOU?

There is a child—a boy or girl,
I'm sorry it is true—
Who doesn't mind when spoken to;
Is it you? It can't be you!

I know a child—a boy or girl,
I'm loth to say I do—
Who struck a little playmate child;
I hope that wasn't you.

I know a child—a boy or girl,
I hope that such are few—
Who told a lie—yes, told a lie!
It cannot be 'twas you!

There is a boy—I know a boy,
I cannot love him though—
Who robs the little birdie's nest;
That bad boy can't be you!

A girl there is—a girl I know,
And I could love her, too,
But that she is proud and vain;
That surely isn't you.

ARTHUR'S SUBSTITUTE.

I went to pay a visit at the Mays, and I found Mr. May and Mrs. May, and Fanny and Tom, and all the rest, in a great stir about a poor family who lived in one of the back streets.

"What does the doctor say about Mrs. Doty?" asks Mr. May when he comes in to dinner. "I want you to see to it, Sarah," said he to his wife, "that she has the best of attendance."

"Fanny, have you carried the beef tea to Mrs. Doty?" Mrs. May asks of her eldest daughter.

"Mother, I did as you bid," says Tom, "and sent the oranges to Mrs. Doty."

These, and other questions like them, showing an unusual interest in a family I never heard of before, aroused my curiosity.

"And who are the Dotys?" I asked Fanny, "and what special claim have they on you?"

"Why, do you not know?" said Fanny, with surprise. "Mr. Doty was Arthur's substitute."

"Arthur's substitute! What do you mean?" for the war and its terrible sacrifices seemed so long ago.

"Have you forgotten?" asked Fanny, and I thought there was a touch of reproach in her voice. "Arthur was drafted to go to the war. The thought almost killed father. You know how splendid Arthur is. Everybody wanted us to get a substitute for him. Arthur said, No, he would never ask a man to go and be shot for him. Father, too, felt we must stand our chances with the rest of the country, and his son was no dearer to him than other men's sons were to their parents. Mother said nothing; she only prayed and worked to get him ready.

"One night—it was one Saturday night—John Doty, a man who liked father, came to the house and offered to take Arthur's place. I shall never forget that night. Tom and Katy and Cousin Lou were in the room, and heard it. Tom ran out to tell us. Then Katy came, then Cousin Lou, and they told us how father cried, and I clapped my hands and flew round; and mother—I shall never forget mother! There was never such a sight in this house. We were crazy with joy. Arthur did not like to give up; but Arthur, you know, was not strong, and we all told him John could fight better than he, and John wanted to go. Father gave him $1,000, but father said that was nothing, because money could not pay him.

"And John went, and he was shot; and now we feel we can never do enough for John's family. Father has interested himself in getting good situations for his two boys; we look after the two girls; and as for Mrs. Doty, she will never want while we can do for her. Is not that reason enough for our interest? He saved our darling Arthur!"

Arthur's substitute! Shot in his stead! Yes, that was enough to account for all their interest. No wonder they devoted themselves so to the family. "Yes," I said in a moment, "you can never do enough for the Doty's to have Arthur saved for you."

And then I thought of our substitute, yours and mine, and whether we were doing all we could to show him our gratitude for saving us. Who is our substitute?

Jesus Christ.

What is a substitute?

One who takes the place of another.

Whose place did Jesus take?

The place of sinners.

What made him?

"He loved us, and gave himself for us." And "greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Can we ever do enough for him who has done so much for us? How can we please him most? How can we obey him best? What can we do to tell others the story of his love? These are questions always springing up in grateful and loving hearts.—American.

HARRY SEYMORE was the only child of a widow who lived in the city; he did all in his power to help his mother.

One day, when Harry was running home, a dog flew at him. Without a moment's thought he threw a stone at him, which missed the canine and broke the window of a dry goods store.

The proprietor rushed out and demanded who broke the glass. A boy who had seen Harry throw the stone said:

"Never mind; I will tell him that the boy ran away."

"Did you do it?" said the gentleman to Harry.

"No, he did not," said the boy.

But Harry's conscience began to work, and he determined to tell the truth; so he walked up to the gentleman and told him how it had happened. The owner was so pleased with this frank confession that he engaged Harry as an errand boy. He rose, step by step, until he is now one of the firm. His motto is: "Always tell the truth."—Child's World.

"IS IT REALLY?"—This is a question often asked by a bright, earnest little fellow of my class, whom I tell the children stories by way of illustration. Deeply interested, he will want to know all the details of the story, and then is sure to come the eager question: "Is it really?"

It has taught me a lesson; for the look of disappointment on his face, if I say "No," hesitate or seem doubtful about it, proves how much more effective an illustration is if based on truth; so now I try to give only those which I can unhesitatingly say are true.

Children know the difference between the false and the real. They like "make believe" stories well enough for the time, but the fact that these are mere semblances, and have had no counterparts in reality, deprives them of the power to affect the heart or direct the life. Children want real, living examples to follow; not the ideal good boys and girls in the story books, who fight imaginary battles with sin, and gain imaginary victories. They want heroes who have had an actual existence.

Perhaps this is more truly the case with young children than with those who are older, but we all have a natural craving for truth, and consider that story the best which is most life-like.

So let us tell the children true stories. They never weary hearing of Moses and Samuel and David and Daniel. Let us draw illustrations more often from this greatest of story books, mingling with the struggles and victories of these crowned conquerors the every-day conflicts with sin and temptation of the infant heroes about us who are seeking to follow Jesus. Let us place before the little ones real models of piety that they can understand and believe in, and they will be more sure to desire and strive to copy them.—Eta., in Sunday School Times.

THE FISHERMAN'S SON.—A gentleman walking on the beach came across a little boy sitting on the road all by himself, looking out on the great ocean.

"You like the sea, my boy; do you not?"

"Yes, sir; and I hope to follow it when I get bigger."

"It is a hard life, besides being dangerous," said the gentleman.

"Yes, sir; but Jesus Christ went to sea, and he knows the dangers; and sometimes he preached out of a ship; I am sure he loves sailors," said the boy.

"But that will not hinder you from meeting with storms, and perhaps getting shipwrecked."

"Jesus Christ rules the winds and the waves; he stopped a storm once."

"He does not now," said the gentleman.

"No, sir; but he will help us to trust in him, and, if we hold on to him, nothing can much harm us," said the boy.

"You might be drowned,"

"Yes, sir." The boy stopped. "But, you know, my soul would then fly up to God; and it is all fair weather up there."

"Why, my little man, you are quite a preacher!" said the gentleman.

"Father and I often talk these things over," said the little boy; "and when he is gone out fishing, and leaves me all alone at home, they are company for me."

"The sweet, quiet, happy face of the little fellow pleased me," said the gentleman, "and I felt that he had the best of company."

THE INNOCENCE OF CHILDHOOD.—At a neighbor's house was a very bright little girl. It chanced once that they had for a guest a minister and an esteemed friend.

Little Annie watched him very closely, and finally sat down beside him and began to draw on her slate.

"What are you doing, Annie?" asked the clergyman.

"I'se making your picture," said the child.

So the gentleman sat still, and she worked away earnestly for awhile. Then she stopped and compared her work with the original, and shook her little head.

"I tant like it much," she said. "'Taint a great deal like you. I dess I'll put a tail to it, and call it a dorg."

Fancy his feelings! What a likeness there must have been!

The Farm and Garden.

How Little Birds Save the Apples.

Reader, did you ever eat a wormy apple, at the core of which you found a little light-colored larva or grub? That larva hatched from a minute egg, which was laid by a moth miller in the calyx or blossom end of the young apple. These millers appear in large numbers in fruit orchards about the time apple trees put on their roseate bloom. In some instances they glue the egg to the side of the apple, or in the cavity of the stem end. Immediately after the larva is hatched it commences boring toward the core of the fruit. In most instances the apple will be so much injured by the little larva that it will fall to the ground. Sometimes the depredator bores his way out of the fruit, and lets himself down by means of a silken cord, which he spins while descending. If birds of any sort are near, they will devour these delicate tit-bits with avidity. But if not destroyed, such larva crawl around until they find a place protected by the storms, where they weave a cocoon around themselves, and enter the pupa state. There are two varieties of this moth worm, one of which remains in the pupa state from midsummer until the next spring, when it emerges from the cocoon with wings, to deposit its eggs in the basin of the apple, while the other passes through the various transformations twice during the year, so as to be ready to destroy late fruit as well as early. If swine or sheep devour the fallen fruit before the larva leave it, the winged moth miller must appear the next season, if at all, from some other source. If birds consume them, of course no millers can ever spread their wings from crushed larva. There are also several varieties of birds that are incessantly searching for minute grubs and bores in the bark of fruit trees. Eggs from which borers spring are deposited just in the edge of the parenchyma, the second layer of the bark; and as soon as the minute borer is large enough to commence operations, birds perceive them, and take them out with their sharp bills.

PROPER TIME TO SKIM MILK.

The milk should be skimmed as soon as all the cream has risen, and before the milk has thickened. The exact time required for cream to rise will of course depend upon the temperature, but a little experience will enable one to tell. At the time the cream should be removed, it will have a bright, healthy appearance—a rich, yellow, uniform color, and such adherence of particles as will enable one sometimes to remove the entire cream at one dip of the skimmer.

If allowed to stand too long without skimming, both the quantity and the quality of the cream will be seriously affected; the surface will become discolored, blotched and knobby, while underneath the cream is rapidly yielding to the corrosive tendency of the acid in the milk. The thickest cream may be as surely destroyed by standing on the milk as would the finest fabric in a bath of sulphuric acid. When thus destroyed, the cream is replaced by a thin, watery substance, having no resemblance to milk or cream.

These facts, which may be easily verified, show how essential it is that the cream should be taken off before the milk has acquired any great amount of acidity. Yet, in order to make the largest quantity of butter, care must be taken not to remove the cream too soon. Many neat and thrifty housewives make a practice of "skimming up" the milk at stated intervals, so as to be through with the job. This is of course very pleasant, but it involves considerable loss, as they do not get the full cream from the newest milk. The milk should all be skimmed at the same age, provided it has had the same conditions as regards temperature, etc. It follows, then, that some milk should be skimmed every night and morning.—Northwestern Farmer.

CEDAR SHINGLES.—Lebanon, Tennessee, has a veritable grove of cedars that are of some practical use. A gentleman who lives near that town, concluding recently that his house needed a new roof, proceeded to remove the old one, which was composed of cedar shingles. Notwithstanding the fact that the roof was put on in the year 1816, nine out of ten of the shingles were found to be as perfectly sound as if they had been subjected to the weather for only fifty-five days instead of as many years.

POISON IVY.—There being a great deal of poison oak (Rus. toxicodendon) in this country, we give the following two remedies:

1. Olive oil is said to be a certain cure. In severe cases it is to be taken internally, as well as applied externally. Dose: Two tablespoonfuls three times a day, keeping the affected parts well oiled all the time. Anointing exposed parts with the oil will prevent poisoning.

2. Take a handful of quick lime, dissolve in water, let it stand a half hour, then paint the poisoned parts with it. Three or four applications never fail to cure the most aggravated cases.

MARKETING STRAWBERRIES.—A. M. Purdy gives the following condensed rules for the successful marketing of strawberries, the result of many years of extensive experience:

The soil must be carefully and thoroughly prepared, experiments made, or information obtained by observation as to what sorts sell best, do the best in that particular locality, and after becoming fully satisfied of this, plant such, give them high culture in hills, mulch heavy, ship in clean baskets and crates, keep the small fruit by itself, which is easily done by having two sets of baskets on the picker's stand. See that they are carried to the depot in easy-riding spring wagons, and then properly put into the express car. Handle them over as little as possible, both before and after they are packed in the crates. Have the top berries in each basket nicely "faced," that is, bull down. Keep out stems, green fruit and leaves, pick as fast as the fruit turns, and our word for it, they will pay.

SULPHUR FOR PLANTS AND ROSES.—One of the most satisfactory methods of applying sulphur to plants is to take a pound of sulphur and a quart of quick lime, put them together, and run the quick lime by adding a couple of gallons of water. This appears to form a chemical combination, extracting from the sulphur a very powerful antidote to mildew. The liquid assumes a reddish tint when settled, and is injurious to plants if applied in large quantities. A pint of liquid to a gallon of water may be used safely, and roses, verbenas and other plants troubled with mildew or rust are much benefited by a thorough syringing. On the authority of one of the largest rose growers in England, soot is said to be an excellent remedy for the rose-mildew.

A GERMAN FOREST-KEEPER, eighty-two years old, not wishing to carry to the grave an important secret, has published in the Leipsic Journal a receipt he has used for fifty years, and which, he says, has saved several men and a great number of animals from a horrible death of hydrophobia. The bite must be bathed as soon as possible with warm vinegar and water, and when this has dried, a few drops of muriatic acid poured upon the wound will destroy the poison of the saliva and relieve the patient from all present or future danger.

THE Rural New Yorker has found that it grows more and better tomatoes by staking than by any other kind of training ever tried. Its stakes are three and a half to four feet long.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

HOW TO CLEAN PAINT.—If cleanliness is, as some folks say, one of the arts, all that helps it should be made known. Doors, walls or anything that is painted may be cleaned with a piece of soft flannel dipped in warm water, then wrung, and sprinkled with finely powdered French chalk. The paint on being rubbed with this will become quite clean, and will be saved from the destructive action of soap.

A GOOD WAY to cook meat is to seal it in a vessel hermetically tight. Cooked thus a long time in its own juices, it is rendered very tender, and has a peculiar, appetizing flavor.

Take an earthen jar that will stand heat, with tight-fitting cover. If beef is to be the dish for dinner, cut it in convenient pieces, lay them in the jar, rub each piece with salt and pepper and a little lump of sugar, and put in a little water; then lay on a piece of thick buttered paper, and press down the cover. If you think it will allow any steam to escape, mix shorts or rye-meal with water to a paste; press strips of this all round the edge of the cover. Bake in a moderate oven four or five hours, according to tenderness of meat. Chickens or turkeys are excellent cooked in this way. The toughest meat is rendered tender by this process; and none of the nutritious matter is wasted, as in many of the forms of cooking.

IT IS not work that kills men; it is worry. Work is healthy; you can hardly put more upon a man than he can bear. Worry is rust upon the blade. It is not the revolution that destroys the machinery, but the friction. Fear secretes acids; but love and trust are sweet juices.

THE fields in many parts I have visited are white unto harvest, so that sometimes I have wished that I might have the life of Methuselah, or that the sun might never go down, that I might do my share of that great work which is to be done in these nations.—S. Grellet.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ARROW TIE.

Planters and Cotton Press men everywhere prefer it to all others.

THE ARROW TIE

was used to cover MORE THAN HALF THE CROP OF 1869, giving entire satisfaction.

The patentee and manufacturer of the celebrated ARROW TIE, J. J. McComb, formerly of New Orleans, now residing in Liverpool, having control of the best and most extensive Rolling Mills in Europe, is constantly importing large stocks of this popular Tie, manufactured of the very best quality of English iron, to meet the increasing demand for it throughout all the Cotton States.

Planters can buy or order the ARROW TIE of all dealers in Iron Ties, and of country merchants generally, at the lowest market price; and we respectfully solicit the patronage of Planters and Factors everywhere.

MEDICAL.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR,

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, (to which localities, and especially to Fisher T. Rawson and James E. Bradley, he refers those who desire facts before trying it for themselves,) justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to durat on of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

BRACES AND TRUSSES.—DR. JOHN C. ANGELL informs the medical profession and others that he has constantly on hand and for sale a complete assortment of BANNING'S TRUSSES, Spinal and Shoulder Braces, and other appliances for the prevention, relief and cure of general debility, local weakness and derangements of public speakers and singers, palpitation of the heart, bronchitis and weakness of the lungs, spinal weakness and deformity, dyspepsia and nervous affections, constipation and chronic diarrhea, female derangements and extreme displacements of the womb, RUPTURE, PILES, prolapsus-ani, and weakness of the male and female system.

These light, cool and springy auxiliaries are the special favorites of the profession; are intensely common-sense and rational in their action; supply a missing link in treatment; place the above affections in a new and more hopeful light, and often complete cures where medicine can only mitigate, and more than it can cure a hernia or a dislocated joint.

He specially desires an examination of these appliances by the profession and sufferers. Where necessary the professional application of the above braces will be under our supervision or that of the family physician.

These valuable appliances are sanctioned by a large number of the ablest professors in the United States and Europe as the best adapted to fulfill the purpose for which they are intended, and the Trusses and Braces so adopted by the United States government for the use of the army and navy. Terms cash. Consultations free. Send for their pamphlet. It is better to call.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be read by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. Schele DeVere, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Scientific.

A new process in making steel has lately been brought into notice, called the Atwood process. It consists in the infusion of certain chemical substances in the molten metal, by which the sulphur and phosphorus are immediately eliminated or rendered inert.

Sassafras Oil.—Dr. Thompson, of Nashville, finds that a few drops of sassafras oil will entirely neutralize the narcotic effects of tobacco. When put upon cigars the same effect is produced. It is also said that sassafras oil is a good remedy for the bite of a rattlesnake. How far this oil would act as an antidote to the alkaloids is not stated, but it ought to be tried. It has long been used to prevent the fermentation of mucilage and inks.

New Deodorizer.—Spongy iron is recommended by Voelcker as a deodorizer of great power, exceeding in its absorbing power even animal charcoal. If water from the common sewers be passed through this substance it will be so completely purified as to keep sweet and colorless for months. Spongy iron is prepared by heating finely pulverized charcoal in a close furnace. It is thought that water filters made of this substance will possess superior advantages.—New York Dry Goods Journal.

Some interesting relics of man have been found on the guano islands off the coast of Peru. Among them are rude representations of the human figure, cut in hard wood. In a cave, which was discovered under forty feet of guano, were found many hand-wrought works, earthenware vases, with figures, gold ear-rings, eggs, etc. Local antiquaries consider the remains older than the time of the Spanish conquest; but their opinion should be carefully examined before it is accepted.

Among the men of mark in science who have lately died are: Dr. F. A. G. Miquel, professor of botany at the University of Utrecht, etc., and Dr. Sheridan Muspratt, the well known analytical chemist of Liverpool. Prof. Miquel was one of the most distinguished botanists on the continent, and was the author of works on the botany of the Netherland Indies and Japan, and of a large illustrated botanical work, in four folio volumes. Dr. Muspratt is best known by his Dictionary of Chemistry.

Mr. Glaisher, the aeronaut, disputes the theory that the temperature of the air diminishes as the altitude increases. He says that the mean temperature in summer, at fifty feet from the surface of the earth, is, during evening and night, higher than at four feet, and in winter the same relative temperature is always preserved, both by day and night. At sunset, in summer, the temperature is nearly the same for the first two thousand feet of ascent; but at night, and in winter, it increases with the altitude.

Ivory.—In regard to this valuable article, we find some interesting particulars in the Manufacturer and Builder. It takes the ivory of twenty thousand elephants annually to supply the demand for cutlery purposes at Sheffield. The best ivory is from Africa, though not so white as that of Asia, which contains more phosphate of lime and less animal matter, and is therefore more liable to crack. A large supply comes from the fossil elephants, which are found in large quantities in Northern Siberia. Owing to the extreme cold, these have been well preserved from decomposition. The future supply is somewhat precarious, and a call is beginning to be made for substitutes.

Experiments made to ascertain what colors are most quickly and easily perceived by the eye seem to show that bright yellow is the color most easily distinguished, and violet and red are the least readily recognized. After yellow, blue is the most quickly seen. These experiments may be of some value in improving our system of railway signalling. The colors most readily distinguishable at the greatest distance are obviously the best to employ for signals. Now, according to these experiments, red comes last, or last but one, and green stands but just before it. Bright yellow and blue, the colors most easily recognized, would therefore seem to be preferable for signal-lights.

Hecla and Vesuvius.—It is a long way from Hecla, in Iceland, to Etna, in sunny Sicily. Yet scientific men tell us there is little doubt that these two volcanoes are connected by a tunnel or natural subterranean passage of communication. There are good reasons for this belief. The great internal earth-pulse beats simultaneously in each. Etna is never disquieted but Hecla sympathizes, and Hecla never shows symptoms of eruption without some throbbings in Etna. Ancient and gigantic twins are they, standing for ages widely separated, but holding mysterious communication through an unexplained labyrinth, a fiery artery, through which their hot blood flows and mingles.

Deaths by Lightning.—Few people are aware how many are the deaths from lightning. It appears, from statistics kept in France, that during the last thirty years more than 10,000 people were struck by lightning, of whom 2,252 were killed outright; 880 being killed during the last ten years, and of these only 243 were females. If lightning falls on a crowd it does more mischief among the men than among the women, the tall persons being most exposed. Again, animals are frequently stricken, while the persons in charge of them are spared. The old idea that the beech tree is a protection is a fatal error, the neighborhood of all isolated trees being dangerous, except when they are in metallic connection with the soil. Railroads and telegraph wires are protectors, in so far as they are able to absorb and convey considerable amounts of electricity. Every locomotive does this unperceived, its metallic mass being an excellent conductor. Walking along a railroad track where it runs through a country without trees is as dangerous as taking shelter under a tall tree. That windows are dangerous is believed to be an error, for experience does not show that lightning strikes through open windows or follows a draft of air.

The World's Interest in Christ. One thing makes itself manifest as the years roll on. The world has an interest in Christ which it will not let go. He has wrought for himself a lodgment in the mind and heart of a race, from which he cannot be dislodged. The thousands and tens of thousands of men who are so fiercely engaged in dishonoring his character and disputing his claims, only help, in their blindness, to build the faith which they are trying to destroy.

Far and wide, men are talking and writing as if they confidently expected to despoil Christ of his ancient honors, and stop the spread of his kingdom. But in view of all this turmoil and noise, we can say in this nineteenth century just what Paul said in the first century: "Some indeed preach Christ of contention and strife, and some also of good will. * * * What then? Notwithstanding every way, whether in pretense or in truth, Christ is preached, and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice." Taking the experience of the past as our guide, we may safely conclude that in the long run such works as those of Strauss, Schenkel and Renan—not to speak of many writers of a similar spirit nearer home—have as much to do in deepening the hold of Christ upon the earth as those which are written with a simple faith in the New Testament record. These antagonisms, as the centuries move on, only help to deepen the impressions of the race, and beget a profounder conviction of his divine and supernatural glory. No age certainly has been so prolific in works which seek to solve the enigma of the being of Jesus. The list of such books that have appeared in this century would swell into a catalogue. We take the fact itself, and rejoice in it as one evidence that the world cannot shake off the problem—that it has such an interest in it that it cannot possibly let it die out.—Congregationalist.

Two Pairs of Fetters.—Eighty years ago a fierce war raged in India between the English and the Tippoo Sahib. On one occasion several English officers were taken prisoners; among them was one named Baird. One day a native officer brought in fetters to be put upon each of the prisoners, the wounded not excepted. Baird had been severely wounded, and was suffering from pain and weakness.

A gray-haired officer said to the native official: "You do not think of putting chains upon that wounded man?"

"There are just as many pairs of fetters as there are captives," was the answer, "and every pair must be worn."

"Then," said the noble officer, "put two pairs on me! I will wear his, as well as my own." This was done. Strange to say, Baird lived to regain his freedom—lived to take that city; but his noble friend died in prison.

Up to his death he wore two pairs of fetters! But what if he had worn the fetters of all in the prison? What if, instead of being a captive himself, he had quitted a glorious palace to live in their loathsome dungeon, to wear their chains, to bear their stripes, to suffer and die for them, that they might go free, and free forever?

Friend, such a thing has been done. "There is one God, and one Mediator between God and men—the man Christ Jesus," "who gave himself a ransom for all."—Christian at Work.

Happiness grows at our own firesides, and is not to be picked up in the stranger's garden.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have again to report a quiet market in most branches of trade. A moderate business has been done by the wholesale dealers in dry goods, etc., but from some we hear complaints of increasing dullness. With light receipts and a good demand sugar has shown more buoyancy. Molasses has continued quiet and firm. Flour has shown but little animation, without any quotable change in prices, grain has been in good request at about previous rates, and pork has sold at a further decline of 50c., while bacon has continued firm.

Our accounts from the country are still discouraging, and corroborate previous reports that excessive rains and an unseasonably low temperature have done considerable damage and are seriously retarding the crop. There can be no doubt that the latter has made a very bad start and must prove dangerously late. We also hear of a general diminution in planting, but with conflicting estimate of the degree of the falling off. The bottom lands, especially in the valleys of the hilly districts, appear to have suffered the most. In many cases the crop in the ground has been utterly destroyed by the flood, making replanting necessary, and in some instances, it being too late for the latter, corn has been substituted for cotton.

The river has fallen 1 inch since our last, and is now 3 feet 7 inches below high water mark.

Lake	8
Arkansas	1,511
Mobile	72
Texas	1,164
Total	12,046

On Saturday the demand was slack throughout the day, and the movement being checked by factors refusing to make any further concessions, the sales were confined to 3,650 bales at prices showing no quotable variation. On Monday buyers showed still less disposition to operate freely, but the demand being stimulated by some concessions in the medium grades, 3,650 bales changed hands at prices requiring a reduction of ⅛c. in good ordinary and low middling, but without any falling off in the better qualities. On Tuesday the market opened with a good demand, which subsequently became more animated and continued active throughout the day, resulting in sales of 9,050 bales, 4,200 of which were taken by one party. Prices were strengthened by an improvement of 1-16d. at Liverpool and a lively competition among buyers, and not only recovered Monday's decline in the medium grades, but ruled still higher for the poorer qualities.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 14,900 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,341,004 bales, against 1,084,287 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 989,930 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 890,641 bales to Great Britain, 280,933 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 237,548 to France.

Ordinary	11⅞ to 12¼
Good ordinary	13⅛ to 14
Low middling	14⅛ to 15⅛
Middling	15⅝ to 15⅞
Strict middling	15⅞ to 16

On Monday 700 barrels overweight mess sold at $16.87½ to $17 per barrel. On Tuesday 150 barrels over-weight mess sold on private terms, and 160 barrels do. at $17.25 per barrel.

Monetary.—Gold, 112¼ to 112⅝.

American silver half dollars, 108½ to 109, and Mexican dollars at 3 per cent. premium in gold.

The sales of bonds include $1,500 new City seven per cents on Moulny at 71⅛, and $6,200 Canal and Claiborne Street Railroad first mortgage, several days before, at 90; and $2,000 new City seven per cents on Tuesday at 71.

In warrants we notice sales of $2,000 State on Saturday at 52; $2,500 do. on Monday at 52½, and $1,000 at 53; and $1,000 new Metropolitan Police at 99. Some of the dealers reported counter-buying rates for State warrants at 51 to 53 for large, and 55 to 58 for small, and selling at 52 to 54 for the former, and 58 to 65 for the latter. Metropolitan Police (new) are quoted at 98½ to 99.

FOREIGN.

Matamoras, May 17.—Rocha arrived before Tampico to-day, and in a battle yesterday the rebel artillery reached the Federal positions. The rebellion will be suppressed soon. Yesterday guerrillas collected duties on the Salnea road.

St. Denis, May 24.—After a brief lull yesterday the fighting recommenced and continued all night. The Versaillists surrounded the Tuileries, Louvre and Place Vendome; desperate fighting ensued and every inch of ground was disputed. At daylight the insurgents still held these positions. A combined assault is now progressing.

Versailles, May 24, 1 P. M.—A terrible explosion just occurred in the center of Paris. It is considered probable the Hotel de Ville has been blown up by the insurgents.

Versailles, May 24.—The Tuileries were entirely burned down. It is hoped the galleries of the Louvre will be saved.

Later.—Great fires are raging in Paris in all directions.

St. Denis, May 24, evening.—This has been the most terrible day for Paris. The city is burning in many places, and the destruction of a great part of the central and eastern districts seems inevitable. The Communists still hold all districts between the Place Vendome, the Tuileries and Belleville. Troops are mowed down by the fire from the windows, barricades and mitrailleuses, but are steadily gaining ground. The slaughter is fearful.

Paris, May 25, Wednesday evening.—Last night, from the American legation, I watched the burning of the Hotel de Ville. At two o'clock the parade was a mass of livid flames.

The Austrian embassy, the property of the Empress Eugene, was also burned. The Conrt des Consignation is reported destroyed, likewise the Spanish embassy.

The troops are taking the barricades splendidly, notwithstanding the insurgents fusilade from the houses. The Place Concorde has been carried.

There has been heavy fighting between Premille and Mont Parnasse. The loss of the Versaillist troops was small.

Twelve thousand prisoners have been taken to Versailles.

The Versaillists are sending firemen to the city from the towns within a radius of twenty miles.

Thiers announces the Nationals will be disarmed immediately.

London, May 25.—A letter from Paris says the Versaillists are masters, and the city is in ashes.

St. Denis, Thursday evening, May 25.—The fighting has ceased; the Versaillists have complete possession of the city. The conflagrations are nearly all extinguished. They in all cases were caused by the shells of the Versaillists and met by the Communists.

A portion of the Louvre was saved—the most precious works are safe in the vaults.

Last night and to-day the troops refused to give quarter, and killed all who fell into their hnuds.

Versailles, May 25.—The government troops have occupied Fort Bicotre.

Rocur and Rigault, two prominent leaders of the Commune, have been shot.

Outside Paris, Thursday evening, May 25.—Since noon to-day a strong southeasterly wind has prevailed, which blows the flames toward the Place de la Bastile, threatening the entire city with destruction. The government batteries are bombarding Belleville. Communication with the interior of the city is still closed.

Athens, May 25.—The Chamber of Deputies have voted ten thousand livres to the widow of Mr. Lloyd, who was killed by the Marathan brigands.

Berlin, May 25.—The Emperor of Russia will arrive at Berlin on the ninth of June, to witness the triumphal entry of the troops on the eleventh of June.

In the German Parliament to-day, in a debate on a bill incorporating Alsace and Lorraine with the German empire, Prince Bismarck said the task he undertook when he became minister, to establish the empire, was nearly accomplished. His health was bad, and his personal wish was to retire from active duty. He remained only as an advocate for the complete restoration of the provinces of Alsace and Lorraine to the Fatherland. He complained of the lack of confidence shown by Parliament; unless the amendment it had made to the bill now before it were expunged he would withdraw the measure and let the Emperor appoint a responsible minister in his place. A vote was taken, and the bill was sent back to the committee for revision

Paris, May 25.—The collections in the Louvre were all saved, except the library, in which a great many valuable books were destroyed. The National Library and Grand Livre are safe.

The insurgents have evacuated and blown up Fort d'Ivry.

St. Denis, May 26.—All the collections in the Louvre galleries and Palaise Royale are intact.

The troops surprised and shot on the spot a large company of women engaged in pouring petroleum into cellars, and afterward throwing in lighted fuses. Fires continue to break out in many places.

A remnant of the Communists attempted to cut a way toward Pantin, but were closely pursued by the troops, who slaughtered them without mercy.

Versailles, May 26.—The following public buildings in Paris were saved: Ministor of Marine, Interior, Foreign Affairs and Agriculture, Pantheon, Ecole Militaire, Ecole des Beaux Arts, Bank of France, Credit Foucier and churches generally.

Versailles, May 26.—New fires are bursting out in various parts of the city. The insurgents put boxes of petroleum everywhere.

It is reported that Burgerts himself fired the Tuileries, after it had been steeped in petroleum.

The Church of St. Germain Aux Errois had been burned. The Palace of Justice was also destroyed.

Blood runs in the gutters of Paris.

The walls of the Tuileries are still burning.

Rue Rivoli is also burning.

The slaughter of the Nationals is frightful. The Versaillists, since Tuesday, have been killing all prisoners.

The houses in Rue Royale are wet with petroleum, and the Nationals fired them.

The insurgents evidently intended to destroy Paris. Even women were discovered throwing petroleum on houses.

Six Nationals, dressed as pampiers, discovered throwing petroleum instead of water on fires, were shot.

There is no limit to the readiness that exists to kill members of the Commune and the leaders of the Guards when captured.

The gasworks at Aubervilliers exploded to-day, and many other explosions have taken place.

London, May 27.—A dispatch from Soissy says the Germans, who have been seeking for the Archbishop of Paris and other hostages, report that they cannot find them. It is supposed they were shot.

It is estimated that over fifty thousand dead bodies are in the houses and cellars of Paris, many of whom are women and children.

It is said the women were perfectly furious during the fights. Executions are constant. The destruction of property is terrible; it is estimated that one-fourth of Paris is destroyed.

A dispatch to the Daily News says Don Carlos is at Bayonne, and that great agitation prevails in Andalusia and Catalonia.

A dispatch from Versailles, Friday night, says: General Vinoy has captured Place de Belleville, which was defended by ten thousand insurgents. The fighting was severe and the casualties heavy.

The Versaillists have carried Pont de la Gare, which crosses the Seine at Bercy; a portion of Les Buttes Chaumont was also carried by the Versailles troops.

General Leflo has informed the Assembly that the insurgents still hold Charoune, a district of Les Buttes, Chaumont, La Chapelle, La Vilotte, Monilmoutant and Belleville. The general also informed the Assembly that the insurrection would be at an end on Saturday.

The insurgents will probably be surrounded to-night in Belleville and Menilmontant, and the remainder of the city will be occupied by the Versaillists.

The Theaters Lyriquc, Chatelet and Porte St. Martin have been burned.

A cannon and twenty-two flags were captured at Belleville.

There is a rumor that Delescluze and Pyatt have been shot.

The insurgents imprisoned in the docks have attempted a rising, and several were shot before order was restored.

The insurgents have been dislodged from Charonne, and are surrounded in Belleville and Menilmontant.

The Prussians imprison all escaping insurgents.

Outside Paris, Sunday evening, May 28.—All is quiet within the city. Not a shot has been fired since ten this morning. The firemen have the flames under control, but there is still much smoke.

The Prussians at Romainville made one thousand prisoners, including several armed women. Saturday evening all the insurgents who came within their lines were disarmed and placed under guard.

There are rumors of awful cruelties perpetrated by the Versaillists, who are reported to have shot the men, women and children found with arms in their hands.

Provision trains are entering the city.

There is great rejoicing within the city over the termination of the struggle.

Versailles, May 28.—The remaining insurgents surrendered unconditionally at nine this morning.

The slaughter on Saturday night was awful.

Altogether the suppression of the Commune has cost over sixty thousand lives and the destruction of one-third of Paris.

Versailles, May 28.—Delescluze, delegate minister of war under the Commune, was shot by his guards and instantly killed last night in attempting to escape.

The trial of the Communist leaders taken alive commences during the present week. Their conviction is inevitable. It is generally believed that every one of them will suffer death.

After desperate and bloody conflicts the government forces succeeded in capturing the insurgent positions at Bellevillo and Pere la Chaise late last night. The firing then ceased, and this morning, on the troops advancing on the position yet held by the Communists, the insurgents hoisted a white flag and surrendered. They were immediately disarmed, and the great rebellion of Paris of 1871 had ended.

The thirty-eighth regiment of the line, belonging to McMahon, returned to Versailles in triumph, the men having flowers and branches in their rifles, and bearing also a magnificent banner of red silk, captured from the Communists.

London, May 29.—The special correspondent of the Tribune, at Paris, telegraphs on Sunday evening: Paris looks completely cowed; the shops are all closed, and even those of vital necessity, such as chemists, remain shut.

The restaurants, bakeries and grocery stores have also suspended business. I walked across Paris last night, and never saw anything so desolate. I saw no human beings but sentinels every hundred yards, and one shabby civilian. There were no sounds but the footfalls of the sentinels and the thud made when they struck their muskets on the flagstones.

The old revolutionary system of denunciation is going on with terrible ferocity. Nadar, the aeronaut, has been arrested for supposed sympathy with the Commune. Nobody is safe even in the presence of their most intimate friends. A rash word or imprudent gesture by a man or woman insures instant death.

Men, women, and even children, are seized by the brutal soldiery and shot. The saddest feature is the conduct of the women—the female insurgents having, in many instances, been detected firing the houses of innocent persons with petroleum.

Brussels, May 30.—It was announced in the Belgian Senate that Victor Hugo's recent letter was regarded as compromising Belgium. The government requested Hugo to leave the country. Hugo refused to depart, whereupon, on the King's decree, his departure was enforced.

London, May 30.—Victor Hugo has been driven from Belgium. He is coming to London.

Singapore, May 25.—A volcanic eruption and earthquake has shaken the Island of Rua. The country is terribly devastated. Four hundred lives were lost.

Paris, May 30.—Only the fifth, fourteenth and sixteenth arondissements and the Belleville and Villette quarters remain under military occupation.

The city is calm and the discipline of the army admirable.

Versailles, May 30.—The inhabitants of Belleville have openly announced that they will make reprisals. A secret system of arson and assassination is apprehended.

The insurgents in Fort Vincennes have surrendered unconditionally.

Gaulois announces that the Orleans princes will be allowed to live in France.

President Thiers has ordered the disarmament of Paris, and a dissolution of the National Guards in the department of the Seine.

Paris is tranquil. Trade already shows signs of reviving. The soldiers are feted by the inhabitants. Arrests of insurgents continue.

The Yellow Fever in Buenos Ayres.

FURTHER ACCOUNT OF ITS RAVAGES.

The Buenos Ayres correspondent of the Baltimore American gives a graphic account of the terrible ravages of the yellow fever in that city. We make the following extracts from his letter:

With a population considerably over two hundred thousand, Buenos Ayres, by the fourth of April last, had been decimated by the death of nearly thirty thousand of its inhabitants, while fully one hundred thousand had taken flight to the country towns, leaving scarce sixty thousand in the city, one-half nearly of whom were invalids or convalescents, unable to assist in caring for their sick fellow-citizens. Most of the public buildings in the city, including nearly all the churches, theaters and club houses, were converted into public hospitals. The grand cathedral, the richly endowed temple, the beautiful Teatro Colon on the Plaza de la Victoria, the Teatro Victoria on the Calle Victoria, the Teatro Argentino on the Calle Caugallo, and the Foreign Clubhouse on the Calle San Martino, had all been for weeks overcrowded with the jaundiced-looking victims of the pestilence, some, it is true, slowly recovering, with just the bare semblance of what they once were, but many, very many rapidly dying, surrounded with all the loathsomeness of the black vomit in its most hideous forms.

A gentleman—a native of Buenos Ayres—writing to the Argentine consul general at New York, under date of April 3, says: "The yellow fever is frightfully decimating the beautiful city of Buenos Ayres. Hundreds and thousands have left the pest-ridden city, and hundreds and thousands are daily following the example of those already gone. In fact, Buenos Ayres is almost completely deserted. It is the general opinion that there are not remaining in it more than sixty thousand of its two hundred and twenty-five thousand inhabitants, and even among the reduced population the mortality exceeds over four hundred per diem. The business houses are nearly all closed. My father I had the misfortune to lose the other day. My family are all down with the fever, together with six out of nine clerks in my commercial house."

* * * * * *

In regard to the origin of the present malady, it was said that it was brought into port by infected vessels from Paraguay, and though resembling the yellow fever of the West Indies and our Southern States, it is said to be in many respects quite different. Strange to say, though the infection is said to have been brought to the city by the shipping, not a single death has occurred aboard of a ship in the harbor, and with one or two rare exceptions it has not made an appearance among the large number of the merchantmen lying in the stream opposite the city.

Garrick showed Dr. Johnson his fine house, gardens, statues, pictures, etc., at Hampton Court. "Ah! David, David," said the doctor, "these are the things which make a death-bed terrible."

LATE RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States met according to appointment in the Prosbytorian church, Huntsville, Alabama, on Thursday morning, May 18, at eleven o'clock. The pulpit was occupied by the Rev. Dr. Dabney, of Union Theological Seminary, Virginia, the moderator of the last Assembly, the Rev. Dr. Ross, the venerable pastor of the church, and the Rev. Dr. Plumer, of Columbia Theological Seminary, South Carolina. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. R. L. Dabney, D. D.—an able sermon, that occupied more than one hour in delivery, and was listened to with close attention by a large congregation.

The second General Assembly of the (Reunited) Presbyterian Church in the United States of America met, agreeably to appointment, in the First (the Rev. Arthur Mitchell's) Presbyterian church of Chicago, on the eighteenth ultimo, at eleven o'clock. The house was crowded. The invocation was offered and Scripture read by the Rev. James Eells, D. D., of Cleveland. The Rev. George W. Musgrave, D. D., of Philadelphia, offered prayer, after which the moderator of the last Assembly, the Rev. J. Trumbull Backus, D. D., of Schenectady, New York, delivered the opening sermon. The following extract from the report on the memorial fund will be read with interest:

"In presenting the actual statistics of the work, it should be promised that, owing to the tardiness of the returns from many churches, our report is necessarily incomplete. Much work known to have been accomplished is too late for this presentation. Some of the returns also have been so indistinct that a satisfactory comparison of college reports with those of churches, with a view to avoiding repetition, has been well nigh impossible. And as the committee have preferred to err on the safe side, they have in all cases of uncertainty ruled out college reports, though fully persuaded that by this means $200,000 is excluded from their footings. Owing to the same difficulty, no account has been made of the reports of special memorial gifts returned by the boards, and by the woman's societies. Large sums, also, gathered from individuals for churches in the West, have been excluded on account of uncertainty, though it is believed that many of them have not been reported by donors. It was the first intention of the committee to report individual donors in some cases by name; but the difficulty of a proper discrimination has been found to be so great that such names are simply entered on the memorial records, while to the public they are reported in the aggregate, under a general miscellaneous head.

"The classification of money received and reported thus far is as follows: For new church buildings, $3,236,475.61; manses, $683,884.05; repairs and enlargement, $733,707.60; payments of debts, $1,083,478.72; institutions of learning, $1,405,548.66; permanent institutions in foreign lands, $93,509.96; special gifts to the boards, $60,340.40; hospitals, $48,665.35; relief fund and sustentation, $41,150.46; Presbyterian houses, $46,882.37; amount not specified by the churches reporting it, $162,681.10; expenses of the committee, $11,175.63. It is with profound gratitude to God that the committee announced as the total amount reported up to twelve o'clock to-day, $7,607,499.91."

Methodist General Conference. The General Conference of the Methodist Church, composed of ministerial and lay delegates from all the Conferences in the United States, met in the city of Pittsburg, May 17. Hon. F. H. Pierpoint, lay delegate from the Pittsburg Conference, was elected permanent president, being the first instance known in this country where a layman has been chosen to preside over an ecclesiastical body. Rev. H. B. Knight, of the Pittsburg Conference, and J. W. Mulvane, Esq., of the North Illinois Conference, were chosen secretaries. Rev. W. W. Snyder, in a letter dated Pittsburg, May 19, says: "About one hundred and ten delegates have been chosen, one-half clerical, the other half lay. Two-thirds of this number are present, about as many laymen as ministers." The subject of union with other Methodist bodies occupied the Conference on Tuesday, the twenty-third. Revs. J. G. Bruce and S. M. Merrill, on the part of the Methodist Episcopal Church, were present, and made addresses on that day.

NIGHT HYMN.

JEANNIE.

I lay me down to sleep,
After the weary, long day,
Trusting in God to keep
The shadows and gloom away
My tired heart foldeth gladly
Each busy, worldly thought,
And floateth out on the silence,
In rest remembering nought.

I love the calm, deep dark,
Fringed with its moon-pearled rays:
Hid in its refuge-ark,
We forget the turbulent days—
Forget all their cares and sorrows,
For a brief and blessed rest,
While Sleep's soft, dewy fingers
On weary lids are press'd.

I lay away to sleep
My treasures, and hopes and fears,
Knowing that God will keep,
Though they slumber on for years:
Feeling that when the shadows
Of Time steal youth from my heart,
Out of the Valley of Weeping,
He will remember my part.

THE OLDEN TIME.

EXTRACTS FROM REV. THOS. NIXON'S JOURNAL.

Mr. Editor: I send you a short quotation from my journal of 1815, which you may dispose of as you think proper. I would here remark that during the time my mind was exercised on the subject of preaching I had no difficulty about the authority of our Bishops to ordain men to the office of the ministry. My only difficulty was to be clear in my convictions that God had called me to this great work. This question being settled satisfactorily in my own mind, I lost sight of the supposed apostolical succession believing that Jesus Christ is the great Head of his church, and, without his authority to preach, no man is qualified by the external rites of the church for the work of the ministry. (Dr. Coke was ordained by Mr. Wesley, Asbury was ordained by Dr. Coke, I was ordained by Asbury; so I am the third from Mr. Wesley.)

Our Conference (the Tennessee) was held at Norval's camp ground, Logan county, Kentucky, in October, 1814 in a log meeting house. Here I was received into full connection, and ordained deacon on the second of October, 1814, by Bishop Asbury. At this place I saw and heard, for the first and last time, the venerable Valentine Cook. His subject was the fall of Judas, in danger of apostasy; and, in addition to what is said in the "Biographical Sketches" (see pages 196, 197,) he introduced a dialogue between himself and hearers as follows: "Question.—Did you ever hear of a sheep turning to a goat? Answer.—No; but the other day, as I was riding along the road, I saw a great deal of wool scattered over the ground. I asked what had done this, and I was told that the wolves had been killing the sheep. Then if they can't turn to a goat they can be killed by the wolves. I will now ask you a question: Did you ever hear of a goat turning to a sheep? If not, then a sinner cannot be converted, and so you are running into the horrible doctrine of unconditional election and reprobation." At this Conference volunteers were called for to go to the Mississippi country. But the preachers were slow in responding to the call. I noticed that Bishop Asbury would frequently fix his half-shut eyes on me, and seemed to scrutinize my whole person, so that I was somewhat embarrassed, and was at a loss to know what it meant. A few days before Conference adjourned I saw him get his hat and walking cane, and asked: "Is Thomas Nixon in the house?" Some one said yes. I rose up. He said: "I wish to take a walk with him." When we had left the house a few steps, he said: "Where is the place of your nativity?" Answer.—South Carolina. "Where did you travel last year?" Answer.—New Madrid circuit. "Were you sick?" Answer.—I had measles. He said: "You would have had that disease anywhere." "Where does your father live?" Answer.—In Maury county, Tennessee, fifty miles south of Nashville. "From your constitutional make, and the place of your nativity, I should judge you to be a proper person for the Mississippi country." I replied that I was not yet of age, that my father was opposed to my going to that country as a volunteer, but if appointed there he would consent; but even then he would regret the appointment as it was so far off, and a very sickly country. He then said: "Make it a subject of prayer, and give me your answer before Conference adjourns." I told him I could not volunteer, but would go if appointed there. By this time we had got near the church door. He made a little pause, and, turning to me, said with emphasis: "I do not know but the very judgments you are afraid of will fall upon you." As a proof that he judged correctly in my case, I have been in this country more than fifty years, and have had but very little sickness.

I was appointed to Lee circuit, in Virginia, part of it lying in the mountains, on the head-waters of Cumberland river, and part in Tennessee. The scenery is grand and beautiful—mountain heads rising above each other, until they seem to touch the skies. At one time, in company with Bro. Axly, my presiding elder, while on the top of a high mountain, the clouds came round us with gusts of wind; the wind blew rapidly in the break of the clouds, but when the dark, heavy part of the cloud came up there was but little wind. The darkness was so great that we could see but a short distance, and we got very wet. As we descended the mountain Bro. Axly said: "The people ought to believe us now, as we are coming out of the clouds to preach to them." At the foot of the mountain we found a congregation waiting for us. Bro. Axly preached to them. The presence of God was with us. We had revivals in many places on the circuit. I attended camp meetings on some of the adjoining circuits, and I noticed that the congregations were often interrupted by rain and sunshine during divine service, and it occurred to me that a large shelter would be of great service, not only for protection from sun and rain, but also to keep off the damp night air from the congregation, and also be a suitable place for persons to sleep when the tents were crowded. I proposed to Bro. Wynn for us to have a shelter built at our camp ground. He was pleased with the plan of making a shelter. The whole community joined with us in the work. We planted posts twelve feet apart, making our shelter about sixty feet long and thirty feet wide. When we were putting the last course of boards on the roof the rafters gave way, and the whole roof fell. But early next morning we met, put the rafters up, bracing them well, and had all ready for our meeting, which commenced the next day. Several preachers from a distance attended the meeting—I think Bro. McAnally was there—and they were all so much pleased with our shelter that when they returned to their circuits they set about building shelters at their camp grounds. Bro. Axly said he would recommend the building of shelters all round his district. This, I presume, was the beginning of shelters on camp grounds. Our shelter was built in August, 1815, in Lee county, Virginia, not far from Lee courthouse. I had never seen or heard of a shelter at a camp ground before, and was led to propose it to Bro. Wynn from the considerations above stated. Bro. Axly was a holy and deeply pious man, of a child-like, humble spirit, but remarkably singular and eccentric in his manner. After reading the rules by which our camp meeting was to be governed, he said he had a few by-rules he wished to name: 1. When the congregation assembles at the stand, all to stand while singing. 2. Every true Christian to kneel in time of prayer. 3. Every hypocrite to take his seat. 4 Every sinner to stand up. This caused the most of the people to kneel.

Rev. James Patterson, of blessed memory, who died in the autumn of 1837, on one occasion said: "Brethren, if the Lord will only keep me humble, I will trust you to keep me poor."

Be not discouraged because your teaching provokes opposition. Be discouraged if it does not.

J. W. ON TRANSFERS.

Mr. Editor: In my last I offered some objections to two clauses in one sentence of the article of J. W. The other is still more objectionable. He says: "It was indeed a wholesome reaction from a contrary feeling that unfortunately has infected most of our Conferences for some time." Now, sir, if he means that the most of the Conferences are prejudiced against transfers simply because they are transfers, I think he is mistaken. My acquaintance with the Conferences is not very extensive, but so far as it goes, I know of no such prejudice. On the contrary, I know that several of them are inviting men, and that more than one member of our Conference, beside the writer, have been solicited for works in neighboring Conferences. If he means by it objectionable transfers, I disclaim that it is a "wholesome reaction" of sentiment on the subject. We still have no use for transfers of more than one description. We have none for such as are not fitted for any of our works, nor have we much for those whose "shining ability" fits them only for popular and preferred stations. No wonder that such have "become to be a tabooed class," and the more so because they have too much "shining ability and distinction" for ordinary itinerant work."

Yet more objectionable still are some of the reasons assigned for this by J. W. in some of the succeeding sentences of his article. This prejudice, he says, has "evidently arisen from misconceptions of the peculiar mission of Methodism;" "essentially selfish causes," etc. These he alleges against the members of the Conference, in contradistinction to transfers. I suppose it is no "selfish cause" in a transfer, when his time is expiring in one of the best appointments in one of our cities, and he has to move and take an appointment, probably, of less prominence, involving more labor and self-sacrifice, and less compensation, to make arrangements in advance to transfer and fill one of the best appointments in some other Conference? Oh, no; it is a most laudable and generous sacrifice! It is in perfect keeping with the "peculiar mission of Methodism" for him, by correspondence, to have the whole arrangement made in advance with the people, so that he has nothing to do but to go to his work and have the Bishop ratify the matter. Are these things according to the "genius of Methodism?" "Tell that not in Gath." And when members of the Conference object to that kind of a monopoly of the best portions of their work, we are told: "There is not a member of the Conference capable of filling these appointments." And, as though it were not enough to be thus unjustly reflected upon (I had liked to have said insulted,) we are now taunted with being influenced by "selfish causes" and "misconceptions of the mission of Methodism," which prompt us to improper feelings toward transfers. I earnestly disclaim for my Conference any such guilt, and challenge the proof. The responsibility of "adding no little to the burden of our chief shepherds," I protest, wherever it may be found, does not lie upon the devoted, self-sacrificing and laborious members of our Conference.

But the most seriously objectionable of all is that portion of his article in which he calls them "sorry specimens of Methodism," "miserable Methodists;" charges them with rallying weak and discontented brethren into a state of frowning prejudice against transfers; and denounces their views and conduct as a "shameful declension from the spirit of Methodism;" "imp of Know-Nothingism," to be headed out of our Conference, etc. Now, sir, if these epithets, charges and denunciations properly apply to any men, it is to those who transfer to a Conference with the understanding that they are to fill certain desirable appointments, and when they cannot longer remain in them, arrange to transfer to some other Conference where they can be agreeably accommodated, and then go on again until the church can no longer meet their wishes, and they seek other vocations or commissions. My mind's eye now rests upon more than one such who have been with us, and, after wandering and cornscating like comets through some of our leading appointments, became men of too much "distinction and shining ability" for the Methodist Church. And wherefore? Our venerated and lamented Bishop Andrew, in the last interview I had with him, speaking of one of these, said: "The responsibility is with the people. They spoil our young men of promise."

A judicious exercise of the transfer power certainly would not aggravate the evil—might, as J. W. suggests, relieve it, and would evidently benefit our section of the work. We need transfers, and a considerable number of them, and there is no Conference which will give them, if true Methodist preachers, a heartier welcome or a better showing for terms in our most eligible appointments. But an injudicious exercise of that power, it is my impression, will, as injudicious legislation has, damage the work. The effects produced already, on charges where we have had changes, demonstrate that what we want is untrammeled itinerancy, whether by transfers from other Conferences or by changes among our own men. We want the "old exception," which has rested on us like a nightmare for so long a time, practically removed, as well as expunged, from the book. Anything which fails to foster the spirit of itinerancy should be avoided. So thinks Cincinnatus.

CHRIST OUR MEDIATOR.

We are bought with a price. Christ, by his suffering and death, purchased for us a full salvation. He became our Saviour, and is now the Mediator between God and man. He is the great expiatory offering which was made for the sin of our first parents. And by his mediatorial suffering and death the wrath of a sin-avenging God was appeased, and man was placed in a position to attain to usefulness, to holiness, and to that perfection in the sight of his Maker which would entitle him to a rich heritage upon earth and to an heirship in the kingdom of endless bliss. Man is not, as some vainly imagine, already saved by the death of Christ. He is not, nor can he be in opposition to his own will, ushered into the light and liberty of eternal life. Such a salvation would make God's law a nullity, and as such would be a palpable violation of the great plan of human redemption. "He that would come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me." This would imply a forsaking of sin, a denial of the unholy propensities of our nature, in order, first, to secure the approbation of God, the witness of the Spirit, that we may be clothed with the garb of righteousness. There is certainly here no salvation without volition, no reward without labor, but a simple proposition is laid down. It is man's privilege to accept or reject—to turn to God or to Satan. We can feel assured of no such blessing accruing to us in consequence or by virtue of the death of Christ—that by this great sacrificial offering human depravity was converted into spotless purity, and man made at once an heir of heaven. The vanity and absurdity of such a hope would be but an insult to divinity, and a sheer fabrication of the turpitude of sin and of human responsibility. There is no such provision in the law; no such promise was ever made. He does not claim to be this kind of a Saviour. God looks with compassion upon the frailty and depravity of fallen man, and from the plenitude of his mercy proffers strength in our weakness. Our wants are all known and appreciated by him. Amidst the vicissitudes of life, it is from him we may expect unfailing comfort, and upon his arm we may lean for that fortitude and courage which will bear us triumphantly o'er life's uneven surface. Can it not be said, God has omitted nothing—withheld no inducement by which we might be released from the fetters of sin? The remedy is at hand, the necessary implements for the journey within our reach. We have before us the light of revelation, and the evidences of Christianity ever claiming our attention; the Spirit of God knocking at the door of our hearts. Is it not with man, then, rests the onus probandi? He it is who scoffs at the religion of Jesus Christ, who yields to the sickly sentimentality of worldly vanity, who turns with a frown and jeer from that Spirit which appeals to the purest and noblest impulses of his heart, which points him to the Lamb of God, and would fain win his affections from a world of sin and degradation.

MORE ABOUT TRANSFERS.

Mr. Editor: In your issue of March 9 I find an article from the pen of your Shreveport correspondent, J. W., on the subject of transfers. I am really at a loss to know what estimate to place upon said article, owing possibly to a misconception of his meaning—would like to have him explain, as every man is his own best interpreter of his language.

First, in speaking of the resolution of the Conference in regard to transfers, he says: "It was indeed a wholesome reaction from a contrary feeling that unfortunately has infected most of our Conferences for some time." Will J. W. please inform the readers of the Advocate whether or not he intended to make the impression that the Louisiana Conference had for "some time" opposed the transfer of preachers from other Conferences to this? If so, I join issue with him, and appeal to the records in proof of my position.

Again he says: "It cannot be denied that transfers have come to be a tabooed class in our ministry; and, strange to say, all the more so if they are men of shining ability and distinction."

Does J. W. regard this sweeping charge as applicable to the Louisiana Conference? If so, I would like him to furnish an instance of a transfer to this Conference having been "tabooed;" and if not, I hope he will make the proper explanation of his article.

As neither J. W. nor myself are transfers, we are particularly interested in the treatment of transfers by our Conference; and, for one, I am opposed to any word, line or act that would tend to reflect any discredit on the Conference of which I am a member, especially when I am satisfied that the Conference desires, and has heartily welcomed, that class of preachers whom J. W. regards as a "tabooed" class.

Indeed, so high has been the estimate placed on transfers by the Conference that it has promoted them to the highest positions of which it is capable. The delegates elected to the last General Conference were all transfers, five of the seven presiding elders are transfers, several chairmen of the standing committees are also selected from that class of our preachers, and most of the prominent stations and circuits are filled by the same class. I am prepared, too, to show that they have been thus treated for fifteen years past. I have written this article, Mr. Editor, to vindicate my Conference from the charges of which J. W. seems to regard it as guilty. I hope he will explain immediately. Respectfully,

Thos. J. Upton.

The angel who takes care of the flowers, and sprinkles upon them dew in the still night, slumbered on a spring day in the shade of a rose-bush. When he awoke he said: "Most beautiful of my children, I thank thee for thy refreshing odor and cooling shade. Could you now ask any favor, bow willingly would I grant it!"

"Adorn me, then, with a new charm," said the spirit of the rose-bush in a beseeching tone.

So the angel adorned the loveliest of flowers with simple moss. Sweetly it stood there, in its modest attire, the moss rose, the most beautiful of its kind.

So the costliest ornaments are often the simplest. There is no gold, nor jewel, nor sparkling pearl equal to the "ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is, in the sight of God, of great price."

The less faith, still the more fear.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CELEBRATION.

Ma. Editor: It was my privilege to attend the Excelsior Sabbath School picnic, at Little Star church, Columbia circuit, Louisiana; and as you would doubtless like to hear from the young people of this portion of the Conference, I have concluded to tell you some things I saw and heard at the exhibition of the school.

In the first place, there were between three and four hundred people in attendance, and when I arrived I beheld a well constructed arbor erected in front of the church, covered with boughs and twigs taken from the grand and beautiful forest trees which surrounded the place, and a platform well arranged and decorated with vines and flowers. On this platform were about sixty persons, including officers and scholars, giving evidence that they had met there for purpose; presently a fine-looking gentleman arose and stated that the exercises would commence by singing a hymn, commencing:

"Come, join our celebration."

After this a prayer was made by the Rev. Robert Davis, pastor of the circuit, after which the large and attentive audience was entertained for an hour and a half with some of the best prepared and selected dialogues and speeches it has been my privilege of listening to. They then had a recess of about ten minutes. The bell rang and the school was soon on the platform again, ready to sing, make speeches and recite dialogues, which they did for about one hour; then a beautiful speech, well delivered by a little girl about twelve years old, and a collection, the money to be used in paying for the Sunday School Visitor. Two young gentlemen waited on the lady portion of the audience and two young ladies on the gentlemen portion; after which an address was made by William B. Dixon, Esq., superintendent of the Columbia Sunday School. It was then stated that the school would form in procession and march to the table. The superintendent came off the platform and marched down the aisle, and the smallest scholars of the school followed in regular order, two and two, a boy and a girl together, the first pair bearing a banner with "Dew-Drops" inscribed on it, which, as I was informed, is the name of the class. Then came the next class of larger size, boy and girl together, bearing a banner with "Rose Buds" inscribed on it. The next class was composed of young gentlemen and young ladies, bearing a banner with this inscription: "Excelsior Sunday School Standard Bearers." I looked and beheld another class, bearing a banner with this inscription: "Daughters of Zion." And again another class, bearing a banner with "Rose of Sharon" inscribed on it. All were now ready, and the marshal gave the word "sing," when they all moved off gracefully and with uniformity, singing that beautiful hymn, commencing:

and after having marched about two hundred yards, they came to the table, which had been carefully prepared and was groaning under the weight of four large pyramid cakes, and also a large fine cake, presented by Mr. Barnes, the steward of the steamer Ouachita Belle, and a great variety of cakes and pies too numerous to mention. The meats were roast pig, turkies, venison, mutton and chicken pies, etc. There were two tables—one for the school and one for the audience. Every one had enough, and still there was plenty to spare.

Now, Mr. Editor, would you not like to have been there? I thought of you and my friend, Rev. R. J. Harp. How you would have enjoyed it. My mind was carried back twenty years, when I was an officer in a Sabbath school under Bro. Harp. May the beautiful and entertaining exercises of the Excelsior Sunday School at Little Star church, on the sixth of May, 1871, prompt others to many good works.

Sad grasses wither on the hill,
That Autumn's frosty breath has stung.
Like some wild mourner, spirit-wrung,
The plaintive wind is never still.

While cold shades wrap the solemn wood,
And keen stars orb in mellow sky,
A yearning fills brain, heart and blood
To bid this dreary world good-by.

And now to me the blithest noon
Holds darkness of the middle night;
While ever haunts my woeful sight
The grave of one who died too soon.

Palmly I clasp the chill, dumb stone,
And covet all its senseless calm.
For broken hearts no earthly balm—
No rest from pain save death alone!

O yearnful arms that stretch in air,
Eager to clasp the viewless love
That, while we knew her there above,
Yet mercilessly is not there;

O burning thoughts that strive to tell
The marvels of that radiant goal
Where stands her pitying, snow-white soul
And watches, knowing all is well;

O life that strainest but to see,
With what poor mortal power is given,
The far serenities of heaven
And that winged angel waiting thee;

Patience until the fetter lies,
A broken fetter, firm no more;
While dawn upon their distant shore
The dazzling palms of Paradise!

Reminiscences of Rev. J. I. D. Byrd.

NUMBER ONE.

It is our misfortune of the present day that our forefathers did not usually record the time and place of their Annual Conferences, or the name of the presiding Bishop. They seemed to be satisfied with the recorded fact that the Conference was held within a certain calendar year, transacted its ordinary business, and then the preachers went to their designated fields of labor. Sometimes, when a Conference was held late in one year, it is included in the printed minutes for the following year, so that it is often impossible to tell with any certainty what month or even year any one was admitted into the itinerancy. This is, to say the least of it, unpleasant to the biographer and historian who may wish to give both time and place to the facts he is recording. As a church we have improved greatly on the old careless style of keeping our records; and as sure as the history of the church is worth recording, we owe it to ourselves, and especially to posterity, to make the record as full and exact as possible.

The published minutes leave us in the dark as to the precise time when Bro. Byrd was admitted on trial. He says of himself that he was converted on the seventh of July, 1810, and the ensuing fall was admitted on trial in the South Carolina Conference. Quick work, you will say, to take an uneducated, unfledged youth, just converted the previous July, and send him out to preach the following fall! Well, that was the settled policy of our forefathers, and when we take into the account their mode of training and encouraging the young members of the church to immediate activity and usefulness, there appears a world of good practical sense in the course they pursued. When any man professed to know God in the pardon of his sins, if the head of a family he was expected to institute family prayer in his house immediately, and all the male members especially were expected and called on to take part in the public prayers of the class room and prayer meetings; and before they learned to shirk their duty they were put to work. The consequence was they grew in grace and soon developed what amount of gifts the Head of the Church had favored them with, and many of them became mighty in prayer. Then the non-praying members were the exceptions to the general rule; but now the matter is sadly reversed, and the few gifted men in prayer make the exception. In some churches we are quite out of praying men. The dear brethren have no gifts! The good Lord pity their extreme weakness! We have doctors and lawyers, school teachers and literary professors of various classes, judges of courts and statesmen, who cannot lead in prayer in any of the social meetings of the church, or even in their own families; and when we affectionately invite, and even urge them to the discharge of this plain, characteristic, Christian duty they promptly excuse themselves by saying they are utterly deficient in gifts. Wonder how they found out they have no gifts, seeing they never yet have made a fair experiment of the matter. But we must take the brethren at their word. They are men of truth, and they say they have no gifts for oral prayer. We are truly sorry that they, with all their pretensions to superior learning, are so untalented that they can't help us a little at the social meetings of the church. We think both themselves and the interests of the church are suffering by their failure at this point; but if it cannot be remedied we must still depend on the sisterhood to help us hold our prayer meetings. How Ira Byrd started out on this line we propose to set before the reader in our next number. J. G. JONES.

Christian Unity vs. Sectarianism.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of the thirteenth of April an article appeared with the heading, "Sectarianism and Christian Unity," over the initials C. C., in which propositions are stated which cannot be proved. Some good results are referred to sectarianism as their cause. The writer means by sectarianism simply differences as to doctrine and discipline, excluding "sectarian spirit" and "bigotry." This is a mild sectarianism, and it is less evil than that which exists.

This is the true position; it is neither impossible in itself nor inconsistent with the nature of things to effect corporate unity. We must have the spiritual, internal union before we can have the "co operate union." Community of feeling tends to community of opinion. There are some reasons for dissenting from Bro. C. C.'s positions.

Calvinists may say that "sectarianism is the order of God;" but a Methodist should not say that God ordered what is productive of more harm than good (or as much,) if it is not evil in itself.

"Sectarianism is the order of God!" Bro. C. C., do not say that. Its work has been "to destroy the sectarian spirit" and "to paralyze bigotry;" therefore these are no part of it, and it has reference only to doctrine and church government. Did God order this sectarianism, mild as it is? Did God order that one sect should believe the atonement universal, and that another should believe it partial? You say, yes; I say, no. If he did, one or the other is deceived by the very God of truth!

"There is one Spirit;" and he is promised as our guide "into all truth." Therefore preachers pray that this Spirit may teach them the meaning of their texts; and this Spirit would not teach one Calvinism and another Arminianism. He will not teach a truth, and then teach the contrary as truth.

"There is one Son, one faith." This "faith"—system of truth—is consistent with itself, and therefore cannot teach both Calvinism and Arminianism, for these are contraries. Indeed, one is a flat denial of the other. These two thoughts sufficiently prove that sectarianism is not the order of God. It is doubtful whether sectarianism has accelerated those good results which Bro. C. C. refers to it; it is less doubtful whether it has retarded them. These good results are more reasonably to be attributed to the power of the essential truths of the gospel, which is far superior to that of the tenets that distinguish the sects. Baptists and Methodists, differing perhaps as widely as any Protestant sects, have outstripped all other denominations, because they have insisted more than others on the witness of the Spirit. In proportion as a sect approximates the exact truth of the gospel, it will show forth "the power of God." If each possessed the whole truth—which would annihilate sectarianism—the evils of division would no longer exist, while all the good results erroneously attributed to sectarianism would still be realized in incalculably greater measure, and the blessings of an undivided brotherhood, which cannot attend a divided fraternity, would still be our portion. It was a slander to say that St. Paul taught men to "do evil that good may come;" how much more to say this of God! God will not compel men to differ. God is not divided; neither is his truth. The will follows the affections, and both obscure the intellect; and thus men come to "believe a lie." Arminianism or Calvinism is falsehood, for one contradicts the other. Can it be said that, because men believe absurdities, God even permits it? God desires the good of man, and teaches him the truth; it would scarcely be creditable to him to say that he teaches falsehood "that good may come!" "There are some things," it is said, "which are not the objects of power;" so in respect to permission.

Can sectarianism "annihilate bigotry?" No. It is the twin sister of sectarianism. As long as men had no occasion to say, "We are the church; come to us," there was no occasion for realizing the evils of bigotry. Bigotry cannot consist with unanimity of sentiment. And this can never be attained as long as prejudice sways the intellect, or other bias-giving cause diverts it from the conclusion which, passion and will aside, it would inevitably reach when free to obey the truth which compels it. Bigotry is not "an accident of the sects;" but sectarianism immediately furnishes the ground, or at least the occasion of it. Bigotry is in human nature; so is sectarianism. Religion and sectarianism are opposed to each other; but religion is overcoming, because it is stronger. High-churchism has most bigotry, because it has least religion. The sects, says Bro. C. C., "are learning each other; above all, that there are inherent, circumstantial and educational differences in human minds, which necessitate different beliefs and different tastes." Facts prove the contrary. The necessity in the case is that, with the same premises, all minds must come to the same conclusion. In all lands, among all ranks of men, and under the same "educational" training, men differ. Hence there is no necessity in the case. "Circumstantial and educational differences" influence belief—too much, alas!—but neither these nor "inherent" differences "necessitate" diversity of belief.

"Had the church remained undivided" there would have been but one creed. The word of God teaches everything which Bro. C. C. thinks sectarianism has taught the world; and it sufficiently provides for all the good results—and more abundantly—which he thinks sectarianism has secured us.

He says: "It is in harmony with the analogy of a varied nature." This does not express his idea with precision; but he is mistaken. Nature is consistent with itself. Natural philosophy and chemistry are neither unfriendly nor diametrically opposed. There are various truths in nature; so in the Christian system; but these truths are not mutually destructive. There is no harmony between the distinguishing doctrines of Calvinism and those of Arminianism. There is no harmony in the discordance of the various theological systems.

Does free thought necessitate different beliefs?

What evils necessarily spring from an undivided church? None whatever. When Jesuitism comes "in the guise of church unity" she puts on a garment which is both beautiful and scriptural, and only imitates her father, the devil, who "is transformed into an angel of light." Is corruption of doctrine and morals necessarily consequent upon anti-sectarian unification? Is it necessary that, should the sects ever agree upon an expression of doctrine consistent with itself and with the Bible, that very unification corrupt the morals, trammel the intellect, destroy itself? What of heaven? If we cannot find in anti-sectarianism anything leading necessarily, or having that tendency, to results such as Bro. C. C. thinks would have followed had the church remained undivided, then must we look for causes extraneous to it—even to the soil in which the seed was sown. And if we cannot find in sectarianism anything to produce the good results of which Bro. C. C. makes it the cause, we must look for it somewhere else. This is true in respect to a genuine Christian unification. And this supposes not an absolute oneness in church government (which may be precluded by circumstances,) but a uniformity of doctrine. God does not equivocate! Revelation is not two-sided! In accordance with Bro. C. C.'s positions, popery is right, Universalism is right, Unitarianism is right, etc.! Sectarianism cannot be called "right" and "the order of God," because it has apparently brought some good fruits. It is all in the appearance. "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" Yes. But did God order that Nazareth be the wickedest place in the wickedest province of all Asia Minor that he might bring out of it the Son Jesus? Eternally no. Sectarianism is to be deplored rather than censured. With Bro. C. C. let us say: "Thank God! the mission of sectarianism is nearly accomplished"—not because it is "the order of God" or "a glorious thing," but because it is evil, and an evidence of "strifes and divisions." "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind;" and let all endeavor to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

UNITAS.

POWER ON HER HEAD.

The Corinthian women thought to assert the quality of the sexes by thrusting themselves into the habits and duties of the masculine sex, to the neglect of their own, by praying and prophesying in church instead of ruling their households. As a sign of their enfranchisement from the degrading bonds of heathenism, as a proof that they were the equals of men, they appeared in public unvailed, and so violated the decorum of their sex as then understood; in short, they became bad as women that they might prove themselves as good as men. The honor of the Christian community was at stake. Only women convicted of adultery had their hair shorn; only women of notoriously abandoned life dispensed with a vail. The Greek women, the honorable women, invariably put on a vail, or drew their peplum, or shawl, over head and face when they left their homes. The heathen were quick to misconceive any departure from custom, and any innovation or rule on the part of the church. For many years they believed the most horrible misrepresentations of the simple, innocent "love-feasts" of the primitive church—talked of infants murdered to supply the tables, and of vicious indulgences resembling those of the Corinthian temples or the sacred groves. And had the Christian women gone unvailed, when the absence of the vail was the open stamp of harlotry, we can easily conceive what their neighbors would have thought of them, what a fatal obstacle would have been thrown in the path of the infant church.

When we are puzzled by a word or phrase in the apostle's writings, we are too apt to make it a mere question of words—to forget how habitually he had great fixed thoughts in his mind, and alluded to them even when he did not give them clear expression. Now one of his great fixed thoughts is that we rule by serving, that to become great we must make ourselves of the least, that to rise we must stoop, that the lord of all is the servant and minister of all. Possibly he alludes to it here. He has been describing the position of woman. She is the dependent helpmeet or minister of man. But if she is to serve she must be strong. The minister of man must have "power" on her head. To the Hebrews unshorn hair, like that of Samson, was the sign of strength or power. And the unshorn hair of the woman is "the power," or the symbol of the power, which her service requires. This I take to be the apostle's thought. And does not nature itself confirm his thought? Is not a woman's hair a strength to her as well as a glory? How often has a thread of golden hair drawn strong men across the world! How often have soft locks and bright meshes proved stronger bonds than bars of steel! Who does not remember the little packet, all blotted with tears, which they found in a corner of poor Swift's desk, with these words on it, "Only a woman's hair?"—words than which few are more pathetic, words heavy with the sadness of a fierce passion, and a fierce conflict with passion, long since past. This, then, I think, is "the power" which the woman has, and ought to have, on her head—the power of unshorn hair, the power of the soft flowing tresses with which nature has vailed and adorned her head.—Sunday Magazine.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE collection in the churches of the presbytery of Philadelphia for the memorial fund amounts to about $80,000.

THE leading supportors of Dollinger met at Bonn, Germany, on the fifteenth of April, and decided to call a general assembly in September. Will the Catholic Church repeat the folly of the sixteenth century?

IN NINE Baptist theological seminaries, namely: Newton, Hamilton, Rochester, Greenville, Chicago, Columbian, Crozar and Bethel, there are thirty-five instructors, three hundred and thirty-seven students, and endowments to the sum of $1,226,000.

IN AUGUST, if he be spared, Mr. Spurgeon will reach the thousandth sermon which he has printed. The weekly issue now amounts to twenty-five thousand; and it is proposed to commemorate the event by raising £1,000 toward new schools and class rooms for his college.

THE United Presbyterian Church of Scotland gives a summary of its work and workers in seven missionary posts in Africa, India and China, Jamaica and Trinidad showing 56 European missionaries and teachers, 151 native workers and teachers, 48 stations, 5,740 communicants, 113 week-day schools, and 6,903 pupils.

THE curse follows the Jews with unrelenting severity. In every country they suffer woes of which other people knew nothing. The Emperor of Russia has recently issued an order compelling them to cut their hair short, and prescribing for them a certain style of dress. He also forbids them to worship in Hebrew or Polish.

THE Universalists are agitating for a church edifice in Washington. At present worship is conducted in a public hall, and the General Convention supplies the pulpit by a discriminate selection from the representative clergymen of the denomination. This system has not been found to work as well as if there had been a resident pastor.

REV. J. G. COCHRAN writes to the Presbyterian Record of the increased interest of the Mussulmans and the Moollahs in the gospel, and says: "We all marvel at their accessibility, and every week surprises us with new cases of inquiry. I can safely say we have seen more of hopeful interest within the last year than we saw in the previous ten years."

THE telegraph tells us that a petition, subscribed by twenty-eight Catholic bishops of Austria and Hungary, has been presented to the Austrian Emperor, praying for intervention in the Roman question, and requesting that the Emperor and his government lend their aid and influence toward the establishment of the independence of the papal see and the restoration of Rome to the holy father. This Francis Joseph peremptorily refuses to do.

RECENT ADVICES from Paris state that the Methodist pastors, Rev. Emile Cook and colleague, and Rev. W. Gibson and family, were all safe and well. The insurgent authorities made numerous arrests of ecclesiastics, but none of the Protestant ministers, so far as we have learned, were of the number. The internal condition of the city has been fearful, and the escape of the various pastors from all harm thus far is a matter for special gratitude.

THREE missionaries of the Society of Friends have been laboring for four years past in Madagascar. The last number of the London Friend tells of the departure for the same field of service of Henry Ecroyd Clark and wife, and William Johnson, who go under the auspices of the Friends' Foreign Missionary Association. These missionaries will labor rather as teachers than as ministers, but they believe that they are following a distinct call of the Lord to the work.

THE Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church held its first anniversary at Philadelphia on April 26. The society has been in actual operation but six months. Thirty-seven auxiliaries were reported, twelve of which have assumed each the entire support of a lady missionary. In addition, twenty-five Children's Missionary Bands have been organized, and are doing service delighted and delightful. The receipts of these first six months have been $5,245, of which $4,805 have been paid over to the Church Board for specified objects.

THE American Bible Society convened for its fifty-fifth anniversary on the eleventh ultimo. President James Lennox occupied the chair. The annual report shows that there are on the rolls 64 life directors and 1,880 life members. During 1870 three sets of new electrotypes have been made, besides plates for the Arabic Scriptures in progress at Beirut. Seven new publications at the Bible House, all in foreign languages, besides others printed or authorized abroad, have been issued. The number of volumes printed at the Bible House was 1,031,800; number printed and purchased abroad, 164,997; making a total of 1,196,797 volumes. Volumes issued, 1,107,721, including 938,548 from the Bible House, and 169,179 abroad; the latter representing some fifty-eight different languages and dialects. The gratuitous work for the year amounted in value to $234,352. The colporteurs of the society visited 644,476 families, and found 72,306 of these destitute of the Bible. Over 118,500 families, schools and individuals were supplied with copies of the Scripture. The receipts of the year $729,464, and the payments $651,135.—Christian Union.

THE forty-sixth anniversary of the American Tract Society was held at Association Hall on Wednesday evening, May 10. Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, D. D., presided, and addresses were made by Rev. Dr. Heacock, of Buffalo, Rev. Merritt Richardson and Hon. William E. Dodge. The treasurer reported that the receipts for the year were $121,487.15; the sales, $370,116.47. Amount expended in manufacturing books and tracts, $237,028.36; periodicals, $179,046.70; agencies and depositories, $113,787.84; district secretaries, $12,133.93; appropriations for foreign lands, $6,000; and other expenses, $43,791. Total, $491,787.83; leaving a balance in the treasury of $394.67. The whole number of books and tracts distributed during the year reaches the enormous amount of 16,000,000. The number of new publications issued was 235.—Independent.

THE forty-third anniversary of the American Seaman's Friend Society was celebrated on Monday evening, at Association Hall. Mr. William A. Booth, the president, occupied the chair, and addresses were made by Rev. Edward Hopper, D. D., Rev. J. A. French, Rev. H. M. Gallaher and Rev. N. H. Schenck, D. D. During the year the society has extended its operations through South America and most of the European countries, and has 21 chaplains in the principal cities of the Union. It has sent 726 libraries to sea, on vessels carrying 17,861 men, making the total number of libraries sent out since the work was inaugurated, 13 years ago, 3,713, containing at least 180,000 volumes, and accessible in their frequent reshipments to 167,931 men. The Sailors' Home, in Cherry street, during the last year had 1,962 boarders; an increase of 287 over the past year, and of 999 over the previous year. There have been deposited with the superintendent for safe keeping $43,411; of which $24,140 were sent to relatives, and $5,210 placed in savings banks. During the existence of the home it has saved to seamen and their families $1,500,000. The Saturday evening prayer meeting is well attended. The total expense for the year ending May 1 was $63,830; receipts, $60,360; indebtedness, $3,470.—Independent.

THE opposition to the infallibility dogma seems to be gaining ground under the impulse which Dr. Dollinger gave it, not only in Bavaria, but throughout Germany, and in Switzerland and Austria. A mass meeting of Roman Catholics in Munich drafted an address to the King in support of Dr. Dollinger's position. It was addressed by Prof. Huber. During Easter week Dr. Dollinger conducted the divine services at the court ceremonies, as usual. Dr. Dollinger is strongly supported by Dr. Friedrich. The Independance Belge publishes an address to Dr. Dollinger from the professors of the Roman University, avowing their unqualified acceptance of his views, and protest against the inference that Italian Catholics agree with the Roman curia. The address concludes: "We welcome your voice with hope, and pray for your just cause, which is also ours, and that of all Christian civilization. And we say this to you publicly, in order that in the future, in your free and equitable judgment, you may separate the responsibility of our people from that of the Italian episcopate. The episcopate which dwells in our land is of no country, and has nothing in common with the Italian people. The syllabus, infallibility, papal autocracy—all these negations of divine and human reason—compose a system which has no connection with the Italian character, with Italian thought. Our Roman, that is to say, Italian race, abhors as much as the Germanic race that evil system of the bondage of the understanding.—Italian morality is no longer that of the sixteenth century, and we know to-day that for the sacred cause of reform the German and Italian people will fight and conquer together." The municipal council of Vienna unanimously passed a resolution of sympathy with Dr. Dollinger.—Methodist.

SOME ONE, feeling that actions are better than words, has said: "We read of the acts of the apostles, but never of their resolutions."

DEATH OF BISHOP CLARK.

BISHOP CLARK, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who has been ill for several weeks, died May 23. A paragraph from the New York Christian Advocate, written at a time when his death was hourly expected, gives the following biographical facts:

Bishop Clark was fifty-nine years old on the twelfth of February last. He entered the traveling ministry in 1843; was elected editor of the Ladies' Repository in 1852, serving in that office for twelve years. In 1864 he was elected a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church. As the result of overwork his health began to fail about a year ago, but with characteristic energy he continued to meet all the Conferences assigned him in the episcopal programme, not yielding fully to the inroads of disease until during the recent session of the New York Conference. This was the last of the spring Conferences over which he was to preside.

WE HAVE RECEIVED a programme of the commencement exercises of the Memphis Conference Female Institute, Jackson, Tennessee. The sermon, June 11, is to be delivered by Bishop Marvin. The address before the society of the alumni, on the thirteenth, is to be by our friend, Rev. S. B. Suratt.

Rev. Lovick Pierce, D. D., delivers an address to the graduating class on the fourteenth. With such an array of speakers, besides the addresses of pupils, exhibition of literary societies, and the annual concert, the occasion is bound to be most interesting.

MISSIONARY DEBT.

The following amounts have been received and placed to the credit of the treasurer since our last acknowledgment, viz: Rev. R. Parvin, $25; Rev. John Pipes, $25; Rev. J. E. Cobb, D. D., $25.

DEATH OF REV. S. V. BLAKE.—This esteemed and well known minister of the Baltimore Conference died on Tuesday of last week, May 9, at the new parsonage adjoining the Monument Street Methodist Episcopal Church. In the absence of fuller details we copy the following memorial notice from the Baltimore Daily Sun: "His last illness was of comparatively brief duration and very painful, but its sudden and fatal termination was unexpected, even by his attending physician. Mr. Blake was one of the most prominent ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and probably one of the best known clergymen of that denomination in this community. He was born in Easton, Talbot county, Maryland, in 1813, and was consequently fifty-eight years of age. He entered the Baltimore Conference in 1835. Revs. Thomas Myers and E. P. Phelps, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Revs. John S. Martin and Thomas O. Summers, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, are, perhaps, his only surviving classmates."—New York Christian Advocate.

DEATH OF A JEWISH RABBI.—Rev. A. Oppenheimer, of Cumberland, Maryland, fell dead in his room, on Sunday, April 23, while lighting his pipe. He was thirty-five years of age, and is said to have been a very pious and good man. He was formerly a resident of Norfolk, Virginia.

A PURE CHURCH.

Imperfection cleaves to all earthly things. The merely human side of the church has its flaws, its errors of doctrine and defects of government. It is also inseparable from the organization of a religious community that hypocrites and worldly-minded persons should enter the fold. It was so in the times of the apostles, and so it will be to the end. Some who have entered legitimately, as sincere and converted souls, fall from their steadfastness, become backsliders in heart, and walk disorderly, while they cling to the tie of membership. In the earliest ages it was so, as is abundantly evident from the New Testament Scriptures. Paul wept over the fact that the enemies of the cross, "who mind earthly things," were in the church, and he warned the faithful against their influence. He was troubled with such men as Demas, who "loved this present world," and Hymenæus and Alexander, who made shipwreck of the faith, and whom he "delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme." Judaism, paganism, and carnal and ambitious professors crept into the godly company, or fell back into these aspects of error and sin after running well for a season. A state of conflict and unrest is exhibited as far as the inspired annals go; and the constant effort and aim of the church to throw off these discordant elements, to cast out these foreign materials, and to free itself from the snares and entanglements of a false Christianity, is disclosed.

Christ, in his dealings with the churches of Asia, proclaims the necessity of maintaining a pure life and a rigorous discipline. Even lukewarmness is exceedingly offensive to him. He knew the works, charity, service and faith of Thyatira, but the tolerance of "that woman, Jezebel," brought upon them his severest censure and rebuke. The good of Pergamos is acknowledged—her fidelity in persecution, and under the heaviest trials—but the doctrine of Balaam and of the Nicolaitanes call for condemnation. "Repent, or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth." There were a few names, even in Sardis, which had not defiled their garments; but "if therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee." The rich, lukewarm and carnal Laodiceans are exhorted to be zealous and repent. These testimonies are uniformly "what the Spirit saith unto the churches." They must keep themselves pure or be disowned of Christ, and perish at length under the weight of sin and error which they have suffered to gather in their midst. The Bride, the Lamb's wife, must be adorned with a spotless radiance, "all glorious within." To this end Christ loved the church and gave himself for it; it was the supreme purpose in the work of redemption, the grand ideal in the plan of salvation, "that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing." Where a church is overslaughed by carnal or worldly-minded members, or where this class is permitted to influence and direct its operations, disastrous results are inevitable. All the purposes for which it is instituted are frustrated. There is no real aggression against sin, and the penitent and spiritually-minded are not nourished and helped in their efforts after holiness.

To maintain purity in the church the door of admission should be carefully guarded. An indiscriminate invitation is dangerous, and may lead to manifold evils. In old times the class-meeting condition was an excellent sieve to strain out much material which was unfit for reception; and the obligations which must now be assumed are doubtless sufficient when solemnly exacted and subscribed. There may be, however, too much haste on the part of the pastor, and too great an anxiety to increase the numbers. Care must be taken that we lay hands suddenly on no man, and that none be received until they come up to the time-honored condition of "a desire to flee from the wrath to come, and to be saved from their sins." With us the pastor alone judges of the candidate and admits him. The state of the church is therefore largely dependent upon the prudent exercise of this most important prerogative. The fruits of "the desire to flee from the wrath to come, and to be saved from sin," should be apparent in something more than the bare application for membership, and they should be so clearly manifest as to leave no doubt that the person applying is truly penitent and deeply concerned about his soul—that he has forsaken all outward sin, and is "earnestly groaning for redemption." A careless and over-hasty mode of admission is one of the causes of evil which needs to be avoided. Times of revival and of unusual religious interest should form no exception to the exercise of caution and vigilance. The kingdom of heaven may suffer violence, to its detriment rather than to its advantage; and the violent may take it by force in a way to inflict serious damage.

While the door of admission has to be guarded with care, it is quite as important that discipline should be enforced, and that the rules be obeyed. If the condition of entrance does not continue to manifest itself, the member is in a false position, in which neither the church nor himself is benefited. Where there is disorderly walking and unchristian conduct, and all milder means fail, excision is of course demanded. Too much leniency is neither just to the church nor best for the delinquent. Timely and even rigorous discipline will not only vindicate the purity of the church, but it will prove the most effectual means of reclaiming those that are out of the way. We have known instances where we believe prompt discipline would have saved some who have died in the church and lost their souls. Turning members out is as important to the well-being of the church as receiving them in, and a far more difficult and embarrassing duty. The fathers in our ministry say that we are too negligent now in discipline, and they are probably right. We are often, no doubt, too loose in our way of receiving members, and still more lax in bearing with incorrigible offenders. Preaching alone will not correct prevailing evils, and a sermon which concedes their existence in the church may sometimes be construed as leaving them entirely to the individual conscience. Discipline, well and prudently enforced, is worth more than sermons to meet and correct some of the chronic and popular delinquencies of the times. Some things that might be argued with a sinner are not to be argued at all with a member of the church. Certain it is that the church has a testimony to bear to the truth in the way of discipline, as well as in the form of creeds and homilies; and it is in this that her testimony of the present day is most imperfect. When men are turned out for drinking whisky, our position will be understood on the temperance question; and when the fashionable and frivolous are expelled for their ungodly diversions, we shall not require so many labored expositions of the ethics of the stage and the ball-room. To have a pure church, then, it is necessary that members be received with care, and that discipline be administered with firmness. There are other things to be taken into the account, but we make these two points for the present. Let these be well attended to, and we shall have done much toward securing spirituality and holiness in the church of Christ.

WE ARE REQUESTED to announce that a French service and sermon, in connection with the Protestant Episcopal Church, will be held every Sunday, at six P. M., in Christ church of this city. The service will be conducted by Rev. Louis Bissey, who has lately left the Catholic Church. Mr. Bissey informs us that he expects Father Hyacinthe here in the fall. He is sanguine in his belief that important events are impending in the Catholic Church in Europe.

THE COMMUNE.

Communism, in one form or another, is nearly as old as the world. The perplexing problem of organizing society so as to avoid the evils of poverty, suffering and oppression, has occupied the thoughts of many of the most gifted minds.

An attempt at its solution is seen in the republic of Plato, in which the great Greek philosopher divided his society into magistrates, warriors and laborers, and in which he advocates a community of property and of wives. After him, and toward the close of the middle ages, we have the speculations of Tommaso Campanella, who entertained the project of a universal, spiritual and temporal monarchy, founded upon Christian principles, and designed to restore a perfect unity to the Church and State. Sir Thomas More's "Utopia," De Foe's "Essay on Projects," and Bacon's "New Atlantis" were in the socialistic direction.

Socialism and communism are nearly related. Both are an attempt at a social organization which shall remedy the admitted evils of society, and secure the happiness of all. Among the religious socialists may be enumerated the ancient Essenes, and in more modern times the Moravians, Shakers, and the Oneida societies of perfectionists. Among the social reformers, who gave their speculations a scientific cast, were St. Simon, of France, and the celebrated Fourier. Robert Owen, of England, was a cotemporary of St. Simon, and both were elaborating their schemes of social regeneration before the French revolution of 1789. Fourier came after St. Simon and Owen, and has done more, perhaps, than any other man to imbue the French mind with extravagant and impracticable social and political ideas.

"The Commune de Paris," which occupied so important a place in French affairs from 1789 to 1794, represented the extreme ideas of socialism, and doubtless in the beginning were animated by a sincere enthusiasm for the regeneration of their country. Casting off, however, all allegiance to religion and to social order, "the reign of terror" was the legitimate development of the principles which they espoused. The Commune of 1871 has its germ in the wild and mischievous speculations of the apostles of socialism, and is the same in principle and in spirit as the organization which found its embodiment and overthrow in the person of Robespierre.

Communism, in its origin as a plan for the better organization of society, was not essentially bad. The object was good, and some of its principles are far from unqualified evil. The chief defect is in its ungodliness—the ignoring of the Christian religion, and an attempt to reconstruct society without religion and in opposition to it. The late bloody orgasm is the manifestation of an atheistic civilization, of a state of social corruption, in which the authority and restraints of divine revelation are cast off and formally repudiated. The following extracts are from the Journal of Commerce:

There is no definition of communism which can be accepted as complete. No two communists exactly agree upon the limits of their theory. But, as near as we can get at an understanding of communism pure and simple, it means an equal division of all real estate and all property among the communists, an abolition of all orders and classes, a suppression of churches and the priesthood, a confiscation of church possessions, and the enforced reduction of mankind to a dead level of social equality. This, we take it, is a moderate statement of the communistic idea as it is written out by poor and lazy enthusiasts in the seclusion of their garrets—men of the kind depicted by Hogarth in his sketch of the impecunious lunatic figuring on his plan for paying the national debt of England. They are persons who have done hardly an honest day's work in their lives, who prolong their worthless existence by borrowing money which they never mean to pay, who are totally ignorant of the world save its worse part, and of human nature except in its lowest phase. These people are the theorists of communism, and some of them are silly enough to believe in good earnest that the absurdity is practicable. They are not necessarily vindictive and blood-thirsty. The better of their number would prefer to have the grand shake-up take place peaceably and quietly; but, since society will not allow itself to be turned topsy-turvy without resistance, they expect the great reformation to be brought about by a social earthquake which will level every existing institution to the ground, and that from out the following chaos of blood and fire the commune would rise as by magic and thenceforth flourish in perpetuity, all the privileged orders and the rich men who survived the horrors of the upheavel docilely acquiescing in the new order of things. It is the belief of these theorists that communism established in any one country like France would set such a beautiful example of government that all other peoples would speedily fall in love with it and imitate its example, and that the inhabitants of the whole world would become a gigantic commune, living together in perfect peace and harmony—in other words, the millennium would have descended upon this sin-stricken earth. A lovely picture, truly. But when we turn from the eloquent pages in which communism is explained as a theory, to the bloody way that it is worked out in practice in France to-day, we see that it means only the most intense selfishness of the few leaders, envy, avarice, robbery, murder, the tyranny of unscrupulous talent over besotted ignorance, and every black passion of the human heart let loose like hyenas to feed upon the carcase of civilization.

The subject, though terribly serious, has its ludicrous side—as, for instance, the abortive movement of a little pack of communists, sympathizers with the Paris reds, in Brussels, not long ago. These fellows met for the purpose of exchanging views upon communism, and it is amusing to notice what a confusion of ideas prevails among them, and what a flood of nonsense they poured out. Citizen Kats said that "the germ of the Christian idea is in the commune;" but Citizen Le Clerq maintained that "the Bible is the most ignoble and infamous book, justifying all kinds of crimes;" while Citizen Steens remarked that "Christ and the Bible have been justly stigmatized." Citizen Kats was quite alone in trying to identify communism with Christian principles, all the other speakers believing that the two things are as far apart as possible, in which respect they are right. One citizen spoke of Say, the writer of the great work on "Political Economy," as the "infamous author of the execrable principle of the relations of supply and demand," as if a self-evident axiom like that could be invented by anybody. One citizen declared that "the property of the soil must become common property," and that would regenerate society. Another citizen asserted that "the only remedy for all evils lies in the abolition of interest on capital." A third stated his panacea to be that "the privilege of property (personal, as well as real, we suppose) must be abolished, for all crimes are committed by and for proprietors." And so on through the gamut of ribaldry and nonsense.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

MEMORIALS OF METHODISM IN VIRGINIA, from its introduction into the State, in the year 1772, to the year 1829. By the Rev. William W. Bennett, D. D. Richmond: Published by the author, 1871. To be ordered of the publisher. Price, by mail, $2.

This volume is a portly 12mo of 741 pages, in large, clear type, and handsomely bound in muslin. The frontispiece is most fittingly adorned with a photograph likeness of Bishop Early, and the work is appropriately dedicated to the Virginia Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Methodism in Virginia affords a field for historical research and description of surpassing richness and interest, and the author has worked up his materials with diligence, and has made a most readable and instructive book. He has occasion to portray the life and character of many of the most eminent and noted men of early Methodism, and his biographical sketches and incidents are drawn with freshness and vigor. We hail with pleasure the appearance of the histories which have of late enriched our denominational literature. They will renew the youth of the church, and powerfully help to keep the primitive fire burning on her altars. The work of Dr. Bennett will prove a most acceptable offering to our people, and a means of usefulness and edification to all who shall possess themselves of it. As a sample of the contents, we select almost at random incidents in the labors of John Easter:

"Many thrilling scenes under his preaching yet linger among the people in those counties where he principally labored. A most extraordinary display of his faith was witnessed in Brunswick. At Merritt's meeting house a quarterly meeting was in progress, and so vast was the concourse of people from miles round, that the services conducted in a beautiful grove the church. In the midst of t ercises a heavy cloud arose, swept rapidly on toward the of worship. From the skirts grove the rain could be seen on across the fields. The were in consternation; no could hold a third of the multi and they were about to scatter directions. Easter rose in the pit in the midst of the conf 'Brethren,' cried he at the t his voice, 'be still, while I call God to stay the clouds, till his can be preached to perishing ners.' Arrested by his voice manner, they stood between and fear. He kneeled down offered a fervent prayer that would then stay the rain, tha work might go on, and after send refreshing showers. Wh prayed the angry cloud, as it s rolled up toward them, was se part asunder in the midst, pas either side of the ground a close again beyond, leaving a several hundred yards in ci ference perfectly dry. The morning a copious rain fell and the fields that had been were well watered. It is nec to say that this visible answe prayer filled the minds of the p with awe, and gave a great im to the work of God.

"He was a man who pr nothing doubting, and he inf his own spirit into the hear those to whom he preached. him, to ask was to receive. To God was always at hand; 'Ask ye shall receive' was the promis plead always at the mercy seat; he never plead in vain.

"He was present at a mee with several other preachers. T was powerful and pointed pre ing, but no visible effect; at close of an earnest sermon Eas rose to conclude the services. coolly directed his exhortation the Christians present, and ur them to pray, with the assura that he knew souls would be c verted before the meeting clos God indorsed the word of his se ant; and before they left the ho several persons were powerfully c verted.

"At another meeting, says one his cotemporaries, he rose after fine but apparently ineffectual s mon from James O'Kelly, and open an exhortation with the positi declaration that seven persons wo be converted before the meeti ended. 'The pious part of the co gregation were much alarmed, a thought his assertion bold and pr sumptuous. But he began to e hort, and the spirit of Elijah's G came upon him, and the people fe as if he had smitten them with th prophet's mantle; great power fe on the congregation, and before th meeting closed more than seve souls were powerfully converted.'

"The following marvelous accoun is fully authenticated. He was holding a meeting in the forest; i was in the mid-day of his fame an power; hundreds upon hundred had gathered to hear the wonderfu man. In the midst of his sermon while all were hanging on his lips i breathless silence, suddenly a rush ing sound as of a mighty wind smote the ears of the hearers. All eyes were instantly turned upward, but no storm had smitten the for est; not a twig, not a leaf stirred still the awful sound swept over and around them. Instantly several hundred horses broke from their fastenings and rushed wildly in all directions through the woods.—Hundreds of men and women fell flat on the ground, struck down by the mighty power of God. The cry of conviction that arose was appalling; even the holiest Christians trembled in the presence of that mysterious sound. The work of conversion was as instantaneous as the work of conviction, and many were the witnesses for Christ that arose in the midst of the awe-struck multitude. The effects of this display of divine power were great indeed on the minds of the people far and near. The work spread like fire in dry stubble, and hundreds were added to the church. The battle began in this woods meeting, and God seemed to say to the leader of the host of Israel as he had said to David: 'When thou shalt hear a sound of going in the tops of the mulberry trees, then thou shalt go out to battle; for God is gone forth before thee, to smite the host of the Philistines.'".

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF HENRY LORD BROUGHAM. Written by himself. In three volumes. Volume I. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, 1871.

Lord Brougham was born in 1778, and lived to be nearly ninety years old. The Life and Times was written in the last years of his long career, and we suppose brings his history down nearly to the time of his death. He was an eminent jurist, a literary man of high order, and a statesman of great distinction. His active and mature life covers a most interesting and important period in the history of Europe, and stretches over a longer space than that of any one eminent man of his times. We are prepared, then, to anticipate that this must be a book of great interest; and especially as it is the views and reminiscences of one who was an eminent actor in the literature and politics of his age, and had the best opportunity of knowing the most momentous as well as many most curious things. This anticipation, by whomsoever entertained, will, we think, be fully realized when the work is read and enjoyed. The first volume is to us of absorbing interest, and brings the autobiography down to 1811, and is closed by correspondence, the last of which bears that date. For sale by George Ellis & Brother, New Orleans.

From Roberts Brothers, Boston, we have received two capital little volumes: Ad Clerum: Advice to a Young Preacher, by Joseph Parker, D. D.; and Roman Imperialism and other Lectures and Essays, by J. R. Seeley, M. A.

Ad Clerum is by the author of Ecce Deus, and is a book that anybody can read with interest, even in a hot June day. It is an excellent work, especially for young preachers who have not gone too far to unlearn their mistaken views and practices. The author is wide awake in every page, and his book will be read and do good.

Roman Imperialism is by the author of Ecce Homo. Mr. Seeley is professor of modern history in the University of Cambridge. Three chapters are devoted to Roman Imperialism, and the seven chapters which follow are on various subjects, such as: Milton's Political Opinions; Milton's Poetry; English in Schools; The Church as a Teacher of Morality, etc. We need not say that these subjects are treated ably and in an attractive and finished style.

The Ooilvies is one of Miss Muloch's earliest works. We are indebted to the publishers, Harper & Brothers, for a copy of their new and elegant edition. For sale by Ellis & Brother, New Orleans.

The Little Sower is another little book of songs and music for Sabbath schools. Published at the Baxter University of Music, Friendship, Alleghany county, New York. There are some songs in it that we should exclude from the Sunday school, and from being sung at all, for that matter.

The Sunday School Magazine for June is a good number. Dr. Haygood is making this magazine a most invaluable auxiliary to the Sunday school work in our church; and its influence in raising the standard of instruction, and in bringing teachers to rightly estimate their duties and responsibilities, is already being felt.

We have received the May number of the Sunday Magazine, which contains the usual amount of entertaining matter.

Scribner's Monthly for June is a splendid number, profusely illustrated, and with a tempting array of articles. The Wonders of the Yellowstone is continued; the Freedom of the Pulpit, Topics of the Time, Home and Society, and the Illinois and St. Louis Bridge, are in the table of contents.

The Sunday School Journal, published by Carlton & Lanahan, is received; also the Phrenological Journal for June, published by Samuel R. Wells, New York.

The May number of Good Words is about up to its usual standard of interest. In the table of contents we may mention: The High Mills; Grots and Groves; Thoughts in the Temptation of Our Lord; First Impressions of France and Italy.

The Galaxy for June, among other articles, has Words and their Uses; The Campaigns of Robert E. Lee; Sepulture; The Nether Side of New York. For a frontispiece we have a likeness of the great French author, M. Guizot.

Littell's Living Age of May 20 contains an article on Thomas Hood, one on the Emotion of Conviction, and another on the Excommunication of Dr. Dollinger.

We have received a pamphlet entitled the Thirteenth Annual Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Louisiana, 1871. It is the journal of the council, and contains much information concerning the denomination in Louisiana.

We have received the catalogue of Emory and Henry College, session of 1870–71. This institution, located in the mountains of Virginia, has an able faculty, of which Dr. E. Wiley is the head. There is a total attendance this session of one hundred and eighty students. Emory and Henry is evidently prospering, and it fully merits the large patronage which it receives.

Among the June monthlies, Lippincott's Magazine is entitled to a place in the front rank. Not illustrated by a frontispiece, its literary excellence is great. The variety in its number is greater than usual.

The Little Corporal this month closes its twelfth volume. If it keeps up to its past standard, we hope it may live long and prosper. Published by John E. Miller, Chicago, Illinois.

Arthur's Lady's Home Magazine for June contains the usual amount of excellent reading matter, besides a song with the music, the Spirit of the Bell, and fashion plates and engravings.

A GOOD CHANCE TO DO GOOD.

Mr. Editor: You have doubtless heard how anxious our people are to build a new church in this place, our old building having fallen down. The friends and members of the Methodist Church here will be liberal in their contributions; but we need help. Can we get it? Within the limits of the Southern land there are very many good ladies who love to work for the general welfare of Methodism in this country; and I desire, through the columns of the Advocate, to appeal to this class for help. Are there not those who can and will aid us by giving concerts, fairs and ice cream suppers? Much could be done in this way if undertaken with spirit and resolution. Who will make the first effort? Thousands of dollars have been thus collected for worthless objects; and shall we be less zealous for the church than we are for the cause of worldly enjoyments?

The ladies of Gainesville are not idle; we are doing all we can, and here offer you an opportunity of contributing to a good cause. Will you not heed and answer this appeal of charity? We know money is scarce; but if you "come up to the help of Zion" a reward is promised. All amounts, ever so small, will be most thankfully received, and may be forwarded to Mrs. K. R. Woodruff, Gainesville, Alabama. If each member of the Methodist Church in our State would send us fifty cents or $1—just think of the result! Then do not refuse to give because your contribution must be very small. Your efforts will not be without reward. In addition to our sincere thanks, you will receive the blessing of God for helping us. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

Mrs. Kate Rencher Woodruff.

Through the columns of the Nashville Christian Advocate we recently made an appeal for aid in erecting a church in this place. It was heeded, and in a few days there came a nice letter from a gentleman, a resident of Lebanon, Tennessee, contributing to our fund and giving us words of cheer. We feel encouraged to forward our call for aid to you, and ask its insertion in the Advocate. Believing Methodists of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana to be as liberal and charitable as those of Tennessee, we shall expect responses from them. Mr. Editor, ought we not to have help? Without a house of worship! You who enjoy such a blessing, think of our condition, and give us of your bounty!

Mrs. K. R. W.

Gainesville, Ala., May 11, 1871.

A prize of $10 was recently offered to any member of the Georgia Teachers' Institute who would write and spell correctly the words in the following sentence: "It is an agreeable sight to witness the unparalleled embarrassment of a harassed peddler, attempting to gauge the symmetry of a peeled onion, which a sibyl has stabbed with a poniard, regardless of the innuendoes of the lilies of the cornelian line." Thirty-eight teachers competed for the prize, but not one was successful.

These gentlemen have been long known to us as reliable, prompt, obliging and faithful in the fulfillment of their contracts, and we are satisfied that the work at their factory is equal to any in the country. They fill a large number of country orders, and we advise our friends who need articles manufactured by them to call at 301 to 307 Gravier street before purchasing.

A resident of Taunton, Massachusetts, has obtained his ice for summer use, for several winters past, in the following manner: Procuring about fifty empty flour barrels, at a cost of twenty cents each, he gradually pours in water until each contains a solid mass of ice. The barrels are then put away in his cellar and entirely covered with sawdust. As ice is required a barrel is tapped.

The foundation of domestic happiness is faith in the virtue of woman; the foundation of political happiness is faith in the integrity of man. The foundation of all happiness, temporal and eternal, is faith in the goodness, the righteousness, the mercy and the love of God.

We are always glad to learn of the success of any enterprise which tends to benefit or improve our people, and therefore are gratified to learn of the marked success of the "University Series" of school books. They are admirable books—unsectional, unpartisan and unpolitical—the work of our own honored scholars and teachers; and their rapid introduction into our schools is an occasion for congratulation to our people.

J. A. G.

Died, at his residence near Laurel Hill, Louisiana, on the thirty-first day of March, 1871, Thomas J. Brown.

Thus has passed away, in the full maturity of his powers, a good citizen, a kind husband and father, and an unobtrusive but devoted Christian. He had been for several years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Though the writer of this notice is but little acquainted with his past life, it was his privilege to be with him a number of times on his lingering bed of death. That death-bed was peculiarly instructive and consoling. It demonstrated that underneath the calm surface of an unostentatious life there sometimes flow the deep currents of profound religious conviction, that only reveal themselves in the last tremendous hour. He exhibited in his pain the most unmurmuring patience and submission to God's will. He was sick for several months, and often suffered great agony. At first his soul seemed melted into the tenderest contrition, that he had not served his God better, which finally was merged into the most triumphant and unwavering faith. The peace of God that passeth all knowledge kept his heart. He seemed at times grieved at the lack of religious feeling in the neighborhood, and spent much of his time in prayer and the singing of hymns. A more triumphant and satisfactory death-bed I have never witnessed.

His Pastor.

Sister Day was born in Baton Rouge, July 1, 1835. When two weeks old her father died. Her father's name was Hugh Alexander. When twelve years of age she was deprived by death of her remaining parent—her mother, Mrs. Esther V. Alexander. She was then left with her grand-parents, with whom and her aunt, Mrs. John Knox, she spent her time till her marriage with Mr. L. P. Day, in Carrollton, August 21, 1851. She was early known as being piously inclined, and in 1857, with her husband, she joined the Methodist Church in the parish of West Baton Rouge, where they then lived. At this time they were both converted to God.

After removing to and living in New Orleans for a few years they came to Bayou Tunica, where she united with the church, in which relation she remained faithful till death.

Sister Day was a woman of great calmness, modesty and reserve. She was the center of attraction in the family circle. All loved her who knew her. She was the mother of seven children, two sons and five daughters. One son and three daughters still live to revere the memory and lament the loss of one at once so pure, so kind and so dear to them. A few hours prior to her death she called all the family, one by one, to her bedside and bade them each farewell, adding in each case some word of advice and encouragement. Having bidden all farewell, she said, with a smile upon her face: "Is this death? She added: "No;

"Jesus can make a dying bed Feel soft as downy pillows are."

Thus passed away to her eternal home another loving and beloved disciple of Jesus. May her husband and orphaned children follow her example, and reach at last the rest of the people of God—the saint's eternal home.

R. D. Norsworthy.

For more than twelve months his health had given way under the cares and labors of sixty years. He was born in Newbern district, South Carolina, in 1810. In 1833 he emigrated to Alabama. There and in Mississippi he spent the remainder of his life. He embraced religion, at a camp meeting near Tuskaloosa, in the twenty-third year of his life. In 1846 he received license to preach, and was in due course ordained deacon and elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church South. A faithful local preacher, he was in full sympathy with the itinerant ministry, aiding them greatly, and was several times employed in the itinerant work. Bro. Boyd was a man of marked integrity. His Christian character was unimpeachable. By his virtues he drew about him strongly attached friends; and his personal influence contributed much to the success of his preaching.

One who knew him well in life, and was with him in his last hours, says: "Though his virtues shone out in the private walks of life, yet, in the darkness of the hour of death they seemed to burst forth in the beautiful illuminations of a soul redeemed stepping from time to eternity, leaving behind a hallowed light to gladden the bereaved hearts of the dear ones he so fondly cherished here. He verified in death the efficiency and truth of the doctrines he had so earnestly labored to promulgate. He frequently expressed a desire to depart; and when remonstrated with, answered: 'I have lived out my days of usefulness, and it is far better to depart and be with Christ.' When told he was sinking, he exclaimed: 'Thank God, it is come at last!' After giving his dying admonitions to his grief-stricken family, he requested those present to sing:

'On Jordan's stormy banks I stand.'

Yes, he stood on those stormy banks, calm and unterrified, his eye of faith fixed on the riches of eternal life."

To the bereaved I need only say: Your loss is his gain. His admonitions and example are still yours, to direct you to that better land, where parting is no more.

WHAT SAYS THE CLOCK?

"Tick," the clock says—"tick, tick, tick!"
What you have to do, do quick.
Time is gliding fast away;
Let us act, and act to-day.

If your lesson you would get,
Do it now, and do not fret;
That alone is hearty fun
Which comes after duty done.

When your mother says, "Obey,"
Do not loiter, do not stay;
Wait not for another tick;
What you have to do, do quick.

If my little boy will mind,
And be prompt and good and kind,
Time to him will be a friend;
Time for him will sweetly end.

BOYS AS FARMERS.

BY CHARLES D. WARNER.

One of the best things in the world to be is a boy; it requires no experience, though it needs some practice to be a good one. The disadvantage of the position is that it does not last long enough; it is soon over; just as you get used to being a boy you have to be something else, with a good deal more work to do, and not half so much fun. And yet every boy is anxious to be a man, and is very uneasy with the restrictions that are put upon him as a boy. Good fun as it is to yoke up the calves and play work, there is not a boy on a farm but would rather drive a yoke of oxen at real work. What a glorious feeling it is, indeed, when a boy is for the first time given the long whip and permitted to drive the oxen, walking by their side, swinging the long lash, and shouting, "Gee, Buck!" "Haw, Golden!" "Whoa, Bright!" and all the rest of that remarkable language, until he is red in the face, and all the neighbors for half a mile are aware that something unusual is going on. If I were a boy, I am not sure but I would rather drive the oxen than have a birthday.

The proudest day of my life was one day when I rode on the neap of the cart, and drove the oxen, all alone, with a load of apples, to the cider mill. I was so little that it was a wonder that I didn't fall off and get under the broad wheels. Nothing could make a boy, who cared anything for his appearance, feel flatter than to be run over by the broad tire of a cart wheel. But I never heard of one that was, and I don't believe one ever will be. As I said, it was a great day for me, but I don't remember that the oxen cared much about it. They sugged along in their great clumsy way, switching their tails in my face occasionally, and now and then giving a lurch to this or that side of the road, attracted by a choice tuft of grass. And then I came the Julius Cæsar over them, if you will allow me to use such a slang expression—a liberty I never should permit you. I don't know that Julius Cæsar ever drove cattle, though he must often have seen the peasants from the Campagna "haw" and "gee" them round the Forum (of course in Latin, a language that those cattle understood as well as ours do English;) but what I mean is, that I stood up and "hollered" with all my might, as everybody does with oxen, as if they were born deaf, and whacked them with the long lash over the head, just as the big folks did when they drove. I think now that it was a cowardly thing to crack the patient old fellows over the face and eyes, and make them wink in their meek manner. If I am ever a boy again on a farm, I shall speak gently to the oxen, and not go screaming round the farm like a crazy man; and I shall not hit them a cruel cut with the lash every few minutes, because it looks big to do so, and I cannot think of anything else to do. I never liked lickings myself, and I don't know why an ox should like them, especially as he cannot reason about the moral improvement he is to get out of them.

Speaking of Latin reminds me that I once taught my cows Latin. I don't mean that I taught them to read it, for it is very difficult to teach a cow to read Latin or any of the dead languages—a cow cares more for her cud than she does for all the classics put together. But if you begin early you can teach a cow, or a calf (if you can teach a calf anything, which I doubt,) Latin as well as English. There were ten cows, which I had to escort to and from pasture night and morning. To these cows I gave the names of the Roman numerals, beginning with Unus and Duo, and going up to Decem. Decem was, of course, the biggest cow of the party, or at least she was the ruler of the others, and had the place of honor in the stable and everywhere else. I admire cows, and especially the exactness with which they define their social position. In this case Decem could "lick" Novem, and Novem could "lick" Octo, and so on down to Unus, who couldn't lick anybody, except her own calf. I suppose I ought to have called the weakest cow Una instead of Unus, considering her sex; but I didn't care much to teach the cows the declensions of adjectives, in which I was not very well up myself; and besides it would be of little use to a cow. People who devote themselves too severely to study of the classics are apt to become dried up; and you should never do anything to dry up a cow. Well, these ten cows knew their names after awhile—at least they appeared to, and would take their places as I called them. At least, if Octo attempted to get before Novem in going through the bars (I have heard people speak of a "pair of bars" when there were six or eight of them,) or into the stable, the matter of precedence was settled then and there, and, once settled, there was no dispute about it afterward. Novem either put her horns into Octo's ribs, and Octo shambled to one side, or else the two locked horns and tried the game of push and gore until one gave up. Nothing is stricter than the etiquette of a party of cows. There is nothing in royal courts equal to it; rank is exactly settled, and the same individuals always have the precedence. You know that at Windsor Castle if the Royal Three-Ply Silver Stick should happen to get in front of the Most Royal Double-and-Twisted Golden Rod, when the court is going in to dinner, something so dreadful would happen that we don't dare to think of it. It is certain that the soup would get cold while the Golden Rod was pitching the Silver Stick out of the castle window into the moat, and perhaps the island of Great Britain itself would split in two. But the people are very careful that it never shall happen; so we shall probably never know what the effect would be. Among cows, as I say, the question is settled in short order, and in a different manner from what it sometimes is in other society. It is said that in other society there is sometimes a great scramble for the first place, for the leadership, as it is called, and that women, and men too, fight for what is called position; and in order to be first, they will injure their neighbors by telling stories about them and by backbiting, which is the meanest kind of biting there is, not excepting the bite of fleas. But in cow society there is nothing of this detraction in order to get the first place at the crib, or the further stall in the stable. If the question arises the cows turn in, horns and all, and settle it with one square fight, and that ends it. I have often admired this trait in cows.

Besides Latin, I used to try to teach the cows a little poetry, and it is a very good plan. It does not do the cows much good, but it is very good exercise for a boy farmer. I used to commit to memory as good short poems as I could find (the cows used to listen to Thanatopsis about as well as to anything,) and repeat them when I went to the pasture, and as I drove the cows home through the sweet ferns and down the rocky slopes. It improves a boy's elocution a great deal more than driving oxen.

I see I have not got very far in telling boys how to be farmers, but I am at the end of my space.—Work and Play.

GOLDEN WORDS FOR THE YOUNG.—It is safer for me to abstain than to drink. If I should indulge in drink, I am afraid I should not stop at the line which many call temperance, but should become a slave to the habit, and, with others of stronger nerve and firmer purposes, go down to a drunkard's grave. If I indulge I am not safe. If I abstain my child will not be cursed with a drunken father. We talk of the purity and dignity of human nature, and of relying upon our self-respect for security; but there is no degradation so low that a man will not sink into, and no crime so hellish that he will not commit, when he is drunk. There is nothing so base, so impure, so mean, so dishonest, so corrupt, that a man will not do when under the law of sin—of appetite. Safety is to be found in not yielding ourselves to that law. But if it could be proved conclusively to my own mind that I could drink and never be injured, yet with my views on the subject it would be my duty to abstain. I could not be certain but others, seeing me drink, might be influenced to drink also; and, being unable to stop, pass on in the path of the drunkard. My example would, in that case, be evil. But, I ask, am I my brother's keeper? Yes, I am responsible for my influence, and, lest it shall be evil, I am under a high moral and religious obligation to deny myself that which may not injure me, but will injure him. If I neither taste, nor touch, nor handle, nor countenance, then my example will not lead others to become drunkards.—Governor Buckingham.

The Farm and Garden.

DRILLED CORN AS A FORAGE CROP

While all admit the great value of drilled corn for forage, if it could be saved with ten-double certainty, many are indisposed to raise it on account of the supposed difficulty in curing it thoroughly.

We have cured it successfully, and have frequently recommended its production as a most profitable crop.

We are indebted to Mr. Samuel Barnett for the following letter on this subject, from a very intelligent planter of northern Georgia, whose statements on any subject may be received with perfect confidence.

To make fodder corn successfully the land should be rich, and deeply and thoroughly broken. It will succeed much better, too, if it is low ground, where the corn will not suffer for want of moisture.

Break the land flush with a good turning plow, followed in the same furrow by a good subsoil (or long rooter,) put in as deep as possible. Then cross-break in same way. It will be better to give this cross-breaking just as you are ready to plant, so that the corn may get a good start of grass and weeds.

Run off your rows with a long, wide shovel plow, so that the furrow may stand open deep; run twice in the same furrow if necessary to accomplish this. Rows about two feet apart. If on high land put in about four bushels per acre; on low land from five to six will do better—the object being to grow the corn as much as the land will stand, so that the stalks will be very small. Cover lightly, so that when the corn comes up it will be below the level of the land.

Sow any time from middle of March to first of May. Seasons usually suit better for the early sowings on upland.

When the corn is up well—say six inches high—run round with a light sweep, just stirring the surface and cutting the young grass; put very little dirt to the corn. Sometimes it may be necessary to run round once more, in same way, if you like the grass getting much of a start before the corn gets up high enough to shade the ground well.

I think it makes the best fodder when cut about the time the bloom dies on the tassel, or about the time the corn (if it had ears) would be in the milk state. I cut with a short, stiff blade, usually called "Bush Blade," I believe.

The hands should follow the cutter immediately behind—I usually put four or five hands behind each cutter; they can shock as fast as he cuts; gather up the corn and stand it on the butts, in shocks about four feet in diameter at base, draw the tops together and tie with a stalk. In a few days the shocks will begin to shrink and fall down; they should be righted up every day, so as to keep them standing. After about a week, I take the shocks which fall and put them around the other shocks, thus making them larger and stand better. Let it stand in the field until it is thoroughly cured—three or four weeks, according to weather.

If, however, you have the time to spare conveniently, and plenty of room, you can haul in much sooner and spread thin under shelter; it will cure beautifully there; but if the shocks are well kept up in the field, it cures very nicely, and when cured you can haul in store just as any other fodder or hay.—Southern Farm and Home.

INCREASED YIELD OF COTTON.

Can an increase of yield of cotton be counted on, same land and seed, with certainty? We say yes, without any increase of manure or material increase of labor. The next question would be, to one who sincerely loves his country, Is an increased crop advisable? If the land holder, who is presumed to have love of country more at heart than the loafer or the hireling, would only take the reins in his own hand and control the crops planted, we say it is advisable, because the land holder can and will, sooner or later, see what is to his interest—make cotton for sale, but all supplies certain. In 1842—on the second of April—we were finishing bedding up for cotton, running an iron tooth harrow over the rows, and planting cotton our usual way. We had a full crop in, and thought we did not fail to keep clean, having a full team; yet we failed to take out "every other stalk;" that is, we had left cotton twelve inches apart, or perhaps ten inches, intending to thin in June one half, and leave the then considered fair stand, twenty to twenty-four inches in a four-foot row, twelve hundred pounds cotton land. An old friend, and a planter twenty years earlier than our day, begged us, in June or early in July, to pull up half the stalks. Upon examination, we found an average of about thirty-five bolls, from size of a marble to half grown. We resolved to risk forty acres. When picking in September we had an acre—taking eight and a quarter rows, four hundred and forty yards, as an acre—picked and weighed, and occasionally had one row picked and weighed. We made twelve hundred pounds first main picking: the August picking was very light. That year we made an average of a bale.

We tried to get two or three overseers to dirt a row occasionally, and not scrape. It was never done. We urged on leaving two stalks as usual stand, equal to a double stand, and we made by it. We have seen, in our boy days, cotton in hills, and two stalks left where one had been.

The reason why we did not continue was, so difficult to have two stalks left; too careless negro would often leave three, even four.

We say, don't fear crowding; it tends to dwarf the plant, and the first crop bolls make the crop. We say, with a good team to break up thoroughly, a sulky dropper and a Buckeye cultivator, the same cotton can be grown on less land, and time to make corn. Cut grass for hay and greens, and no driving, as twenty-five years ago.—Southern Farmer.

THE ORCHARD.—The principal work in the orchard now is to destroy the weeds which prey upon it, and to check superfluous growth and fruit. It requires some nerve to thin a heavy crop of fine peaches, pears, plums, etc., especially where the frosts in past years have nipped them in the bud. But if we would have fine fruit we must not allow it to remain too thickly set. We must have the courage to thin freely, often pulling off more than half the young crop. It is also well now to remove struggling shoots. Do not spare the grape bunches if too thick. If any signs of mildew appear try Flagg's Sulphur Remedy. It is said, by reliable authority, to be no humbug. He has written a little book on the subject (Flagg's Handbook of the Sulphur Cure, published by the Harpers,) in which he fully and clearly describes his system. The chief idea is to dust the vine and the fruit with fine flour of sulphur, applying it by a dredging box, in dry weather and in the heat of the day, so that the hot sun may cause an evaporation of the sulphur, which acts directly on the disease. Keep the strawberry beds free from weeds and grass, and cut off all runners as fast as they appear. You cannot have runners and fruit. Water copiously at least three times a week in the evening, in dry weather, during the bearing season. This is troublesome, but it must be done if you would have an abundance of strawberries.—Southern Farm and Home.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

YEAST.—Take one pint of the water in which the potatoes for dinner were boiled; while it is boiling hot thicken with flour; add a cup of yeast when the latter is cool. Set the jar in which it is made in a warm place, and it will be light in a few hours, and ready to make.

BREAD.—Stir into three quarts of milk-warm water one even tablespoonful of salt, and flour enough to make a soft batter. To this add the yeast above mentioned, or, in warm water, use only half as much. Set the pan in a warm place in cold weather, and cover closely with a clean breadcloth. Make this sponge at bedtime. If the sponge is at all sour in the morning dissolve a teaspoonful of soda in a little water, and stir in; then work in as much flour as is needed to mold it easily, and knead it thoroughly. Make it into small loaves, and see that the pans are well buttered and warmed when used. Keep them in a warm place, and cover with a clean white breadcloth. If properly cared for, it will be light in an hour, and ready for the oven, which must be well heated. In baking bread or cake care should be taken that the top does not brown too soon, as that will prevent its rising up light, as it otherwise would. If this makes too many loaves, it is easy to make only half or one-third the quantity.

YEAST CAKES.—Pour a pint of boiling water over a teaspoonful of hops; let it stand a short time—ten or fifteen minutes; then strain the water into a saucepan; heat it boiling hot, and stir in flour enough to make a stiff batter; then set it aside to cool. When lukewarm pour in a teacupful of good yeast, or a yeast cake softened in water. Set in a warm place to rise. When light add a teaspoonful of salt, two tablespoonfuls of molasses or sugar, and a little soda. Then mix in cornmeal to make it stiff enough to roll into a long, round roll. Cut it in slices about half an inch thick, spread meal over your board, and lay these cakes to dry. Turn them frequently while drying, and, if possible, get them dried in two or three days, or they may become sour. It is well to dry them in the air, but not in the sun. Put them in bags in a dry place, and when you use one soak it in milk-warm water.

PRIDE is increased by ignorance; those who assume the most are usually those who know the least.

Planters and Cotton Press men everywhere prefer it to all others.

THE ARROW TIE

was used to cover MORE THAN HALF THE CROP OF 1869, giving entire satisfaction.

The patentee and manufacturer of the celebrated ARROW TIE, J. J. McComb, formerly of New Orleans, now residing in Liverpool, having control of the best and most extensive Rolling Mills in Europe, is constantly importing large stocks of this popular Tie, manufactured of the very best quality of English iron, to meet the increasing demand for it throughout all the Cotton States.

Planters can buy or order the ARROW TIE of all dealers in Iron Ties, and of country merchants generally, at the lowest market price; and we respectfully solicit the patronage of Planters and Factors everywhere.

MEDICAL.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR,

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT,

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections, but experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, (to which localities, and especially to Fisher T. Rawson and James E. Bradley, he refers those who desire facts before trying it for themselves) justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptic that it is not an exaggerated one.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to durat on of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

BRACES AND TRUSSES.—DR. JOHN ANGELL informs the medical profession and others that he has constantly on hand and for sale a complete assortment of ANGELL'S TRUSSES, Spinal and Shoulder Braces, and other appliances for the prevention, relief and cure of general debility, physical weakness and derangements of the speakers and singers, palpitation of the heart, bronchitis and weakness of the lungs, weakness and deformity, dyspepsia and nervous affections, constipation and chronic diarrhea, female derangements and extreme displacements of the womb, HYPERTROPHY, prolapsus-ani, and weakness of the male and female system.

These light, cool and springy appliances are the special favorites of the profession, are intensely common-sense and rational in their action; supply a missing link in treatment; place the above affections in a new and more hopeful light, and often effect cures where medicine can only mitigate, more than it can cure a hernia or a disjointed joint.

He specially desires an examination of these appliances by the profession and others. Where necessary the professional application of the above braces will be made under our supervision or that of the family physician.

These valuable appliances are sanctioned by a large number of the medical profession in the United States and Europe as the best adapted to fulfill the purpose for which they are intended, and the Trusses and Braces are adopted by the United States government for the use of the army and navy. Terms moderate. Consultations free. Send for their pamphlet—it is better to call.

A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be hailed by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

by George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

by Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Va. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

by George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

LET US GIVE THEM A LIFT.

BY JOHN B. GOODWIN.

Let us give them a lift,
Though low they have fallen,
And are floating from virtue,
On sin's sea adrift;
Let us stretch out our hand,
We can help, we may save them;
They still are our brothers;
Let's give them a lift.

Let us give them a lift!
By our aid, not reproaches,
To the right, from the wrong,
We may lead them to shift;
The temptation was strong,
But maybap they had conquered
Had some one been ready
To give them a lift.

O many poor outcasts
Now might be rescued,
Who are hurrying downward
The pathway so swift,
Of sin and temptation,
Despairing and reckless;
Come, brothers, and help them,
By giving a lift!

Let us give them a lift!
In pity remembering,
When the light broke on us
Through the heavenly rift,
And the strong hands of love
Drew our souls out of darkness
To the sunshine of hope,
When we cried for a lift.

And when this world's struggle
Is over, and angels
The good deeds of earth
From the evil ones sift,
And life's book is balanced,
Be sure to your credit
On its page will be written:
"Ye gave them a lift:"
When forsaken and friendless
"Ye gave them a lift." Traveler.

ANECDOTE OF CALHOUN.—The following anecdote of John C. Calhoun is told by William Schouler, on the authority of the late Hon. Abbott Lawrence: Some time before 1840 Mr. Calhoun wrote to Mr. Lawrence that he had been adding to his landed estates, and would like to obtain a loan of $10,000 or $15,000 in Boston, where money was more plenty than in South Carolina and the rate of interest not so high, for the payment of which he would give his notes and a mortgage upon his estate, which would be ample security. Mr. Lawrence said he consulted Mr. Nathan Appleton and one or two other wealthy citizens of Boston upon the subject, and it was agreed to raise the money for him and take no security for the payment but his own note. Mr. Lawrence informed Mr. Calhoun of the arrangement which he had made, and expressed his gratification that it was in the power of himself and a few of his friends to do a kindness to one so distinguished, whose life had been devoted to the service of his country. Mr. Calhoun immediately wrote back, declining the offer and withdrawing his original request. He said it did not agree with his sense of propriety to accept a loan on such terms; that in the discharge of his public duties he did not wish to be embarrassed by a sense of obligation to any one.

THE DANCE.—"What a strange thing," says the Moravian, "this dancing is, after all, when you look at it from a philosophical, or, if you please, unsophisticated point of view. The other day Insulanus asked a lady how it came to pass that the entrance upon the floor of a ball-room made such a wonderful change in the usual manners and habits. She asked him what he meant, as she did not understand. He asked her:

"'Suppose I introduced you to a friend of mine, a stranger, and he would not only take your hand, but put his arm around you, what would you do?'

"You may imagine her look and answer. What would she do? All our lady readers know what they would do, and what the father, husband or brother of such a lady would do.

"'But,' said Insulanus, 'as soon as you enter the room of the "hop" you permit a stranger, who is introduced to you at the time, not only to take your hand, but to put his arm around your waist, and to sail around the room with you in the giddy mazes of the dance, and your father, brother and husband think it all right!'"

THE COLOR OF THE MOON.—The dark side of the moon is visible to us when the moon is not full, receiving its light by reflection from the earth. In a total solar eclipse, when a large portion of the earth, lying directly under the moon, is obscured, a change in color of the latter might be expected. These expectations have been realized. As early as 1774 Lambers observed the remarkable phenomenon, that the ordinary ash-colored moonlight of the dark side of the moon in its first and second quarters was changed into an olive green, tinged with yellow. In pondering upon the cause of this singular appearance, he found it referable to the position of the moon. Sun situated vertically over the Atlantic ocean, and receiving upon its right side reflected light from the green forests of South America.

Scientific.

A FOSSIL FOREST has been discovered in Napa county, California. Its existence was first made known in July last by Mr. Denison, of San Francisco, and more recently it was examined by the Yale College scientific party on their expedition to the Pacific coast. The petrified trees are some of them very large. The smallest end of a portion of one trunk which was found measured over seven feet in diameter.

THE great difference between the sun and artificial light is due to the fact that, of the light emitted from the former, about half the quantity of rays are luminous and calorific at the same time; but as regards our artificial light, for ordinary oil the amount of non-luminous yet calorific rays is 90 per cent.; for white-hot platinum, 98 per cent.; alcohol flame, 99 per cent.; electric light, 80 per cent.; and gas-light, 90 per cent.; while for petroleum and paraffine oils the amount is 94 per cent. It is this large quantity of calorie rays in artificial light which causes fatigue to the eyes; but this inconvenience may be almost entirely obviated by intercepting the thermic rays by glass, or, better yet, mica plates. The use of these renders the light soft and agreeable to the eyes.

SEAL SKIN and oil should be more easily obtainable during the coming season than for many previous years, owing to the extraordinary number of seals the Newfoundland fishermen have been able to catch in the North Atlantic, exceeding the aggregate of the past twenty years. A single steamship bore 28,000 seals into the harbor of St. Johns recently, and a second ship followed her to the wharf, when excited inhabitants unloaded from the new-comer 21,500 seals, and saw both vessels trim their rigging for a second voyage to the ice fields. Eleven smaller vessels from the seal fisheries arrived still later, bearing an average catch of 21,000, making the first aggregate of the season 231,000, and more than a hundred vessels, each certainly carrying 20,000, are still expected in the harbor. The steamships average five hundred men each, and each man employed will realize nearly $3,000 as his share in the extraordinary traffic.

NO BONES IN THE OCEAN.—Mr. Jeffrey has established the fact that bones disappear in the ocean. By dredging it is common to bring up teeth, but rarely ever a bone of any kind; these, however compact, dissolve if exposed to the action of the water but a little time. On the contrary, teeth—which are not bones any more than whales are fish—resist the destroying action of the sea-water indefinitely. It is, therefore, a powerful solvent. Still the popular opinion is that it is a brine. If such were the case the bottom of all the seas would long ago have been shallowed by immense accumulations of carcasses and products of the vegetable kingdom constantly floating into them.

Dentine, the peculiar material of which teeth are formed, and the enamel covering them, offer extraordinary resistance to those chemical agencies which resolve other animal remains into nothingness. Mounds in the West, tumuli in Europe and Asia, which are believed to antedate sacred history for thousands of years, yield up perfectly sound teeth, on which time appears to have made no impression whatever.

THE Atwood-Sherman process for the manufacture of steel has brought great honor to American genius, and at the same time introduces a great public benefit. Dr. Tefft gives an account of it, which is published in the Engineering and Mining Journal. By the use of certain chemical fluxes, etc., the poorest qualities of iron—such, in fact, as are perfectly useless otherwise—are turned into steel with qualities which surpass those of any other known to manufacturers. This is done at a saving of cost so great that this best of steel can be produced at one-third of the usual cost—in fact, not higher than good iron. One great difficulty has been heretofore encountered in the presence of phosphorus, which, if it touches any dampness, even in a mold, will blow everything up. This phosphorus is removed by the use of iodine, and then the metal may be safely run into any mold. The British government heard so much of the process that Lord Clarendon invited Mr. Sherman to visit England and exhibit it. Every facility was given by the admiralty, and Mr. Sherman was enabled to demonstrate his claimed improvements with signal success. It appears now that, by this wonderful application of chemical principles, we are to have everything which is usually made of iron replaced with steel.

A GEORGIA PAPER tells with much glee how two Louisiana "ladies" grossly insulted General Longstreet at a hotel table in New Orleans because he has accepted the result of the war, and is now loyal to the government.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

THESE are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have again to notice a quiet market in nearly every branch of trade. The receipts of sugar have been limited and met a ready sale at full prices. Molasses has shown no material change. With a moderate supply and demand flour has ruled at about previous rates. Corn, on the contrary, has continued in good request and sold at fuller prices. Provisions have continued dull and drooping, and both pork and bacon have ruled still more in favor of buyers.

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	7,110
Lake	5
Mobile	337
Texas	723
Total	8,505

On Saturday, the Liverpool and New York dispatches respectively reporting an advance of 1-16d. and ⅛c., the demand was active, and although factors raised their pretensions ⅛ to ¼c., yet 4,700 bales changed hands at stiffer prices, especially for all white cottons, and on the grades from good ordinary inclusive up the quotations were advanced ⅛c. On Monday it was a holiday at Liverpool, but as the dispatches from New York reported an advance at the opening of ⅛c., a further improvement of ¼c. by noon, and an additional advance to the same extent toward the close, the demand continued brisk, and although factors raised their pretensions ⅛ to ¼c., and the movement was moreover checked by light supplies, yet the sales amounted up 4,800 bales, at prices ⅛ to ¼c. over Saturday's quotations, good ordinary closing at 14 7/16 to 14 ½c., low middling at 15 5/16 to 15 7/16c. and middling at 16 1/16c. On Tuesday the market opened at about previous rates, but soon ruled more in favor of factors, and later in the day, especially after the intelligence of a further advance of ¼c. at New York, the prices paid indicated a pretty general improvement of ¼c. The demand, moreover, was quite animated, and the business embraced 5,700 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 15,200 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,351,739 bales, against 1,091,580 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 989,159 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 887,819 bales to Great Britain, 293,833 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 229,071 to France.

Ordinary	12½ to 13
Good ordinary	14 to 14¼
Low middling	15⅛ to 15½
Middling	16⅛ to ...
Strict middling	16 to 16¼

Bacon.—Liberal receipts have depressed the market. On Saturday 50 casks sold at 7½c. for shoulders, and 9¾ to 10c. for clear sides; and 22 tierces sugar-cured hams at 14½ to 14¾c. per pound. On Monday 7 casks shoulders sold at 7¾c., 5 casks clear rib sides at 9¾c., and 10 tierces sugar-cured hams at 14½c. per pound.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Louisville, May 31.—There was a tremendous fall of rain last night in Marion and adjoining counties, and along the line of the Knoxville railroad from Lebanon Junction to Lebanon, which caused the largest flood known in that section or that State for many years. Immense damage was done to property, and a considerable portion of the railroad track is undermined and bridges swept away.

The train from here this morning stopped a few miles beyond Lebanon Junction, where sixty feet of track is destroyed. The bridges passed over are insecure, but were passed with extreme caution. Six miles beyond where this train stopped, another train, bound in this direction, was compelled to stop, having a gap of six miles, across which no communication is possible, as the country is flooded in every direction. The telegraph lines are washed down, and the destruction of farm property is very great.

The mails have been ordered stopped over this line till the damage is repaired.

San Francisco, May 31.—High winds have damaged the fruit and grape crop in Los Angeles.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., May 31.—A terrible storm prevails on the upper Hudson. Hail stones fell measuring four and a half inches.

St. Louis, June 1.—A letter from Jacksonbero, Texas, says: On the eighteenth ultimo a band of one hundred Indians attacked a train twenty miles from this place, and killed seven men belonging to it and wounded one. General Sherman, who was at Fort Richardson at the time, ordered four companies of cavalry in pursuit, with instructions to drive the Indians to Fort Sill, saying that if he found they were at Fort Sill Indians he would stop the Indian trade in that quarter.

Memphis, June 1.—Gloomy reports of crops have been received from Pulaski, White, Woodruff and Jackson counties, Arkansas. Owing to the incessant rains and late frost, the stand of cotton is very poor, and many plantations have been plowed up and planted with corn.

THE FLOOD.

We are now almost realizing the spectacle of a submerged city. By far more than one-half of the town is under water, and the rising waters, with a stealthy, cat-like advance, are coming in every direction. Citizens are flying from their homes, and thousands of families are to-day shelterless and without food. From Rampart street to the woods, from Julia street to the lake, a scarcely uninterrupted flood extends. The canals, from whose affluent waters came the first menacing peril, have themselves disappeared in the lake-like street that spreads in every direction. The strong wind from the lake still brings fresh material to swell the rising tide, and property and life are alike being sacrificed to the treacherous and subtle element.

Since seven o'clock on Sunday evening the water has risen at the rate of twelve inches in twelve hours. It now floods Canal street to Dryades street, and on Common street the water extends to Rampart. In the angle of the city formed by the Old Basin, Claiborne street and Elysian Fields street, there is but little water; only such, indeed, as arises from overflowed sewers. But between Elysian Fields street and Lafayette avenue, and far beyond Florida Walk, the flood extends uninterruptedly to a vast lake—a miniature sea. Nor does it stop here, but covers all the vast area below Canal street from Bayou St. John to Jourdan avenue, and from Hagan avenue, up Poydras to Rampart street. Nearly every homestead in this wide extent is surrounded by water. Many families have left; but others still remain confined to their houses, and suffering for food. It is true the charitably disposed and the authorities are putting forth every exertion to minister to their necessities; but their facilities for transporting food are few, and many must suffer the greatest extremity before assistance can reach them.—Picayune, June 6.

In reference to the cause of the overflow the Times says: So far as the inquiry instituted by the city administrators into the origin of the overflow has progressed, the New Canal Company is seriously compromised. It is alleged that the lessees of the canal have disposed of the right to remove dirt from the levee, in one instance to Dr. Anfeux, and in another to the New Orleans and Jackson Railroad Company. The former carted the soil from near Hagan avenue, the latter from a place about a mile and a half nearer the lake, where the second break subsequently occurred. On Friday last an old negro man, being at Hagan avenue, cautioned the excavators to desist on account of the danger, and also lodged information at the City Hall. In neither instance was his warning acted upon. That night the levee gave way, with the calamitous result now before us.

Later.—At six o'clock yesterday evening the flood was rapidly abating. The reporter spent most of the day in visiting the submerged district, but no incidents of particular importance occurred. All the main facts relating to it have already found their way into print. As to who is to blame for the misfortune, and in what manner it could have been averted, it is now idle to speculate on. Suffice it to say that it has been one of the greatest disasters that has ever befallen the city.—Picayune, June 7.

THE CURTAIN RISING.

Much has been said of the difference between Christian death-beds and others. Some of the former are thus described in "Ad Fidem:"

"On just this day of the week and of the month, Sunday, December 12, in the year 1697, a Christian minister lay dying in the city of Boston. Says his biographer: 'He seemed to have some such views as the first Christian martyr had of the glory of his enthroned Saviour. He strove to speak to his wife, and at length exclaimed: "O, what shall I say? He is altogether lovely. O, all our praises of him are poor, low things! His glorious angels are come for me." On this he closed his eyes and never opened them again.'

"John Holland was on his death-bed. He wished to have the eighth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans read to him. While the reading was going on he suddenly spoke: 'O, stay your reading! What brightness is this I see?' 'It is the sunshine,' suggested some one. 'Sunshine!' said he; 'no, it is my Saviour's shine. Now, farewell world, welcome heaven. O, speak it when I am gone, and preach it at my funeral: God dealeth familiarly with man. I feel his mercy, I see his majesty; whether in the body or out of the body I cannot tell; God knoweth; but I see things that are unutterable.' So he passed away with bright looks, and a soft, sweet voice.

"Another well known minister of the gospel, two days before his death, requested his daughter to come to his bedside, when he thus exclaimed: 'What wonderful views I have had this day! I have been brought to the borders of the grave. O, what views! Wonderful, wonderful, wonderful! I have heard singing. O, how wonderful! Glory ineffable!' On the last day of his life, when his final conflict seemed actually to have begun, he suddenly revived and exclaimed with an air of transport: 'O, what beauties I have seen! Glories of another world! What joys do I feel! I have seen the Saviour.' In this state of ecstacy he continued till the last.

"The manner in which Payson, of Portland, died, is familiar to many of you; still it may be well to remind you of some particulars. 'My God is in this room,' he said. 'I see him, and O how lovely is the sight; how glorious does he appear; worthy of ten thousand hearts, had I so many to give!' At another time he exclaimed: 'The Celestial City is full in view; its glories beam upon me; its breezes fan me; its odors are wafted to me, its music strikes upon my ear, and its spirit breathes into my heart; nothing separates me from it but the river of death, which now appears as a narrow rill, which may be crossed at a single step whenever God shall give permission. The Sun of Righteousness has been gradually drawing nearer and nearer, appearing larger and larger as he approached, and now he fills the whole hemisphere, pouring forth a flood of glory in which I seem to float like an insect in the beams of the sun; exulting yet almost trembling while I gaze on this excessive brightness, and wondering with unutterable wonder why God should deign thus to shine upon a sinful worm.'

Another and final instance. Let it be the experience of Adams, a missionary on the Gahoon river, Africa.

By temperament he was very unimaginative and practical. Those who were with him in his last sickness saw that feature still; there was no appearance of wandering of mind, no excitement of the imagination. They refused to believe him misled by a fevered brain; and declared that the full reality of the scene could only be felt by those who were present with their ears and saw with their eyes—seeing his face as it had been the face of an angel.

"About eleven o'clock on Tuesday morning he sunk into another paroxysm, and we again thought him dying; but after about an hour he revived and lay for some time in a quiet state, during which he seemed to be engaged in silent prayer. Then starting up, with great animation, he exclaimed: 'I hear music, beautiful music, the sweetest melodies! I see glorious sights; I see heaven. Yes, the gates are open; let me go. I want no more of earth; detain me no longer; let me go. O how beautiful! O, wonderful, wonderful views I have! Who would have thought that I should have had these glorious views? Wonderful, wonderful, wonderful things I see! Surely God would not show me all this glory, and then send me back to earth again. O, wonderful that such a sinner as I have been should be brought to this, and with tongue unloosed, and the bonds of sin broken, see and describe such scenes as these! But I am going. Remember what I have told you. I am going. My speech on earth is finished.' Then with both hands raised and gazing upward he became insensible to earth."

Anti-Sunday Papers.—At a meeting of the evangelical ministers of Chicago the following paper was adopted, May 1, 1871:

Whereas, We believe the publication and sale of Sunday newspapers to be a violation of the sanctity of the holy Sabbath, and so far subversive of good morals and the foundations of republican institutions; and

Whereas, The religious notices which usually appear at length in the Sunday papers constitute one inducement to Christian people to purchase these papers, and an excuse for them in so doing; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That we hereby pledge ourselves to withhold notices of church services from the Sunday papers; and that we request the conductors of the Sunday papers not to copy such notices as we may furnish to the papers published on Saturday.

2. That we would remind our Christian people of the inconsistency and evil influence of purchasing and reading or introducing into their families the Sunday papers.

3. That we are highly gratified with the course adopted by a large number of the real estate merchants of this city, who have pledged themselves to abstain from advertising in the Sunday papers, and that we commend this action to the consideration of other business men.

Behind the Master.—At the house of Dr. Bartol, of Boston, Dr. Channing inquired about a certain famous preacher there in the city.

"O, I should like to see him," said Dr. Lowell.

Who this preacher was we have no means of knowing. Do any of our readers know? If so, is he preaching yet? And if he has continued to this time, in what city does he labor, and to what denomination does he belong? Perhaps our readers are as ignorant as we of this particular man, but they have now and then listened to one like him, and they know how their sins have been reproved, their faith quickened, and their whole life enlarged.

Beware of that fatal distinction between the man as a Christian and the man as a citizen—the man as a man of business, which has grown out of the misunderstanding of the principle laid down by our Lord. Christian saint, Christian worshiper, Christian citizen, Christian merchant, Christian parent, be Christian wholly. Refuse to touch a thing in any department of your activity which will not square with your Christian ideas and aims.

When seed is sown into good ground it is variously productive, according to the fertility of the soil. So the fruitfulness of divine truth, when once appropriated, depends upon the degree in which it penetrates the whole interior life and all the powers of the spirit, stamping itself upon the truth-inspired cause of life.—Neander.

A bill has been introduced in the Ohio Legislature, providing that the earnings of convicts in the State prison, beyond the cost of their keeping, shall be given to the support of their families. This mode of dealing with convicts has for a long time been advocated by prison reformers.

EVENTIDE.

BY E. V. S.

The day has barred her golden gates;
Evening within the portal waits.

With royal splendor down the West
The flaming monarch sinks to rest.

The twinkling stars in ambush lie,
While shadows creep o'er earth and sky.

The turmoil and the strife of day,
Die with the fading light away.

A charm'd hush fills all the air;
It stills the throbbing pulse of care;

It cools the fever of unrest,
And sweetly soothes the troubled breast.

O evening hour, so softly calm,
Distilling now thy heavenly balm,

Bidding all vexing cares surcease—
Thou art the minister of peace.

Let morning's tints suffuse the skies,
Noon bid her golden glories rise;

Give me the peaceful eventide,
When thought can roam unhammered, wide,

And wing with aspiration high
Its starward flight; then heaven seems nigh,

Earth's petty cares remotely flee,
The spirit soars, my God, to thee!

LETTER ABOUT GALVESTON.

GALVESTON, May 25, 1871.

MR. EDITOR: Business requiring my attention in Texas, I left your city on the twenty-second, via Morgan's line, arriving in Galveston, on the magnificent steamer Whitney, at six o'clock the next morning. Since my last visit to the Island City nearly the whole of the "burnt district" has been rebuilt, now presenting whole blocks of elegant and substantial four-story buildings, whose fronts of brick or iron vie in architectural beauty with those on our celebrated Canal street; filled with large stocks of merchandise of all kinds adapted to the trade of Texas, indicating the existence of capital, energy and progress in the great and growing cotton port of the Gulf of Mexico, and of all Texas, from which port about three hundred thousand bales have been shipped this season, and there are at present sixty thousand bales more now in the press yards ready for shipment. Other evidences of improvement, in addition to those referred to, are seen all over the city, among which are many large and handsome private residences in course of erection. The Israelites have built themselves a synagogue in which to worship the God of their fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. May they soon learn of him of whom Moses and the prophets did write, saying, with the woman at the well of Samaria, "Is not this the Christ?" and with Nathaniel adoringly exclaim: "Thou art the Son of God!"

The next object of attraction, and by no means the least expressive indication of the character of the citizens, is the new, beautiful and commodious Methodist Episcopal Church South, called the St. John's, situated on Bath avenue, surrounded by numerous elegant, palatial private residences. This church was finished about six months ago, at a cost of $63,000, and on which not a dollar is owing. It contains one hundred and forty-two pews, seating one thousand worshipers. Many of the pews are free to all, while the number rented yield an income of $7,200 per annum. The Sabbath school room, in the basement, is large, light and airy, with comfortable seats for from five to six hundred children, exclusive of vestry rooms. The number of scholars on the school books is four hundred and sixty; the average attendance three hundred and sixty-five. It was the privilege of your correspondent to attend St. John's on last Sabbath morning, and to hear again the familiar voice of that devout and faithful minister who labored among us so many years in the Crescent City, beloved by all—the Rev. J. B. Walker, who, I am happy to say, is most acceptable, useful and much endeared to the people of his charge here and to the whole community; and with such a minister, and with such a temple, the minister and people may truly say, "To us the lines have fallen in pleasant places, yea we have a goodly heritage," for the Lord is with them in the power of his Spirit. Sixty-two precious souls have been added to their number during the past few months. Bros. Lewis, Briggs and McMahan have joined "the church of the first-born in heaven."

In conclusion allow me to add that the services of the morning were peculiarly interesting, the sermon being specially addressed to the Sabbath school children, all of whom were in the most happy frame of mind, and the soul of their pastor was most certainly in unison with theirs, for Bro. Walker loves children. Before he began to preach he said to them: "Now, children, if you get tired you may twist about and change position just as much as you please. I know it is hard for you to sit still. I was a little boy myself once, and I could not sit still; indeed, I can hardly sit still now; all I want of you is not to talk, and I will try and do my best to preach to you about Jesus." He then read for his text the thirty-fifth verse of the eighth chapter of Acts: "Then Philip opened his mouth and began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus." This discourse was one of Bro. Walker's happy efforts, and many hearts, young and old, were moved to tears listening to the story of the cross. R.

TRANSFERS.

MR. EDITOR: Having embraced a religion of peace, and had committed to me a dispensation of that gospel whose glorious mission and burden is "peace on earth and good will to men," it accords with my spirit and calling to do what I may to quiet the dissensions of my brethren, and to direct them to those loftier reflections which alone can raise them above the contention and strife engendered by a too worldly and human view of the great matters appertaining to the spiritual conquest of the world. Prompted by these feelings, I tried, some months since, as best I could, to put a quietus upon the useless and even hurtful contention about "Who immersed John Clarke," which was being agitated in your columns to the exclusion of themes more worthy a Christian Advocate and a Christian people. I should not like to have charged upon me, at the judgment, the paternity of such articles as sometimes find their way into our Advocates, and I am sorry preachers can find time to write them.

I am sorry J. W. took such large liberty with the thoughts and opinions of his brethren; but knowing him to be a man of large views, I excuse him, for he certainly meant no harm. I regret the impression made by Cincinnatus. His language is strong, and well calculated to lead strangers especially to suppose that what is simply a conviction of policy (I use the word in its best sense) among brethren is a slumbering volcano! He laid himself liable, and "Sigma" was quick to perceive the opportunity of striking a telling blow with a blade just a little too keen. This Sigma is a sharp writer, but I am afraid there is a little of the vinegar sharpness; he shows most too much relish for his subject, and seems to me a little glad of such an opportunity to make a good point. Now it is to the spirit and language in which this discussion is conducted that I object. This is the error I would see corrected. I have been twenty-four years a member of the Louisiana Conference, and think I know something of its history and policy, and do not think I can be greatly mistaken as to the spirit of my brethren. We do want transfers; there is not a dissenting voice to this. I appeal to my brethren, did we not in all sincerity pass the resolution of invitation? Are there not wide wastes "to be supplied?" Have we not prayed all over the Conference for laborers? We want talent, too—the very best in the church. Many of our communities and churches are filled with people of intelligence and learning. There is work enough here for many of our best men. Let Sigma come along, and if he should merit a "preferred appointment," and it be thought for the glory of God he should fill it, I don't think anybody will complain. What we want is more "preferred appointments"—if I may use the expression, though I don't like it. A Methodist preacher ought to prefer the appointment in which he can do most good and save most souls. We have many works where a faithful man would receive a warm greeting and an ample support. This implies preference for quite a number of appointments, according to our itinerant plan, which is certainly the best ever adopted for the extension and growth of the church. It is opposed to the letter and spirit of the policy so long maintained in the Louisiana Conference, with reference to the appointments in the city of New Orleans, where there was supposed to be good ground for an "exception." Right here I wish to speak of that which astonishes me most of all; and it is that men of God and ministers should not be able to analyze and discuss questions of church policy—or economy, if you would like the word better—without involving personal feelings or impeaching the fidelity of their brethren. I know that it has been characteristic of human nature, ever since Adam laid his fault upon Eve, to look round for somebody to blame with whatever of wrong it may have discovered. But I always thought grace could overcome this propensity, and enable men to investigate questions of policy or plans of action, and decide upon the best course, without its implying any crime in their brethren who strongly advocated a different plan, with the same motive and to the same end. I confess myself unable to see the sin of differing in opinion from a Bishop or any one else. And I am quite as obtuse as to the necessity for any uncharitableness in the case. Certainly a body of Christian ministers may faithfully investigate such great questions as involve the success of their labors without committing sin, if they will only draw upon history and experience for their facts, and not upon their feelings.

If the policy in dispute is wrong, let it be proven by an appeal to history and facts. If there has been a leaning toward "preferred appointments," as represented by Cincinnatus, let us ask, Is this an evil? Has the church languished under it? Have other organizations, manifestly less efficient than ours, outstripped us in their operations because of this deviation from our excellent plan? Has it operated unfavorably for the development of the talent of our Conference, and has the church suffered at other points, as well as at the "preferred appointments?" Is there in this policy a leaning to worldly wisdom and human power, rather than trusting to the Holy Spirit? Does the spirit that prompts it, whether in Bishop, preacher or congregation, accord with the spirit of Paul: "I have planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the increase?"

Now, by seeking answers to these and like questions, we may legitimately reach a wise conclusion relative to this or any other policy. If I have, in any measure, been able to show unto others "a more excellent way," I have accomplished that which I proposed to myself in writing this article. If questions of interest to the church can be discussed in this way, I see nothing but good to come of such discussion; but if not, then, in the name of our common Christianity, let them not be paraded before the public.

A. E. GOODWYN.

OPELOUSAS, May 16, 1871.

MOANING CHRISTIANS.—There are to-day many moaning Christians in the world who are perpetually wishing themselves in heaven, while they ought to thank God that they are still on earth where they can work for Christ. We are persuaded that much of the common talk about getting to heaven has an unconscious selfishness at its root—the desire for heaven being simply a wish to get rid of the responsibilities of earth. We do not of course object to the comforting reflection that there is a rest in heaven after life's labors are over, but we do object to persons who long for the rest without being willing to perform the labor.—Methodist.

A NEGRO, on being examined, was asked if his master was a true Christian. "No, sir, he is a politician," was the reply.

Reminiscences of Rev. J. I. E. Byrd.

NUMBER TWO.

There seems to be something stiff and unnatural in my writing "Rev. J. I. E. Byrd." I must abstain from it as much as possible, except as the running title of my numbers. He was generally called by his relatives and early associates "Ira," with the prefixes of "brother" or "cousin," as the case of relationship might be. The preachers generally called him "Bro. Ira Byrd," and in his old age all classes called him "Uncle Ira." There is something touching to the affections of his numerous surviving friends in the endearing appellation. I shall use it freely hereafter. After a short season of deep awakening to a sense of his sinfulness, guilt and danger, and of melting, subduing penitence before God, Ira Byrd was suddenly and powerfully converted at a public meeting, where there was a good deal of religious feeling and excitement. It was not necessary for any one to tell him that he was converted; he knew it of himself; he had the witness in himself. The change was so manifest and glorious he could but know it, and under the strong impulses of his new-born nature, and with a heart overflowing with love to God and man, he immediately began to "Publish to all around

What a dear Saviour he had found."

The older members encouraged him to witness a good confession, and tell to others the glorious news of his accession to the household of faith. He was soon called on to bear his part in the exercises of the love-feast, the class room and the prayer meetings. "Use grace and grow in grace" was then an axiom in the church. Ira attended all church meetings within his reach, with feelings of the deepest interest, learned the new tunes and songs, and exhorted and prayed in public whenever called on by his brethren. It soon began to be whispered about that "Ira Byrd is going to be a preacher." "Yes," responded others, "it looks a good deal like it, the way he is going on." But Ira himself seemed unconscious of wherewith the thing would grow. The more he sung, prayed and exhorted, the more young people he led to the altar, and talked to and wept and prayed with until they were converted, the happier he felt, and the closer to God and heaven he seemed to be, and was thus encouraged to be always abounding in the work of the Lord. But it soon came upon his young heart, with the emphasis of divine authority, that his designation was the Christian ministry. The struggle was terrible, but short. His obedient heart soon yielded to the mandate of the Holy Ghost, and with characteristic modesty and self-distrust he submitted his case to his brethren. He was duly recommended and admitted on trial in the itinerancy, and his immediate and life-long success has shown the wisdom of the church in its course toward him. But what had one with such a limited education, and withal so young and inexperienced, to preach about? What did he know of systematic theology or ecclesiastical economy to teach the people? Not much, we admit. But he had a wonderful story to tell the people, every word of which he knew to be true, and that was simply the history of his own former wickedness, guilt and danger, succeeded by his awakening and conversion, and the great happiness of feeling assured of his present safety and heirship of heaven; and while telling this, and urging the people to come and taste and see for themselves that the Lord is good, he could in the meantime be prosecuting his studies, and preparing for greater usefulness in the ministry.

Suppose this truly converted youth and divinely called preacher, instead of being sent on a circuit to study and practice preaching in conjunction, had been secluded four or five years in some literary institution or theological seminary to learn how to preach, what, in all probability, would have been the result? His glowing love and burning zeal, his unyielding energy and holy power in preaching, would have cooled down to zero; and while he might have emerged from his seclusion somewhat polished in his manners and scholastic in his appearance, capable of reciting prayers gracefully and reading a paper to his congregation, instead of preaching a gospel sermon, we would never have seen him the Ira Byrd we so long knew him to be. There is practical wisdom in our plan of training and developing young preachers. The greatest theologians and most effective preachers on the continent have been made in this way.

Ira Byrd entered the ministry at a very auspicious period to insure success. His first circuit was Warren, embracing a large tract of country in the northeastern portion of central Georgia. He was the junior of John Tarrant, with Lewis Myers his presiding elder. 1811 was the year of the great earthquakes. The center of this great upheaval seemed to be about eastern Missouri and southern Kentucky, but its undulations were often seen and felt to the Atlantic coast. This convulsion of nature created the greatest alarm among the population everywhere. Many thought the end of all things was at hand, and the day of final retribution near by. The people were moved by fear, and there was a general awakening on the subject of religion. In too many instances this awakening subsided with the disappearance of immediate danger, but in a large number of cases it was deep and lasting, and resulted in genuine conversions. Scores and hundreds of people flocked into the church, many of whom made our best and most reliable members ever afterward. Bro. Byrd repeatedly told me that his congregations were unusually large everywhere this year, and that successful preaching was never so easily performed by him. The hearts of the people were like troubled waters everywhere, so that under the singing of a spiritual song, a fervent prayer or earnest exhortation, they often fell down, overpowered with religious emotions, only to arise with an assurance of the pardon of all their former sins. Ira Byrd seemed to have gotten into a new state of being. He enjoyed the unprecedented excitement supremely. Instead of the day of judgment being near by, he rather thought millennial glory was bursting upon the world. This seems to have been a new circuit, not previously known on the minutes as a separate charge, but at the end of the year they returned a membership of six hundred and seventeen whites and one hundred and fifty-four colored. In 1812 Ira Byrd was on the Appalachee circuit, as the junior of Henry Bass, with Lovick Pierce for his presiding elder. This circuit was also in Georgia. I recollect nothing very special that Bro. Byrd communicated to me about his labors that year, except the general prosperity of the church, and his great admiration of his colleague and presiding elder. He stood very fair with his brethren, and was very generally acceptable among the people. At the ensuing Conference he was admitted into full connection and ordained deacon. We shall next find him in the southwestern corner of what was then the great Mississippi Territory, out of which the States of Mississippi and Alabama have since been made.

In 1813 the Mississippi district was an out-post of the Tennessee Conference. The country between it and the Tennessee and South Carolina Conferences was inhabited by various Indian tribes, some of whom were hostile to the whites, especially those in the Alabama division of the Territory. The preachers who were appointed from the older Conferences to this far-off district not only had to run considerable risk and danger in getting there, but when once there they were almost completely cut off from all communication with the Conferences from whence they came. This being the case, so far as I know, the Bishops never sent any preacher to the Territory by the more exercise of episcopal prerogative. Volunteers were called for, and only suitable men, who were ready and willing to come, were sent. At the South Carolina Conference, held late in 1812, J. I. E. Byrd and John Shrock were sent to the Mississippi Territory. After much fatigue and exposure from camping out at night, and many dangers from the lurking savages, they arrived in the settlements on the Tombeckbee, where John Shrock took his work as the colleague of Richmond Nalley, while Bro. Byrd went westward to the Mississippi river, where he labored as the junior of William Winans, on Wilkinson circuit. Wilkinson circuit then implied a great deal more than the Wilkinson circuit of the present day. It embraced nearly the entire territory between the Homochitto river on the north and the lake coast on the south. The usual size of circuits then was twenty-four regular appointments to be filled in twenty-eight days. I have nothing very special to notice for this year, except that Bro. Byrd was generally reverenced for his personal holiness, and admired for his fluency and power in preaching. He here formed a life-long attachment to his colleague, William Winans, who already saw in the undeveloped stripling the elements of his future greatness.

The minutes of the informal Conference held in the Mississippi Territory, embracing the appointments of the preachers for 1814, were never published, and it is not known that they exist anywhere. The probability is that the only copy made out was lost in an attempt to get it to the Tennessee Conference through the Indian nations. I happen to know, however, from Bro. Byrd's own statement, that his appointment for that year was to the Tombeckbee circuit. This was a frontier circuit, and embraced all the lower valley of the Tombeckbee river from Fort Early to Mobile, and then away round westward, so as to include all the settlements on the Chickasawhay river. The war between the United States and England was then raging at its highest pitch on the coast about Pensacola and Mobile, and this circuit was in the immediate vicinity of the hostile and murderous Creek and Seminole Indians, so that the inhabitants on the Tombeckbee generally lived in forts, and in order to preach to them the preachers had to steal their way from fort to fort as best they could. I shall have a thrilling incident to relate of Ira Byrd in my next number. He encountered two Indian warriors under circumstances calculated to make a man feel a good deal like his time had come. J. THE BEST ROBE.—A young lady in a rural district was invited to a ball. She anticipated the festivity with great pleasure, and was anxiously making suitable preparation for the occasion. Just at the time a peddler visited her home with a beautiful robe for sale. It struck her fancy. It was precisely fitted for her adornment at the ball, and her heart was set on obtaining it. She resolved that when her absent father returned to his house she would persuade him to buy the gay dress for her. On his return she met him, stated the case, and begged him to buy her the dress. "Ah, my daughter," said he, "there is another robe which you need much more than you do that!" It was a nail in a sure place. She had heard many sermons and private exhortations and remonstrances, but nothing had ever affected her as did that paternal remark. The gay robe, the ball, the anticipated pleasures, were all forgotten, and her thoughts occupied with the "better robe." She retired to her room to meditate, confess her sins, weep and pray. She was soon converted, and was filled with sweeter, nobler pleasures than were ever enjoyed at a ball—pleasures that death will not destroy, but refine, augment and perpetuate. What was still better, her conversion was the means of saving all the members of her family.

Reader, are you adorned in that "better robe?" Remember the words of the parable: "When the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment; and he said unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding garment?" And he was speechless. Religious Herald.

MY BABY.

BY ANNIE CLYDE.

Such a little break in the sod!,
So tiny to be a grave!
Oh, how can I render so soon to God
The beautiful gift he gave?

Must I put you away, my pet—
My tender bud unblown—
With the dew of the morning upon you yet,
And your blossom all unshown?

My heart is near to break
For the voice I shall not hear,
For the clinging arms around my neck,
And the footsteps drawing near.

The tiny, tottering feet,
Striving for mother's knee,
For the lisping tones so sweet,
And the baby's kiss to me.

For the precious Mother-name,
And the touch of the little hand;
Oh, am I so very much to blame
If I shrink from the sore demand?

How shall I know her voice,
Or the greeting of her eyes,
Mid the countless cherubs that rejoice
In the gardens of Paradise?

How shall I know my own
Where the air is white with wings,
My babe, so soon from my bosom flown
To the angels' ministerings?

And this is the end of it all!
Of my waiting and my pain—
Only a little funeral pall,
And empty arms again.

Oh, baby, my heart is sore
For the love that was to be,
For the untried dream of love, now o'er,
Twixt thee, my child, and me.

Yet over this little head,
Lying so still on my knee,
I thank my God for the bliss of the dead,
For the joy of the soul set free.

'Tis a weary world, at best,
'Tis a world that she will not know.
Would I waken her out of such perfect rest,
For its sorrow and strife? Ah, no!

Escaped are its thorns and harms;
The only path she has trod
Is that which leads from her mother's arms
Into the arms of God.

THE MINISTRY.

Mr. Editor: The agency that has for nearly four thousand years accomplished more for the general good of mankind than any other, is the divinely appointed ministry. The "line of succession" is long. Under its banners have served many of earth's most illustrious sons. Royal dignity and ministerial humility have met in the same person. The judge and patriarch of a century have served beside the stripling of a score, each honored of God and loved of men. The necessity of such a ministry is great. It must be called of God; this is indispensable. The human heart, in all the labyrinthal depths of its depravity, is to be searched. Besides, many special obstacles are to be overcome. "The heathen rage and the people imagine vain things." "Ethiopia stretches forth her hands unto God." Moral Egyptian darkness covers the vast Asiatic continent; only here and there a faint gleam of light. The far-off islands of the sea are shrouded in the shadow of death. From Mexico to Patagonia the wails of benighted millions ascend into the ear of a pitying Father. From the hills and valleys of Judea, the deserts of Arabia and the mountains of Turkey is heard the cry: "One God, and Mohammed is his prophet"—"the Koran or the sword." The surrounding appearances are wild, and strange, unearthly sounds fill the air. Those who once occupied Jerusalem, as the heritage of heaven, are driven outcasts over the world because they persist in saying: "We are Moses' disciples; as for this fellow, we know not from whence he is." Then there be many that say: Who will show us any good? Like vipers in the sultry dog-days, their eyes are darkened, and their tongues shoot out all-devouring words. They sneeringly inquire: "Where is thy God?" Like wandering stars, borne on the black wings of destruction, they would "bind the sweet influences of Pleiades and loose the bands of Orion," crying, "There is no God." Wise in their own conceits, they are traveling with electric speed to a yawning hell, dragging multitudes with them. Halting between two opinions, one crying Paul, another Apollos, is the Christian world suffused with error. Like the warriors who sprang from the fabled dragon's teeth, the Christians often turn arms against each other, until war and carnage overspread the plain. The bloodhounds of persecution, though glutted with the blood of martyrs, still howl for more. Traces of the fiery simooms, that brought death into the world, are visible even in the blooming gardens of gospel light.

Intemperance, like the far-famed maelstrom, engulfs countless thousands, murdered blood stains the ground, while curses, sighs and tears are borne along by the breezes. Truly the harvest is great! God's work is to be done; he must choose the workman. "God sees not as man sees." The most unpromising scion may bear the richest fruit. The stammering Moses was preferred before the silver-tongued Aaron. Learned scribes and doctors were passed by, but the prophetic mantle fell on Elisha, the ox-driver. The Galilean fishermen, the oppressing tax gatherer, and the tall sinner of Tarsus, would never have been chosen by man for the work they performed. None taketh this honor, except he that God calls. The character and rewards of the ministry are of high importance. It should be pure in self-denial, unwearied in thankless toil, bold in love, prudent because prayerful, and eloquent because mighty in the Scriptures, and apt to teach therein. Bearing glad news to others, he himself is sorrowful. He is bound in spirit, while the floods clap their hands and the saints rejoice. The world sleeps peacefully, but he agonizes in prayer. Weeping, he climbs the rugged cliffs, sowing the precious seed; but the multitudes, with upturned faces, drink honey from the rocks. A true philanthropist, he is earth's benefactor. He should be encouraged, seeing his services are always in demand. Battles rage, earthquakes rock the mountains, and tempests lash the ocean, but men will hear his message of "Jesus and the resurrection." Though making many rich, he is poor. Possessing no foot of land, he sees "sweet fields beyond the swelling flood;" he is now traveling through Beulah, and will soon be there. No gold rewards his toil, no marble shaft marks his tomb, but a crown of life and an eternal remembrance are his. Such is the ministry in its work, its influence and in itself. The mighty men who in other days have blown the trumpet are gone. Their warfare's o'er, their victory's won. Every breeze brings fresh news of some warrior's departure to his reward. May God fill up the broken ranks, that the cause of truth may triumph, until Jerusalem shall break forth in songs, and deserts learn the joy.

THE EVENING OF WESLEY'S LIFE.

We find in the Rev. Mr. Janes' Wesley His Own Historian, entries recording the successive birthdays of the closing years of his life, and other indices of his advancing age. They are remarkable as illustrations of the persistent activity of his vital energies, and the calm, trustful spirit with which he went on with his work as he approached the end. The first entry we note is Wednesday, June 28, 1786:

"I entered into the eighty-third year of my age. I am a wonder to myself. It is now twelve years since I have felt any such sensation as weakness. I am never tired (such is the goodness of God!) either with writing, preaching or traveling. One natural cause undoubtedly is my continual exercise and change of air."

March 1, 1788, he had begun to feel conscious of the advance of age, and wrote: "I considered, what difference do I find by an increase of years? I find: 1, less activity—I walk slower, particularly up hill; 2, my memory is not so quick; 3, I cannot read so well by candle light. But I bless God that all my other powers of body and mind remain just as they are."

The last week of his eighty-fourth year Wesley preached seventeen times. He wrote, June 28, 1788, on entering his eighty-fifth year: "What cause I have to praise God, as for a thousand spiritual blessings, so for bodily blessings also! How little I have suffered yet by the rust of numerous years!"

He felt a few incipient signs of physical decay, it is true, which he described, but did not feel weariness in traveling or preaching.

"I am not conscious of any decay in writing sermons, which I do as readily, and, I believe, as correctly as ever." Among the causes for continued strength, he attributed constant exercise and change of air; regularity in sleep; his power to command sleep; rising at four o'clock and preaching at five in the morning; freedom from pain, sorrow and anxious care."

December 15, of the same year: "About this time I was reflecting on the gentle steps whereby age steals upon us. Take only one instance: Four years ago my sight was as good as it was at five and twenty. I then began to observe that I did not see things quite so clear with my left eye as with my right—all objects appeared a little browner to that eye. I began next to find some difficulty in reading small print by candle-light. A year after I found it in reading by daylight. In winter, 1786, I could not well read our four-shilling hymn book, unless with a large candle; the next year I could not read letters if written with a small or bad hand. Last winter a pearl appeared in my left eye, the sight of which grew exceeding dim. The right eye seems unaltered, only I am a great deal nearer sighted than I was. Thus are 'those that look out at the windows darkened'—one of the marks of old age. But I bless God 'the grasshopper' is not 'a burden.' I am still capable of traveling, and my memory is much the same as it ever was, and so I think is my understanding."

Sunday, June 28, 1789: "This day I enter on my eighty-sixth year. I now find I grow old—I, my sight is decayed, so that I cannot read small print except in a strong light; 2, my strength is decayed, so that I walk much slower than I did some years since; my memory of names, whether of persons or places, is decayed, till I stop a little to recollect them. What I should be afraid of is, if I took thought for the morrow, that my body should weigh down my mind, and create either stubbornness by the decrease of my understanding, or peevishness by the increase of my bodily infirmities; but thou shalt answer for me, O Lord, my God." October 8, 1789: "My sight is so decayed that I cannot read well by candle-light, but I can write as well as ever; and my strength is much lessened, so that I cannot easily preach above twice a day. But I bless God my memory is not much decayed, and my understanding is as clear as it has been these fifty years."

January 1, 1790: "I am now an old man, decayed from head to foot. My eyes are dim, my right hand shakes much, my mouth is hot and dry every morning. I have a lingering fever almost every day, my motion is weak and slow. However, blessed be God, I do not slack my labor. I can preach and write well."

Friday, March 26: "I finished my sermon on the 'Wedding Garment,' perhaps the last that I shall write. My eyes are now waxed dim, my natural force is abated. However, while I can, I would fain do a little for God before I drop into the dust."

June 28: "This day I enter into my eighty-eighth year. For above eighty-six years I found none of the infirmities of old age. My eyes did not wax dim, neither was my natural strength abated. But last August I found almost a sudden change; my eyes were so dim that no glasses would help me; my strength likewise now quite forsook me, and probably will not return in this world. But I feel no pain from head to foot, only it seems nature is exhausted, and, humbly speaking, will sink more till

The last entry in his diary is dated October 24, 1790, and records his preaching at Spitalfields Church, and at St. Paul's Shodwell.

He preached his last sermon February 17, 1791, and died on March 2 of that year.

The Bitters.—A church is divided into two parties. What one likes the other abhors. They feel it their duty to stick to it. In the devotional meeting they pray at each other's inconsistencies, hoping that the prayer will go to heaven, but by the way of Deacon Rafferty's pew, just stopping a moment to give him a shaking. If one wants the church built on the hill, the other wants it down by the saw-mill. If the one wants the minister to avoid politics, the other would like to have him get up on the side of the pulpit and give three cheers for John Brown's knapsack, which is said to be still "strapped on his back!" When Elder Bangs sits still in prayer, Elder Crank stands up to show his contempt for such behavior. If one puts ten cents on the plate, the other throws a dollar on the top of it, to show his abhorrence of such parsimony. The whole church catches the quarrelsome spirit, and begins to go down. One-half of the choir eats up the other half. The pew devours the pulpit, and the pulpit swallows the pew. The session take down the trustees, and the trustees masticate the session. The Sunday school and sewing society show their teeth, and run out their claws, and get their backs up, and spit fire. And church councils assemble to stop the quarrel and cry "Seat! seat!" to the infamous howlers. But the claws go on with their work, till there stands the old church by the wayside, windowless and forsaken—nothing more nor less than a monument to the memory of the dead ecclesiastical cats of Kilkenny!

BAPTIST ITEMS.

The Baptists have joined with the Presbyterians in taking possession of Chicago. On Friday last the Bible and Publication Society held its sessions. This organization, which claims to have initiated the colporteur system in America, printed last year about six million copies of books, tracts, etc. The total of bound volumes thus far issued is five hundred and thirty-four. Three hundred and eight new Sunday schools have been organized during the year, and five hundred converts have been baptized by colporteurs. The receipts in the business department for the year ending March 1, 1871, are $274,439.09, being $19,925.09 more than the business receipts of last year. The receipts in the missionary department are $57,709.60, being $9,574.59 less than the benevolent receipts last year.

The Home Missionary Society met on Saturday, and a breezy political discussion ensued. The Rev. Dr. Burroughs, of Richmond, Virginia, declared it to be his belief that the holding of the Africans in bondage was not morally wrong. The Rev. Dr. Travner, of Memphis, thought the negro was never so happy as when in chains in the South. To this the Rev. Mr. Grimes, of Boston, retorted that the blood of the two races had been coursing for fifty years through his veins without quarreling. So great warmth was felt by both parties that the convention adjourned without final action on the report. The statistics of the society for the past year are thus stated: The work of the society has been divided into three departments, the Northern, the Southern and the Church Edifice. In the Northern department two hundred and seventeen missionaries have been employed in twenty-eight States and Territories. Twenty-three of these laborers are German Baptist ministers; twelve are Scandinavians; and the others are preaching in the French, Dutch, Chinese and Indian languages. In San Francisco, Ah Fung, a Chinese minister, preaches every Sunday to congregations in the streets, numbering from five hundred to one thousand five hundred, and $20,000 has been provided for the establishment of a mission under his direction. In the southern half of the country over one hundred missionaries have been employed. In the Freedmen's Educational Department $55,000 has been expended in the establishment of schools and the support of colored students for the ministry. The valuation of school property is $130,000, and two thousand seven hundred and sixty-nine persons have received instruction in week-day classes. In the Church Edifice Department sixty churches have been erected, and church property has been saved worth $100,000.—Christian Union.

Jack's Half-Penny.—A poor aged widow was very fond of the Bible, but she had never learned to read. She lived in a lonely place, and the family where she lodged could not read. But there was one cottage near, and in it a little boy, a shepherd's son, who could read. Jack, however, was full of play, and was not fond of reading the Bible. The poor old woman made her livelihood by spinning, and she determined to rise one hour sooner in the morning to spin for one half-penny more, to be given to the shepherd's boy to read to her a chapter every evening. To this Jack at once agreed. This made the poor woman very happy, and she used to say: "The lines are fallen to me in pleasant places."

Little boys, when you can, read the Scriptures to comfort the old people about you. Perhaps you may make lame and blind people say, for your sakes: "The lines have fallen to us in pleasant places; yea, we have a goodly heritage."

The trustees of the Syracuse University, New York, at their recent meeting, adopted Mr. H. N. White's plan for a building in the Anglo-Italian style, ninety by one hundred and sixty-eight feet, with Mansard domes and towers. Dr. Steel, of Genesee College, was chosen president of the College of the University. Profs. French and Coddington, of Genesee College, and Prof. Brown, of Cornell University, were elected to professorships in the new institution. Professorships of modern languages and of history and logic were authorized to be filled by the executive committee. The students of Genesee College will go in a body to Syracuse. The graduating class will defer their graduation one year, in order to receive their degree here. Mr. E. Remington, of Ilion, presented a check of $50,000, doubling his subscription of $25,000. He is the gentleman who presented the institution with the magnificent block of buildings which was recently bought for it.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Fine Church.—The St. James Methodist Episcopal church, New York, Rev. H. B. Ridgaway, D. D., pastor, was dedicated on the fourteenth ultimo. The cost was $123,000; $43,000 were raised on dedication day.

The Jesuits are establishing a large university in the vicinity of St. Louis. They have secured three hundred and fifty acres of land nine miles from the city, and propose to put up a building worth $500,000. They call the new institution the St. Louis University.

The Andover Conference of Congregational churches has admitted women to full membership. At its annual meeting, recently held in Lowell, out of sixty-nine delegates present twenty-five were women, from ten different churches. The Andover Conference has set a good example, and we trust it may be followed.

The vote in the English House of Commons on Mr. Miall's motion for the disestablishment of the Church of England was eighty-nine yeas to two hundred and eighty-five nays—a strong show of force for the advocates of a free church in a free state. The pluck and persistence of the Nonconformists will change their minority to a majority at no distant day.

Death of a Missionary.—All churches will sympathize with the Scotch Established Church in the death of Dr. Ogilvie, one of its ablest and most honored missionaries in India. At the time of his death, after a quarter of a century of work, he was head of the institute at Calcutta. There are few men whose loss will be more widely felt in the missionary field.

Shelters for Jesuits.—The London Court Journal says: "The Jesuits who have been expelled from Rome are, it seems, about to seek refuge in Prussia. It appears somewhat singular that the two most Protestant countries in the world, England and Prussia, should be nearly the only ones where this sect is allowed to reside. Malta, we believe, might be very properly called the home of the Jesuits.

Zion's Herald announces that the State having empowered a consolidation of the Boston Theological Seminary with the Boston University, the trustees of each corporation have effected a union. The notice of the agreement has been filed with the Secretary of State. Rev. Dr. Clark, Edwin H. Johnson, Esq., and Hon. L. W. Pond have been elected trustees of the university from the trustees of the seminary.

Bishop Colenso has remarkably clear views of the relations of Church and State under the English government. It is said that in conducting the services he prefaces the reading of the creed by the remark that personally he does not believe it, but that he recites it as an officer of the crown. Some of the nice ingenuity expended in discovering mathematical difficulties in the books of Moses might have been well applied in settling a case of conscience.—Independent.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church now consists of eight branches, with headquarters at as many cities from Boston to St. Louis, numbering three hundred and twenty auxiliaries, with thirteen thousand members. Its fields of operation are in India and China. The Chicago branch has just been holding its annual meeting in the Centenary church. Reports show increasing interest and receipts.

The presbytery of New Orleans reports twenty Sabbath schools within its jurisdiction, with three hundred and thirty teachers and three thousand scholars. Average attendance of scholars, two thousand. Ten teachers and fifty-three scholars have professed faith in Christ. Contributions for their own use by these schools, $6,554; for missionary purposes, $352. All the pastors preach to the children.

The Wesleyan Methodists, with about twenty thousand members, and the Primitive Methodists, with about half as many, have been trying to unite; but the smaller body, which is, of course, twice as jealous of its dignity as the larger, declines the overtures. The "Primitives" have hitherto maintained a close though informal relation with the Established Church; now that the establishment has passed away, they have applied for authority to modify the trust deeds of their chapels and schools, with the purpose of setting up for themselves.—Independent.

The Rev. Asa Bullard writes to the Chicago Advance that he has made statistical investigation regarding the average moral status of ministers' sons and deacons' daughters. Massachusetts and Connecticut furnished the field. In 448 ministers' and deacons' families there were 2,101 children over 15 years of age, of whom 1,414 were hopefully pious; 93 were in the ministry or fitting for it; and only thirty-four dissipated! And all the remaining children, with very few exceptions, were respectable and useful citizens. Mr. Bullard challenges a comparison with these figures on the part of any other class or profession among parents.

The first Methodist chapel in Rome was dedicated on April 9. The building is a small and unpretending structure, which was formerly used for a billiard-room, and has been fitted up into a neat, suitable room, capable of accommodating from one hundred and fifty to two hundred persons. It is in the Via dei Barbieri, "within a gunshot" of the Pantheon, and near the Ghetto, or Jews' quarter. The dedicatory sermon was preached by the Rev. Henry J. Piggott, the superintendent of the Italian missions. A sermon was preached in the evening by Signor Sciarrelli, of Naples.

The Congregationalist says: "Appropriations were made last week by the Education Society to two hundred and fifty-nine young men. About $7,000 were thus expended. The churches have so responded to the call of the society that it was able thus to make its regular appropriation. Nowhere has there been so great an advance of late in the number of young men receiving the aid of the society as in Connecticut. The number in the Yale Seminary thus assisted was thirty; in the college, nine; at the Theological School at Hartford, fifteen; in all, fifty-four. Two years ago in April the number added in Connecticut at the same institutions was only twenty."

The anniversaries of the English Baptist societies took place in April, in London. The Foreign Missionary Society, says the Freeman, never presented a better account of a year's work. The receipts were £32,878 12*s* 1*d*. Good tidings were reported from all the missions, and progress, though slow, toward the independence of the native churches in India. The British and Irish Mission Society reported that thirty-four missionaries were employed during the year in England, and twenty-six in Ireland. The Bible Translation Society has for more than twenty years employed Dr. Wenger in preparing a Bengalee version of the Scriptures, which is spoken of in the highest terms.

The defeat of the clerical party, says the Methodist, in the German Reichstag, foreshadows the policy of the government regarding the Pope. The Emperor treated respectfully but evasively the Catholic "interviewers" who solicited his intervention for the Pope. He would not, if he could, attempt to bolster up the dying papacy; but now that his Parliament, out of three hundred and eighty-two votes, has given but about sixty-five for the ultramontane policy, he may feel at liberty to quietly ignore the papal party. A Catholic sovereign has overthrown the papacy; it would be a queer spectacle for brave old Protestant William to undertake to restore it. Such political antics are inconceivable to the sober German mind.

Evangelization Among the Jews. The first annual meeting of the American Christian Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews was held June 12, at the Cooper Institute, Rev. S. C. K. Milligan presiding. Rev. A. C. Iris, secretary, stated that the Jewish population in this city is sixty-five thousand, and that the society had caused one hundred and fourteen thousand pages of tracts to be distributed among them. The receipts for the year were $2,040.32; expenditures, $2,004.08; balance, $136.24. An auxiliary branch of the society has been organized in Somerset, Wyoming county, Iowa. The president and secretary were re-elected, and William H. Jackson was chosen treasurer for the ensuing year. The society intends as soon as possible to publish a Jewish monthly.

The Rev. Dr. Peck has negotiated the purchase of the St. Charles Hotel property and the adjoining land of Mr. Hosmer, in Syracuse, New York, measuring one hundred and six by one hundred and thirty-two feet, with three fronts. It contains a brick building, five stories and basement, one-half of which is to be presented to the Syracuse University. The other half is to be available to the Methodist Episcopal Church for its press and book room, and a college of missionaries, for the propagation of evangelical Christianity. This college will be under the direction of an entirely distinct corporation, and will not receive a dollar of University funds. This magnificent gift, costing $125,000, represents a single name, which is not made public. Sufficient money will be paid to render it easy to pay the rest by a few years' revenue from rents.—Methodist.

An Irish soldier who had been abroad was asked if he met with much hospitality where he had been. "O yes," replied he, "too much; I was in the hospital almost all the time I was there."

Bishop Keenen returned home on Friday, the second instant, in good health, and preached at the Carondelet Street church on Sunday last, filling both the morning and night appointments.

The New York Book Concern troubles seem to be far from a satisfactory settlement. The following statement from the Western Christian Advocate presents the latest aspects of the subject:

Another chapter in the history of the Book Concern imbroglio will have to be written. Dr. Lanahan has appealed to the Superior Court of New York city to issue a writ of mandamus to compel Dr. Carlton to allow him equal authority and control of the books, papers, etc., of the Concern with himself. He claims that the charter makes him a co-agent, and not an assistant, and wants a judicial decision to this effect. The Book Committee, learning of these extraordinary proceedings, met in New York last Thursday, and have suspended him from office, and appointed the fifteenth of June for an investigation of his case. We learn by dispatches to the Associated Press that Dr. Carlton has presented charges against him.

Wesley's Leben.—This little volume is a translation into German of Dr. Summers' Life of Wesley. The translation has been accomplished by Rev. J. A. G. Rabe, pastor of the Dryades Street German church of this city. It is for the use of our German Sunday schools, and for general circulation among our German people. Knowing the translator as we do, we have no doubt that his work is well done. It will be productive of great good in our German work. The volume is a small duodecimo of one hundred and two pages, handsomely bound, and in clear type, on good paper. It bears the imprint of the publishing house of the Evangelical Apologist, No. 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

Emory and Henry College.—Our readers who have boys to educate should not fail to notice the advertisement of Emory and Henry, which appears this week. We continue to recommend this as one of the best institutions under the patronage of the Southern Methodist Church. President Wiley has a corps of able assistants, and can safely be intrusted with the care of our youth. A more bracing and healthful climate cannot be found than that of the mountains of Virginia.

Bells.—We have been familiar with the bells manufactured at the Meneely Bell Foundery from childhood, and have purchased several for the use of churches that we have been concerned in building. After comparing, in all respects, with those of other manufacturers, we recommend them to our readers. See their advertisement in to-day's issue.

REST TO THE CHURCH.

The present is peculiarly a period of repose for Southern Methodism. Unity and peace prevail in the church. No important questions of doctrine or of polity agitate our people. Matters of government and discipline seem to be settled in a manner acceptable to all. There is no strife about ritualistic forms, no troubles growing out of publishing interests, no clamor for modifications of the episcopacy. The changes inaugurated in 1866 have been quietly accepted, and are working without any perceptible friction. There is general satisfaction with things as they are, and scarcely a ripple of controversy is discernible about matters affecting the welfare of the communion at large. What important and radical questions may be sprung in the next few years are beyond prediction; but at present we have almost complete peace and tranquillity. The restless spirit of change, and the disposition to pull down the old landmarks, is entirely quiescent, if indeed it exists at all.

In our relations to other denominations there is as much harmony as Christian charity can well demand. Doctrinal antagonisms are unavoidable, but they are characterized by little acrimony, and our denominational peculiarities are recognized and respected by our opponents. The conflicts and persecutions of other times are greatly abated, and our church has secured a firm and broad foundation. In some sections the old debate on baptism is kept up with considerable spirit, and the veteran champions are contending "earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." In reference to the attitude of the Methodist Episcopal Church, we could wish for more fair dealing, and a more reasonable view of the situation on their part; but there is in the Southern Church substantial accord of conviction and feeling on the relations which we sustain to them. There is no agitation on this subject, and none of any noticeable proportions is likely to occur. The efforts at absorption and disintegration, carried on with such lavish expenditures as to cripple the missionary resources of the most numerous and wealthy Protestant denomination in the world, have strengthened and consolidated us, and demonstrated the folly of our enemies.

With inward peace and unity we are in a condition to go forward in the great work of aggression upon sin. Our attention can, without distraction, be directed to the strong holds of Romanism, and to the salvation of the world. Such internal tranquillity is scarcely to be found in any church at the present day as in ours. With no elements of dissension, with nothing to divert from our mission as a church, we ought to be reaching out and extending as never before. It is the golden opportunity for perfecting our institutions, and for the enlargement of all our religious enterprises. It is a favorable time for the inception of improved methods of church work, and for the development of the financial, the missionary and educational plans. We are not sure but the idea of our recent Sunday School Convention might be applied to all of these interests with the best results. Methodism is eminently connectional, and why should not the principle yield practical fruit in the matters to which we have just alluded?

The Texas Conferences have taken steps to establish a university, which shall be the common property of all; the Alabama Conference is moving in the same direction; and is it not possible that an educational convention of the entire church could do much toward the location and endowment of the institutions that are really needed, and that can be efficiently supported? We have a number of colleges and universities in name, and nearly all are in a languishing condition. In our educational interests there is need of a matured connectional policy, and of a greater concentration of effort.

At peace among ourselves, and with all the great features of our ecclesiastical organization settled, our condition is specially favorable for building up, and for the promotion of the spirituality of the church. The development of a deeper devotion, and of a complete consecration of property, should be the aim. The battle against sin must be carried to the gates, and pressed with vigor on the right hand and on the left. A state of rest has its perils. There is danger of becoming at ease in Zion, and of falling into lassitude and apathy. These evils will come unless we recognize our opportunity, and direct our means and energies with watchfulness and vigor in the channels which are opening around us. Rest is good only as it means work, and as it affords the occasion of edifying the church and of multiplying her numbers.

AFTER THE PROPERTY.

Our Northern brethren are determined to take all the property they can. No one believes that they would have voluntarily surrendered the churches in Louisiana which they took and occupied by military authority. They hold churches in New Orleans still, which were built by Southern Methodists, and chiefly by the money of white Methodists. The ground of retaining these churches is that the members have joined the Northern Church, and that they were built with the money contributed by said membership. The latter part of this statement is untrue; but the principles of justice and honesty should be the same in Louisiana as in Maryland and Virginia. Yet they set up claims to church property in the States last named, where every member has united with the Church South. How is this to be accounted for? They keep possession of churches here upon the plea that the members have joined them, but elsewhere they take the opposite tack, and exclude the people from the houses which have been built and occupied by them from the beginning. According to the practice of our Northern friends, equity in Louisiana is the very opposite of equity in Virginia. We quote a few paragraphs from a writer in the Southern Christian Advocate, speaking of the property question in the Baltimore Conference. Mr. Phelps is the man appointed by the Northern Conference to look after the property which may be in dispute.

Mr. Phelps came to Lewisburg. He did not find a single member. He, however, trumped up a quarterly conference in the country, changed the trustees, brought suit for the property, and gained it, and, having no congregation, it passed into the possession of the negroes. Now this work is what he is appointed for.

He is to take charge of the interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and to enter suit for all property deeded to it, and, if possible, gain possession.

The facts summed up, then, are these:

The Methodist Episcopal Church was one body throughout the land, with a form of discipline in no way prejudicial to slaveholders.

Virginians and Marylanders, trusting to the conservative character of the church, deeded certain churches to it.

In 1844, still relying upon this conservatism, they refused to take advantage of the plan of separation and to come South. The General Conference passed a new chapter so odious to them that they were forced out of the church. Where there was any difference of sentiment as to which way the church building should go, they surrendered it.

They retained the churches when there was no difference of sentiment for ten years, and now the Methodist Episcopal Church proposes to bring suit for them. Did it build them? Did it buy them? Were they bequeathed to it?

Does not the will of the people, so expressed and so unanimous, bind them to yield all the legal claim it has? Is it right that it should take advantage of the legal claim to rob these people of their churches? What will be the effect if they succeed in getting this property? Simply to secure buildings for which they have no use, to deprive the people who built the houses of their property, and to embitter more and more their hearts against them. I do not think on legal grounds they can be resisted; but will it be right?

The churches now in dispute are the church at Staunton, where they have not a member; at Moorefield, where the property was deeded by a party, with the written understanding that in case the church became abolition it should revert to the Baltimore Conference; and in a number of country places. They have all the churches in Maryland, in Alexandria, in Leesburg—where they have one member—in Winchester, Lewisburg, etc.

I do not object, as a general rule, to the one laid down, that we should not go behind the deeds; but these are cases so plain, so unquestionable, that it is simply robbery to take advantage of a deed, and the Baltimore Conference case is one of them.

There are some legal complications about the question in Virginia, which led the manipulators of a new constitution to insert in it a provision which they thought would protect them; but it is needless to discuss them here.

I am sure the spirit does exist among leading men in the Northern Church to take possession of everything the law will give; and but for the decision of the Supreme Court they would certainly take possession of all our churches.

If the principle becomes a fixed one, that churches are never to make a waiving of legal rights when justice demands it, our people will be very chary in putting in our hands a trust which may be so abused.

The truth is, the course of the Methodist Episcopal Church, during the war and since the war, has done more to destroy the confidence of thinking men in connectional Methodism than all things else. If men are not honest, because they are in a great connection, men may question the value of that connection.

Nashville, Osceola and St. Louis.

At Home, June 5, 1871.

Ma. Editor: Of the doings of the official week at Nashville your readers have been well advised. During the progress of its affairs it was my good fortune to visit one or two of the old prophets who are so snugly fixed in the neighborhood of that city. It did my heart good to see these faithful servants of the church living in comfort at their own homes. They had spent many years of itinerant toil in the cause of the Master, and he had not forgotten them in their age. It only confirmed an opinion, long since formed, that if a man will take care of his Lord's interests, looking neither to the right nor left, his Lord will take care of him. Nothing can surpass the beauty of the country about Nashville at this season of the year. There is vivacity in the very shape of the ground—swelling, undulating, and stretching away in various moods of rural beauty. There is just the right proportion of woods and parks and skirting timber; of lawn and orchard and grain field, blending in the foreground every shade of green; with successive ranges of vanishing hills, each covered with its own transparent vail of misty light passing dimly off into the clouds on the horizon. To complete the whole, there is such freedom of style in the houses which dot these hills and vales that they leave the imagination unfettered by any stiff forms to fancy's wing—to see all the beauty that is in the landscape, and all that may be in your own soul besides. It was refreshing to stop on the road, look round, and drink in for future use these colors and forms, which God has given to awaken in us a grateful harmony. On Sabbath I attended a very neat country church—Hobson's chapel—heard an edifying sermon, and had the satisfaction of feeling, for one hour, like one of the congregation. Everybody ought to preach well who lives about Nashville, and I believe everybody does; but with such a country to inspire them, what wonder?

Leaving this inland Athens, with its Parthenon-like capital high perched, I next found myself at Osceola, a town on the Mississippi, about one hundred miles above Memphis. The district meeting was but thinly attended by the officials—in truth there are not very many circuits in that region; but we had fair congregations and a gracious work of the Spirit. Ancient revival power attended the word; men were converted and converted, besides women and children. This is a most fertile region; lands are not high; the people are quiet and sober; and Methodism is gaining strength steadily among them. Had the official members been present who ought to have been, we should have seen much more effected than was. It occurs to me that it is the duty of preachers in charge to be at all meetings recognized by our Discipline, to which they belong. There are some noble hearts among the laymen of this district, and the putting off the work to itself at the last Conference was the proper policy for cultivating this part of Arkansas.

By boat and the Iron Mountain railroad I was next transported safely to St. Louis—the true center of the great West. Having been there before, I was prepared for the Christian hospitality which one meets on every side. By the way, how often is the fair name of a great city in the keeping of a single family. After his resurrection, one of the first acts of the Saviour was to accept and reward the hospitality of his people. Thus in the New Testament, by the breaking of bread, as in the Old at Abraham's house, the Son of God enforced this first great law of Christian life. May it ever abound among our people!

If I begin to talk generally of this huge mart there will be no stopping: of its railways, its water courses, its quarries, its mines, its many tributaries, fertile grain-producing hills and valleys, its substantial furnaces, its factories, its houses of stone and marble, its spacious halls and its lofty churches. Everywhere there is motion and thrift. It has the good will of North, South, East and West; and I am right glad that our church has a name and a place in it. On this occasion it was with the church that my visit had to do. After taking breath, I walked up to survey the new Centenary building. There it stood, grandly in stone, on the corner of two of the most improving streets of the city; "set on an hill," with its spire giving additional force to the scripture by a height of two hundred and two feet. Connected with the church is the parsonage, built of the same material, looking like an Episcopal palace—not a Methodist episcopal—the whole forming a pile of most impressive proportions, and worthy of the church of which it is the exponent. On the Sabbath following I had the pleasure of seeing it at the best advantage—that is, from the pulpit. The audience room is one hundred and six feet long, by sixty feet wide in the clear, with galleries on three sides. It has a roomy look; the side galleries are light, though very spacious; the ceiling is of oak strips, natural and stained alternating, and open—that is, running up, as if with the rafters, to the height of forty-six feet at the ridge. The seats are most comfortable; the altar space ample; the pulpit very plain, paneled, not large, and sits out to itself upon a raised altar floor. Behind the pulpit no recess, no fresco, and only a plain, neutral-tinted wall. There is a fine organ in the loft; and, best of all, the acoustic property of the house is perfect; no resonance that I could detect, and every word in ordinary tone heard all over the room.

This beautiful structure cost $125,000, and was cheaply built at that. The lots on which it stands cost $36,000 besides. The debt remaining on the whole—some $18,500—was collected on the day of its dedication.

I expect that it is the grandest free-seat church on the continent; it was therefore peculiarly gratifying to take part in the religious services of the occasion. Bishop Marvin preached at night. The collection continued during the day until the amount was made up—the only sensible way of taking up any collection. Sometimes people fly a collection as they would a pestilence. The best way to correct this is to take it up before preaching. This was tried at night with good effect; the balance in full was raised, and the house dedicated. The style of this elegant structure is the modern Gothic, with spacious basement. On Monday night it was baptized into the spirit of an old-fashioned Methodist love-feast, and thus fairly started on its career of usefulness.

Yours truly, K.

The Constitutional Amendment Adopted

On the twenty-fifth of May, 18[illegible] the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South adopted, by a majority of two-thirds (160 yeas, and 4 nays,) the following proviso to the restrictive rule to close section 1, chapter 2, of the Discipline:

Provided, That when any rule or regulation is adopted by the General Conference, which, in the opinion of the Bishops, is unconstitutional, the Bishops may present to the Conference which passed such rule or regulation, their objections thereto, with their reasons, in writing; and if then the General Conference shall, by a two-thirds vote adhere to its action on said rule or regulation, it shall then take the course prescribed for altering a restrictive rule, and if thus passed and affirmatively, the Bishops shall announce that such rule or regulation takes effect from that time.

This proviso was ordered to be sent round to the Annual Conferences, and if receiving a three-fourths vote of all the members present and voting, it should become a part of the constitutional law of the church, and be inserted in the Discipline accordingly.

The College of Bishops, at their annual meeting, May 8, 1871, in the Publishing House, called in the Rev. A. H. Redford, D. D., the agent, and the Rev. T. O. Summers, D. D, book editor, to assist in counting the votes returned officially from the several Annual Conferences. The result is as follows:

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Southern Farm and Home, published by J. W. Burke & Co., is one of the very best agricultural journals published in the South. The June number is full of information adapted to the season and the wants of our rural readers.

The Atlantic Monthly has No. 5 of a Virginian in New England, Thirty Years Ago, No. 2 of the Adventure of Fort Fisher, Mountaineering in the Sierra Nevada, No. 6, Our Whispering Gallery, and a very instructive article on Botanizing.

Evmon, of 130 Canal street, sends us the Southern Magazine for June. It contains thirteen articles, besides reviews and the Green Table. A good number, we judge, from a glance through its well printed pages. Published by Murdock, Browne & Hill, Baltimore. Price $4 per year.

The Manufacturer and Builder is, as usual, embellished with valuable plates, and replete with articles of interest and instruction on subjects of science, art and mechanics. Western & Co., publishers, New York. $1.50 per annum.

Most attractive of all is the New Monthly Magazine, the bright blossom on our great literary tree, the Methodist Publishing House, Nashville. The illustrations are better than any number yet issued; the editor's work shows that he is getting completely into harness, and Dr. Redford, the publisher, is bringing the mechanical execution up to the standard of its literary merit. Every lady in our church should read our New Monthly, and everybody else, for that matter. The contents of the June number are: Nothing but a Woman; Astronomical Notes for June, 1871; The Professor on Shafts; A Sagacious Day; The Heroine of Siberia; Echoes of the Past; My Secret; The Character and Career of King David; To China and Back; The Carnival of Coosa; Our Aged Ones; Moods; How Matches are Made; The Best Policy; De Soto's March Across the Continent; An Ode; Saint Paul; Truthfulness; What is Man; The Golden Age; Celebrities that I have Seen; The Nymph of the Cave; tage Well; Editor's Round Table; Book Notices.

THE CHARM: for Sunday Schools. By P. P. Bliss. Published by Root & Cady, Chicago. Price, thirty-five cents, single; $30 per hundred. The title is "charm-"ing, and the body of the book doubtless possesses many excellencies. "Of the making many" Sunday school singing books "there is no end."

SOUL-SLEEPERS.

A correspondent makes mention of a sect in southwestern Virginia, and elsewhere in the West, called Soul-Sleepers. They hold that the souls of both the righteous and the wicked sleep from death till the resurrection, when the souls and bodies of the righteous are raised to eternal life, and those of the wicked are annihilated. Well, this is no new thing under the sun. In the last century Dr. Priestly, and other Socinians, held that the soul sleeps till the resurrection; and Dr. Taylor and others taught that the wicked are to be annihilated. Hence those heretics were called Annihilationists or Destructionists. See Watson's Biblical and Theological Dictionary, under the word "destructionists," where their opinions are cited and refuted. An effort has been recently made in England, especially among the Congregationalists, to revive this heresy, and there has been considerable controversy on it in the London Christian World. In New England, too, zealous attempts are made to propagate this doctrine. But it is so palpably opposed to the teachings of Scripture that it is not likely to find many adherents, especially as the doctrine of the Restorationists, or of Universalists, is more attractive to those who will not abide the plain teaching of Scripture that the torment of the wicked is forever and ever. See Watson's Dictionary, as before cited, and his Institutes, part I., c. xix., pages 120-122, and the tract on Eternal Punishment in Methodist Pamphlets for the People—series 2, No. 22.

As to the sleep of the souls of the righteous during the intermediate state, it is so repulsive to one's feelings, and so antagonistic to Scripture, that we marvel that any one who has any regard for the authority of the Bible—not to say any one who has his conversation in heaven—could tolerate the gloomy, heathenish doctrine for a moment. But as we have been repeatedly importuned to set forth the true scriptural doctrine of the intermediate state, we intend to seize the first opportunity, when we are not pressed by long communications on the one hand, and advertisements on the other, to give the subject an elaborate discussion. Our views have been long since formed, and definitely settled on this interesting question.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE DEDICATION of the new Centenary church, says the St. Louis Christian Advocate, transpired according to appointment on last Sabbath, and pursuant to the programme. It is impracticable to give an adequate report of the occasion in this issue. It must be reserved for the next. We hope to make it complete, and an extra edition will be printed for the accommodation of those who may wish to send the report to friends at a distance. We can only add now that the occasion was profoundly impressive and altogether satisfactory. Bishop Keener preached the sermon—a grand discourse. Bishop Marvin managed the collection successfully, as usual, the whole amount of the debt, $20,000, having been raised on subscription.

Bishop Keener's visits to our city are highly prized. They have always been both pleasant and profitable to us. He took his departure for his home in New Orleans on Wednesday. May a good Providence attend his journey, and permit many visitations from him to our city in the future.

A GEORGIA church edifice, which was originally built in trust for the use of the colored members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, came into the hands of the African Methodist Episcopal Church during the war—a majority of the old members preferring the latter communion. Recently, however, the Methodist Episcopal Church South has asserted its right to the property, and, on appeal to the Supreme Court of Georgia, a decision has been obtained by which this right of prior ownership is recognized. The Nashville Christian Advocate says that this ruling will not only compel the African Methodist Episcopal Church to relinquish its hold on several Georgia churches, but also deprive it of considerable church property in Kentucky and Louisiana.

THOSE who burden needlessly their own consciences with the state of other people's, are apt to have a busy life, and not a very useful one.

Wesleyan Missionary Anniversary.

This took place at Exeter Hall, London, May 1. The memorable occasion is thus sketched by the Recorder:

Exeter Hall presented its usual gay and happy appearance on May morning. The building was crowded in every part at an early hour, and there were all the stir and flutter of excitement, and the outgushing of festive feeling for which that great Methodist gathering, above all others of the year, is so remarkable. It is a wondrous sight to see those thousands of countenances all clustering and blossoming in one beauteous efflorescence of gladness, and to watch the waves of joy that in rapid undulations ripple over that outspread expanse of people, lighted up by the inspiration of one sentiment and one hope, one thought and happiness in every bosom. Before the hour for commencing the meeting a universal buzz of conversation murmured all over the hall, interrupted, now and again, by an outburst of cheers as one and another minister or layman, well known to the multitude, was recognized stepping on the platform. The appearance of the secretaries and the committee, punctually as the finger of the clock pointed to eleven, was the signal for the accustomed volley of ringing cheers; and as Father Jackson, leaning on the arm of Mr. Frankland, slowly mounted the steps, the whole assembly, moved by a simultaneous impulse of veneration and affection, rose to their feet and greeted the venerable patriarch with an enthusiasm of delight which we have rarely witnessed. The preliminaries of the meeting were dispatched with unwonted brevity.

Mr. John Chubb presided, and in his opening speech said:

A little while ago I heard from a good authority that not less than £10,000,000 per annum is raised in this country in one way or another for the propagation and maintenance of religious truth at home. Well, then, how much, think you, does the United Kingdom raise for the spread of the gospel in the whole world besides? Why, just about £1,000,000 only. I will not weaken the force of this startling fact by any comment. When you go home consider whether, without reducing our givings for the thirty millions of people at home, we cannot and ought not to give more than we do for the eight hundred millions abroad.

The treasurer reported the total receipts for the year to be about $748,835, and the disbursements about $736,770.

Rev. Thomas Jackson spoke as follows:

Why, there are some men who tell us that they are Christians, and that they believe that Jesus Christ was nothing more than a man. Now, think of a simple man sitting at the right hand of God in heaven. How could he work with the apostles everywhere—occupying his throne at the right hand of the Father, and working with his servants wherever they went? Oh, I wish we could keep more steadily in view this momentous thought—the Lord working with his servants! We want more of our Lord's working in our ministry at home; and oh! we ought to be deeply concerned that the Lord may work with the ministry of our missionaries abroad. "Vain is the help of man." I have just finished reading the new Life of Mr. Whitefield with great admiration, and have been reproved that I have not been a better preacher and minister than I have been; but I find that that incomparable man, through the entire course of his ministry, steadily kept this one object in view—to bring sinners to their Saviour. That was the one object of his ministry. We cannot bring sinners to their Saviour unless the Lord work with us. Now, to get the Lord with us more powerfully and more effectually, there must be more prayer. I wish we had more prayer in connection with our missionary operations, and more prayer in connection with our ministry at home. I should like to see intercession prayer meetings established in all our circuit towns—prayer meetings for intercession held every week. We had such meetings in Leeds from sixty to seventy years ago, when I was stationed there, and blessed seasons they were. I shall never forget how in one of those meetings the late Joseph Sutcliffe prayed for the Duke of Wellington when he went to take command of the armies in the Peninsula. He prayed that God would direct him and preserve him, and his prayer was signally answered. Oh, for the spirit of prayer in connection with our missionary effort! Mr. Chairman, you called our attention to Mr. Wesley's sermon on the use of money. Let me remark that there are three principles which he has laid down on this subject for the regulation of his people while the sun and moon endure. First, gain all you can by honest and honorable means; secondly, save all you can; cut off all needless expenditure; thirdly, give all you can.

Begging in Roms Under the New Regime

Too much has been said about Roman beggars, from Belisarius down, for us to enlarge upon them here, but the success of the business is proved by the ability of any of them to give you change if you have no coin small enough for your charity. A philanthropic lady saw a little ragged boy sitting on a step with an open book in his hand—a sight seldom seen in Rome; she stopped to ask him if he could read, and found that he was merely twisting the leaves for his amusement. The next day, however, as she passed the same place, her carriage was surrounded by ragamuffins, crying: "Io so leggere, signora—lo" ("I know how to read, ma'am—I do.") The humor of the thing was not thrown away upon the philanthropist, who replied: "Very well, then, I'll give you a book." This, however, was not received with any gratitude; so she drove on. The book she had seen was a New Testament, now for the first time being printed and distributed among the people, to the infinite horror of the priests. How much good it will do this generation is as difficult a question as the benefits of the abolition of slavery in our own country for the next quarter of a century. They are the most irreverent people in Christendom. A common man says, "Io preghero il diavolo" ("I will pray to the devil") for such and such a thing; not meaning that he worships the devil, but that he really worships nobody. A ballet is in rehearsal on the story of the Prodigal Son, and the idea excites no horror among men of the highest class. A caricature appeared lately in a shop in the Corso (the principal street,) representing the crucifixion, Napoleon the Third being on the cross, the King of Prussia as the centurion piercing his side, the Pope and other supposed sympathizers with France representing the apostles in ridiculous attitudes of grief and dismay. The whole edition of this infamous blasphemy sold in twenty-four hours, and another was immediately called for. Whether these are the results of religion or race future times must decide.—Lippincott's Magazine.

TOUCHING DEVOTION.—One of the most tearful cases ever told on paper is this, of a little boy, a mere child, who traveled fourteen hundred miles, taking care of the body of his dead mother all the way:

An express man, upon reaching his office, early one cold morning in January, observed on the sidewalk a long, heavy box, which his practiced eye at once identified as containing a corpse. Upon the end of the box, shivering with cold, sat a little half-clad boy, about seven or eight years of age. Addressing him kindly, he said:

"My lad, don't sit there; you will freeze. Come in and sit by the fire."

Bursting into tears, the little fellow replied:

"No, I can't come. My mother is in this box, and I promised her that I would not leave her until we got home."

Deeply affected with the touching devotion of this brave little fellow, he finally succeeded in convincing him of the entire safety of his precious charge, and taking him to a neighboring restaurant, gave him a warm breakfast, and then learned the particulars of his story.

His father died about a year previously, in a remote village in Minnesota, leaving his mother in poor health and nearly destitute. She died, but a few days before the boy's sad journey, charging the little hero with the sad duty of conveying the remains to her friends in a distant State, and furnished him with (all she had) a sum of money barely sufficient to carry them both by freight cars to their destination.

The little fellow had actually ridden night and day in a freight car with his melancholy trust, never for a moment losing sight of it.

DR. HAMILTON, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, send us cheering news from Selma, at which we greatly rejoice: "God has arisen to avenge one of his elect, Bro. Bounds, who has been crying to him day and night. Revival power is shaking this city from end to end. Some sixty have been converted—about thirty yesterday. The whole community, with few exceptions, is moved. No man ever labored harder for a revival than Bro. Bounds; but now he can sing: 'In vain I have not wept and strove.' God is abundantly rewarding his faith. This people will never know how much they owe this man. The churches are filled with wonder and joy, and are astonished at what they see and feel."

Obituaries.

REV. J. L. E. BYRD.

At the roll-call of the second Quarterly Conference of the Black Hawk circuit, Yazoo district, North Mississippi Conference, May 27, 1871, in answer to the name of John Ira Ellis Byrd, solemnly pronounced by the secretary, the answer was, "Dead;" whereupon a committee was appointed to draft resolutions expressive of the feelings of this body, which submitted the following report:

Bowing with submission to the providence of God by which we are deprived of the presence, counsels, prayers and holy example of John Ira Ellis Byrd, so long a loved and venerated member of this Quarterly Conference, we express our holy grief at the death of Bro. Byrd, which occurred on the sixth of April, A. D. 1871, in the eightieth year of his age and the sixty-first of his ministry.

He endeared himself to us inexpressibly, as to hundreds of others, by his holy zeal for our welfare. His life was one of entire devotion to the highest interests of mankind, and for sixty years was a laborer in the vineyard who needed not to be ashamed. His name and virtues are a legacy to the church in Mississippi; therefore,

Resolved, That this report be spread on our minutes, and a copy be furnished the family of Bro. Byrd, and also the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

STEPHEN JOHNSON,
Chairman of Committee.

Died, on the thirtieth of January, 1871, on board the steamer Tidal Wave, near Alexandria, Louisiana, of congestion, ELLA B. WILLIS, daughter of John A. and Mary Willis, after an illness of but two days, aged nineteen years and one day.

The deceased was born in Caddo parish, Louisiana, on the twenty-ninth of January, 1852. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in September, 1867, and lived a consistent member of the same to the day of her death, having been attached to the Mooringsport circuit, Caddo parish, Louisiana.

In company with her fond sister, Mrs. Virgie Lively, she left home in December, 1870, followed by a mother's prayers and a father's care, to visit their dear uncle and aunt, Mr. John Tabar and wife, in New Orleans, where the writer of these lines had the satisfaction of meeting with them. She and her sister left the city for home on the twenty-seventh of January, on board the above named vessel. The same evening she was taken with a congestive chill, and died on Monday morning with the second chill.

Little did her parents think, when she left them, that her stay would be so long. But an affectionate daughter and faithful follower of our Lord Jesus Christ was exchanged for that lifeless clay, which shall know no change till that voice which awakens the dead and bids the sleeper arise shall shake both heaven and earth. Then will she come forth, radiant with glory, to take up the shout of victory.

Notwithstanding we are grieved to be parted from one so lovely and so much attached to our Master's cause, we grieve not as those without hope.

M. M.

MOONSGSPORT, Louisiana.

Died, in the parish of Morehouse, Louisiana, on Monday, May 22, ELBERT W. ELTON, a native of the State of Georgia, aged forty-seven years, three months and two days.

He came to this State about the year 1841 or 1842, and has lived in Morehouse parish from that time to the day of his death. He has always been esteemed by those who knew him for his honesty, his industry, and for a quiet and peaceable disposition. He was preeminently attentive to his business—not a meddler in other men's matters—a good citizen, an affectionate husband, a tender and indulgent father; one whose motto was: "Do justly, love mercy and walk humbly with God." Such was the character of Elbert W. Elton. But he was more than merely a just, merciful and humble man; he was a Christian—a member of the church of God—faithful in his religious life, earnest in his devotions, "showing his faith by his works." He gave to the world the influence of a good example, and to the extent of his ability contributed of his means to the advancement of the cause of God.

A short time before his death, while in conversation with his wife, he said: "I have no fear of death. I feel and know that if I were to die to-day I would be happy. I am prepared for death, and intend, by the grace of God, to die a Christian and live in heaven." Expiring alone on the roadside, where the assassin's bullet pierced his heart, he laid himself out, crossed his hands upon his breast, and no doubt quietly and triumphantly fell asleep in Jesus. Here, in this position, he was found by his heart-stricken daughter, with a smile resting upon his countenance, which remained there until the fastening down of the coffin lid hid his face and form forever from the gaze of his family and friends. NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

THE TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION of this school will begin on the First MONDAY IN AUGUST, 1871. The entire expense for board and tuition, for forty weeks, will be $150. The board is of the best description that the country affords, being furnished by the steward from his own farm and prepared by the hands of his own family. We had boys from five different States last year, and not a word of complaint was ever made on this point, which is often the subject of just complaint at boarding schools. The fare is peculiarly grateful to Southern boys, who require a more generous diet when they change their climate.

The manner of governing the school is paternal, as the entire exemption from temptations in the surrounding country renders the discipline easy. The institution is under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but under my own control. The young men attending the school last year were, without exception, moral and religious. Young men preparing for the ministry may receive tuition free, and in certain cases can obtain lower rates of board. Regular services are held in the College Chapel.

The location of the school is near Madisonville, Monroe county, East Tennessee, in the midst of a fruitful and beautiful country, and surrounded by a thrifty and intelligent population. No negroes live in the neighborhood, all the laborers in the fields and servants in the families being white. The citizens of Monroe county were true to the South in her late struggle, and have adhered to Southern churches.

Students arriving by the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad will get off at Sweetwater, forty miles south of Knoxville, whence they will find conveyance to the college, seven miles distant.

Our post office is Madisonville, Tennessee.

F. M. GRACE, President.

P. S.—1. Families from the South will find good board in the neighborhood, and a delightful summer retreat at White Cliff Springs, sixteen miles distant from Madisonville. For information on this point parties may address D. A. McKenzie, steward of the college. The health of the country is proverbial.

P. S.—2. Younger boys may be safely sent to this school, as all are under the immediate oversight of the principal, both when in school and when at the boarding house.

ARGYLE BITTERS STILL AHEAD!

They cure Dyspepsia, Flatulence, Colic, Biliousness, Torpidity of the Liver, Nervous Disorders, Hypertrophy of the Spleen, Habitual Constipation, Intermittent Fever, Menstrual Suppression, Imbecility in the Aged, and Weakness in Children. They cure Inebriety, and remove the ungovernable thirst for strong drink that torments the poor, heart-broken drunkard. They will promote digestion, and eminently assist in the assimilation of food. They correct disorders of the liver, and cure headache and bad spirits. They invigorate the weak and cheer the down-hearted.

There are other preparations in the market known as bitters, but which are destitute of the elements that render the Argyle a monument of success as a gentle Stimulant, a safe Tonic, and a sure Alterative, for family use.

"Take more Argyle and less whisky," said an eminent temperance man, "and the vice of drunkenness would disappear from our midst." This is worth remembering, and its immense popularity and sale show that these words were fitly spoken.

Buy the Argyle always for a safe family medicine for summer use, to prevent Chills, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia and Nervous Debility.

The Child's Corner.

A GUILTY CONSCIENCE.

BY EDGAR FAWCETT.

How mean of mamma not to kiss me,
Not even to wish me good-night;
Of course I was ugly this morning,
And acting considered quite right.

Why couldn't mamma have allowed me
That candy I wanted for lunch?
There's nothing so lovely in school-time
As cocoanut candy to munch.

But no, I could have bread and butter
And sponge cake, and not a thing more.
And so I marched off in a tantrum:
I never was so mad before.

Mamma has been grim as a graveyard
From that time to this. And to-night
Just think of her not having kissed me:
She's acting with horrible spite.

She looked very sad the whole evening;
Her eyes seemed so mournful and deep;
(There's something all wrong with my pillow;
I somehow can not get to sleep.)

It's horrid to lie in the darkness
And think of how sad matters are:
Suppose I slip down to the parlor
And say a few words to mamma.

Suppose I just tell her I'm sorry:
I know she'll forgive me, the dear!
Perhaps, when I come back, my pillow
Won't feel half so hot and so queer.

SEA-LIGHTS.

BY ORRA.

"Very dark indeed it must be at the bottom of the sea," said Farmer Boyce, who is always in a "brown study" about something. "The water out here, in the river, is only about fifteen feet at the deepest, and you can't see what is going on underneath, no matter how you cross your eyes looking in. I presume it would be lighter if one could lie on the bottom and look about, but the daylight would certainly be a good deal dimmed; how, then, would it be if one could go fifteen thousand feet under water? I've an idee you'd find it a pretty dark place. What do you think about that, schoolma'am? For my part, I don't believe even the fishes can see to swim."

"Really," I said, "I'm sorry for the fishes if they have to go gliding around by guess, for I've heard of great ones that lie still with open mouths waiting for the smaller ones to swim in; how very unsafe it must be to wander around down there in the dark!"

"Exactly! But it doesn't seem quite fair now, does it? Rather hard on the little fishes."

"I should think God might have some lamps lighted, so they could see to swim away," said five-year old Robbie; "mightn't he, Nettie?"

"May be he would, if the water wouldn't put them all out," answered my pet little girl.

Georgie Boyce looked up at this, and, instead of laughing as the rest did, said earnestly: "There may be some way of lighting fish paths that we don't know about. When I went out hunting one night with Sam, we saw something shining in the darkest places of the woods that he called fox-fire. He said it was rotten beech-wood that had a light of its own, and folks said helped the foxes about finding their way in the dark. I don't suppose there is any rotten wood under the sea, but there may be something just as good."

"Pretty well reasoned for a youngster!" said Farmer Boyce, who was often a little proud of his grandchildren. "Now if the schoolma'am had only been let down to the bottom of the sea, when she crossed it on her way from Hindostan, she might be able to tell us something about the matter. But it isn't very likely we'll get much out of her, so we'll have to leave the question undecided, I'm afraid."

"Oh, it wasn't necessary that I should be let down into the sea to find out that there were lamps in it that water cannot put out," I said. "Captain Farnesworth made quite a pet of me when father was ordered back to America for his health; he seemed to think that it would comfort the poor, sick missionary to keep his daughter amused and happy; so he often came and sat down by us as we stayed on deck, and answered all my questions. I remember how the waves used to glitter on dark evenings sometimes, and I have even seen balls of fire rise from them and float about our vessel. I was afraid when I first saw that, and began to cry.

"'Ho! ho! my little missionary!' said the captain, 'how could you live among the Hindoos and ride through jungles where tigers lived, if you were such a coward?'

"'But I was never in danger of burning up there,' I told him.

"'No more you are here,' he said; and then he told me that the lights were phosphorescent. I've no doubt your rotten beech-wood, Georgie, shone because it had so much phosphorus."

"If that is the case," Farmer Boyce argued, "I don't see why there wouldn't be phosphorus as well at the bottom of the sea as on the top; and if it can give such a bright light, perhaps it is just as easy to see there as it is in this room with a kerosene lamp on the stand."

"Now I remember what Captain Farnesworth told me about fishes one day," I said, beginning to get interested in the memory of my voyage home. "He said they are very phosphorescent creatures, and throw out a light of their own, which helps them to see through the darkness of the deep sea. I could hardly believe it until he brought a sailor to me, who had been a diver, and made him describe some of those lights. The sailor said there were some fishes that shone like colored lamps or like wonderful stars of many hues; and when many of them were together they made great wreaths or bouquets of fire that kept changing and flickering, now fading almost away, then blossoming out again, until the diver was quite astonished at their beauty.

"I told him, I recollect, how the swarms of fire-flies used to flash about in India, till it seemed as though ten thousand stars were within reach of our hands; and how the ground used to shine with the red and green light of glow-worms, so that you hardly dared walk for fear of putting out some pretty little lamp. He said he had seen all that himself in the hot countries where he had been, but it couldn't compare with the brightness of the bottom of the sea. There you might see every color of the rainbow flashing and shooting around you, as meteors shoot through a November midnight. 'Why, miss,' he said, 'the sea is just full of what we sailors call starfish, and every fish is brighter than the brightest star in the sky. Then there are shell-fish, and hosts of other kinds just as brilliant. They dazzle a poor diver when he is roaming about under water, and make him feel as though he wouldn't mind being a fish himself if he could always live where it is so pleasant.'"

"Would you feel that way, my boy?" asked Farmer Boyce.

"Not I!" answered Georgie; "I'd rather hunt coons with Sam, and only now and then catch sight of a rotten beech-log! I believe in dry land myself."

"Schoolma'am," said sober-faced Nettie, "then the fishes have lamps just as much as foxes, and more too I thought God wouldn't let them float about without knowing how to get out of the way of those big mouths you told of."

"Yes," said Robbie, "they shine theirselves, and no water can't put 'em out. Let's go fishin', and then we won't have to buy no kerosene; and we'll shine so bright after dark some big mans 'll come in and think we're all afire."—The Bright Side.

KNITTING.—"I was just thinking, mother —" said Rachel.

"Thinking about what?" asked Mrs. Harland, seeing that her daughter did not complete the sentence she had begun.

"It was something about knitting. Mrs. Barclay said this morning, as she passed the window and saw me at work: 'That is soft and beautiful yarn, but not half so soft and beautiful, I trust, as the yarn you are knitting into your life.' I've been thinking ever since what she could have meant, and it's just come to me."

"Has it? I'm glad you've thought it out for yourself. What is merely told to us often goes no deeper than the memory, but if we think out anything for ourselves, it becomes more real to us and more our own. We understand it better."

"Yes, I am sure of that," replied Rachel.

"And what do you think Mrs. Barclay meant?" asked Mrs. Harland.

"I suppose she meant our thoughts and feelings were like yarn, and that every day we were knitting them into our lives."

"I think that was her meaning," replied the mother. "If day by day we knit pure thoughts and kind and gentle feelings into our lives, we shall not only form to ourselves beautiful characters that will make our presence a charm and a blessing to others, but acquire a heavenly quality that will draw near to us, as like draws like, the angels of God with their protecting power, though we may not perceive their presence."

A tender thoughtfulness was in the eyes of Rachel. She did not answer, but looked down at her knitting, and as the soft thread passed through her fingers she pondered this new lesson in the book of life.—Children's Hour.

WORK FOR THE MONTH.

CORN, if well enough advanced, may be laid by, the middle or last of this month, in many places: but if it has been retarded by late planting, cold weather, etc., it may be well, before the last hoeing, to sprinkle and work in around the hills a slight top-dressing of superphosphate or other fertilizer, or a mixture composed of ten parts of gypsum, four of ashes and one of salt. It is a mistake to apply all our manure to our growing crops at one time. We might as well expect a horse, mule or man to work a week on one hearty meal! Feed your crops as they grow, with some convenient and portable fertilizer kept at hand for that purpose, and you will be surprised at the wonderful increase in growth and yield. But we must begin right—take more time in the preparation, cultivate less land, and bestow double or treble the labor and manure on an acre that we now do: and then feed and work our crop diligently until it is "laid by" and "made." If your early-planted corn crop is likely to be short, do not forget that in our favored clime you can still plant and raise a crop before frost.

SWEET POTATOES.—Draws for eating potatoes and cut vines for seed should still be planted at all favorable opportunities. No danger of over-doing the provision crops.

PUMPKINS may still be planted among the corn, or elsewhere, for stock feed. Milch cows and hogs will thrive and grow fat on pumpkins boiled into mush, with meal or bran.

On deeply plowed and highly manured land you may continue to sow in the drill large patches of Egyptian or "Cat Tail" millet: Chinese sugar cane and common corn for forage, as heretofore so often directed. These crops can be cut in a few weeks from planting, and they furnish a plentiful supply of excellent food for all farm animals—enabling you to "pen" at night and feed your cows and young cattle; to have your work animals always at hand; to make and save a great deal of valuable manure, and to supply the deficiency of grass and herbage which nearly always occurs in our pastures and "ranges" at this season of the year.

THE GARDEN, ORCHARD, ETC.—If the weather is very hot and dry little can be done in the garden during this month, except weeding, mulching and watering. We regard mulching as of great importance in this climate, and cannot too strongly recommend it. Mulch everything during our parching summers—trees, shrubs, vines and vegetables—covering the surface of the earth, as far as the roots extend, with two or three inches of partially rotten pine straw, chip mold from the woodpile, common forest leaves, spent tan-bark or sawdust—anything that will shade the surface and check the too rapid evaporation of moisture and the volatile gases—and you will find that all trees and plants thus treated will grow much faster, and receive no check from the long drouths of midsummer. If you water your plants you must give them a constant and regular supply—not occasionally and intermittingly—and it is always best to pour the water through the mulching, leaving no moisture exposed on the surface to the baking rays of the sun.—Our Home Journal.

THE VEGETABLE GARDEN.

The principal "work for the month" in the vegetable garden is to keep down weeds, mulch the plants to guard against drought, and keep them watered when they need it. We are strongly in favor of mulching. We believe that mulched plants will grow faster, thrive better, and suffer less from the dry spells of midsummer than those that are left "dry so;" and as it is very little trouble to, strew three or four inches of pine straw or leaves about the roots of the plants, we advise our friends to try it. In dry weather water should be applied freely and regularly. Apply it through the mulching, not under it. Plant snapbeans, English peas, corn, okra and melons for a succession.

Toward the end of the month set out cabbage plants for fall and winter use. The same as to brocoli. Sow cabbage, celery and cauliflower seed under shade for fall planting. Water freely until the plants come up.

Continue to transplant tomatoes and celery, taking care to shade the plants from the sun for a few days, until they become well established. If the tomatoes, melons or cucumbers are inclined to run too much to vine pinch off the leading shoots, and it will check the growth and promote the maturity of the fruit. Tomatoes sown now will produce a crop before frost. Onions, as they mature, should be pulled up, dried in the shade, and hung away in bunches in some place where the air can get to them. As soon as the tops droop the onions are fit to pull. Irish potatoes planted now, and deeply mulched, will give a good crop before frost.

Liquid manure alone should be applied to the garden now; and that applied judiciously will pay handsomely for the trouble.—Southern Farm and Home.

WHEAT.—Those who are fortunate enough to have wheat to cut should prepare to cut it now. That portion which is intended for flour should be cut before it is thoroughly ripe, and that intended for seed should be allowed to mature completely—become "dead ripe." A day or two of fine weather will cure it sufficiently to make it ready to thresh, and the sooner this is done the better. The reaping machines are far better, more expeditious and more profitable than the old-fashioned cradle. Those who cannot afford to buy one of these machines, or whose wheat patch is not sufficiently extensive to warrant the outlay, should club together for the purchase of one. These machines are really worthy of the name of "labor-saving," and then their use stimulates us to prepare our fields more carefully, to remove stumps and rocks, and fill up ditches and gullies. We give the same advice with reference to threshing machines. Those which thresh, clean, expel the straw and pour the cleaned grain into sacks at one operation are, in our judgment, the best. After the wheat has been threshed and cleaned, it should be thoroughly sunned by exposure to the heat of the sun for several days, and when perfectly dry put away during the heat of the day in bins or barrels. If this is done, and the bins or barrels previously washed with good whitewash of quicklime, the grain will be protected from the weevil.—Southern Farm and Home.

CULTIVATION OF TOMATOES.—Tomatoes are now essential articles of diet in every household; and when one grows for his own use quality is of far more consequence that mere quantity. We have now for several years noted the growth of tomatoes on poles, and compared them with other ways, and think there is no question as to their superiority in every respect. The common field plan of leaving them grow as they list, spreading everywhere over the ground, may be, as truck-growers say it is, the way in which the heaviest weight of fruit can be had in proportion to the labor spent; but in this way the fruit is more acid than under any other system. Another plan is to make a trellis, so that it looks like an inverted v, with the plants trained up both sides; but the great shade to the fruit in this way prevents the perfection which the sun and air give when trained up to stakes. The best way to proceed is to do as is done with the Lima beans—set the stakes before the plants are put out. These need not be over six feet out of the ground, and may be set about four feet apart each way. As the plants grow tie them up to these stakes; but that will not be required over half a dozen times during the season. Twenty plants in this way will yield as much fruit as double the quantity on any other plan, and in quality there is no comparison. In planting do not set out until the soil is warm, or they will be stunted and nothing gained.

THE PRESERVATION OF EGGS.—The Journal de Pharmacie et de Chimie contains an account of some experiments by M. H. Violette on the best method of preserving eggs—a subject of much importance in France. Many methods have been tried; continued immersions in lime water or salt water; exclusion of air by water, sawdust, etc., and even varnishing has been tried, but respectively condemned. The simplicity of the method adopted on many farms, namely, that of closing the pores of the shell with grease or oil, had, however, attracted the attention of the author, who draws the following conclusions from a series of experiments on this method: Vegetable oil, more especially linseed, simply rubbed on the egg, hinders any alteration for a sufficiently extensive period, and presents a very simple and efficacious method of preservation, eclipsing any method hitherto recommended or practiced.

SOOT.—This is an excellent manure; but, as in many other cases, one must know how to use it. It is, first, good for all fruit trees, then for meadows overrun with moss, and for clover. In the kitchen garden reserve it for the onions. For other vegetables it is more hurtful than useful. Use it with moderation. In small quantities soot produces good results; in large it disorganizes the plants, burns and cauterizes them, eats both leaves and roots. On a rainy day give your soil a weak dose; prudence says, mingle earth and mud with it. Above all, do not make use of it in hot or dry weather.

THE ARROW TIE

The patentee and manufacturer of the celebrated ARROW TIE, J. J. McComb, formerly of New Orleans, now residing in Liverpool, having control of the best and most extensive Rolling Mills in Europe, is constantly importing large stocks of this popular Tie, manufactured of the very best quality of English iron, to meet the increasing demand for it throughout all the Cotton States.

Planters can buy or order the ARROW TIE of all dealers in Iron Ties, and of country merchants generally, at the lowest market price; and we respectfully solicit the patronage of Planters and Factors everywhere.

MEDICAL.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many powerful medicines of the day have rendered but temporary relief to sufferers from these afflictions. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the disease is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, (to which localities, and especially to Fisher T. Rawls and James E. Bradley, he refers those who desire facts before trying it for themselves,) justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure immediately any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to durat on of disease, will cure perfectly any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. Full directions as to use and for further information address

BRACES AND TRUSSES.—DR. JOHN BANGELL informs the medical profession and others that he has constantly on hand and for sale a complete assortment of KINGS TRUSSES, Spinal and Shoulder Braces, and other appliances for the relief and cure of general debility, local weakness and derangements of the speakers and singers, palpitation of the heart, bronchills and weakness of the lungs, weakness and irritability, dyspeptical affections, constipation and chronic diarrhea, female derangements and extreme displacements of the womb. In cases of prolapsus and weakness of the male or female system.

These light, cool and springy appliances are the special favorites of the profession, are intensely common-sense and rational in their action; supply a missing link in treatment; place the above affections in a new and more hopeful light, and often relieve cases where medicine can only mitigate, more than it can cure a hernia or a broken joint.

He specially desires an examination of these appliances by the profession and others. Where necessary the professional education of the above braces will be given under his supervision or that of the family physician.

These valuable appliances are sanctioned by a large number of the medical profession in the United States and Europe as being adapted to fulfill the purpose for which they are intended, and the Trusses and Braces are adopted by the United States government for the use of the army and navy. Terms moderate. Consultations free. Send for their price list if it is better to call.

A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple purity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be welcomed by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. Scientific.

THE following beautiful chemical experiment may easily be performed by a lady, to the great astonishment of a circle at her tea party. Take two or three leaves of red cabbage, cut them into small bits, put them into a basin, and pour a pint of boiling water on them; let it stand an hour, then pour off the liquor into a decanter. It will be of a fine blue color. Then take four wine glasses; into one put six drops of strong vinegar; into another six drops of solution of soda; into a third the same quantity of a strong solution of alum; and let the fourth glass remain empty. The glasses may be prepared some time before, and the few drops of colorless liquids which have been placed in them will not be noticed. Fill up the glasses from the decanter, and the liquid poured into the glass containing the acid will quickly become a beautiful red; that in the glass containing the soda will be a fine green; that poured into the empty one will remain unchanged. By adding a little vinegar to the green, it will immediately change to a red; and on adding a little of solution of soda to the red it will assume a fine green; thus showing the action of acids and alkalies on vegetable blues.

SOME interesting facts regarding standing, walking and lying down are grouped in a lecture by Prof. Burt G. Wilder. In man the great toe is the essential part of the foot in standing and walking. In the ape this is a thumb, standing out from the side of the foot, and has no power of supporting or propelling. The ape cannot carry himself erect. But put man on all fours, like an ape, and the enormous disadvantage appears at once. The head hangs as a great weight, with no adequate muscles to support it. The curve of the back is such that the knees touch the ground, and we have to raise the thighs in order to make the feet touch the ground. Man's foot is called a plantigrade foot—that is, it has the whole sole flat upon the ground. One other animal, the bear, has a plantigrade foot, but he uses it in a different fashion; he lifts the whole foot together and puts it down flat, while man strikes with the heel first and rolls forward upon each toe alternately. The erect attitude is maintained only by a constant though unconscious control of the muscles of the leg by the brain. The length of a man is greater when he is lying flat than his height when he is standing. In the former case the body stretches itself; in the latter it settles down upon itself. A man is shorter when standing on one foot alone. He is shorter again when walking. For this reason ladies' skirts, which just clear the ground when they are standing, drag on the pavement as soon as they begin to walk. The different parts of the body are bent upon each other, and also swing from one side to the other. A very singular fact connected with walking is that one side of the body tends to outwalk the other. Persons with their eyes shut cannot walk in a straight line for any length of time; and persons who are lost in the woods or prairies are sure to travel in a circle. There is a greater tendency to wander off to the right than to the left.

THE EYE.—A vast progress has been made in recent times in the treatment of the eye when diseased. Sight can be restored in many cases which were formerly given up as hopeless; operations of exceeding delicacy are continually performed with success, and the general principles of curing for and managing the eye are much better understood. Dr. Jeffries, of Boston, gives some excellent hints in Good Health as to management where the eye is in trouble, and none of his advice is wiser than to avoid all quack remedies, nostrums and old nurses' prescriptions, and consult a respectable oculist at once. The eye is too delicate an organ to be tampered with by unskilled hands. Burns from lime, plaster or mortar are very dangerous. The eye should be immediately washed out with a weak solution of vinegar, and olive oil dropped into it immediately after. If burned by strong acids, the eye should be syringed with a solution of five grains of bi-carbonate of potash in two tablespoonfuls of water, and sweet oil dropped between the lids. The sore eyes of new-born infants should be treated by washing with a syringe every two hours; all sorts of washes are only harmful.

Styes on the lids should not be poulticed, but kept anointed with some simple fatty substance and constantly bathed with hot water. They should be opened when fully ripe. All light from the sun or any artificial source should come upon our work from one side, and not be reflected directly from it to the eye. If the eyes are weak something is the matter which requires attention. Goggles, as a general thing, are hurtful. Smoked and green glasses are not desirable. The proper color to rest or protect the eye is cobalt blue. It is a recent discovery that blue assists the sight, by altering the character of the light that comes to the retina. The special shade of blue needed in any case must be decided by a surgeon.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

TO PRESERVE BROOMS.—Wet the brooms every week in boiling suds, and they will be toughened by it, will last much longer, will not cut the carpet, and will sweep as elastic as a new broom.

BOILED HAM.—Cut the ham in very thin slices; pour boiling water over it, and leave where it will keep hot, twenty minutes; then wipe the slices dry and lay on a hot gridiron over the coals, and broil as quick as possible; but do not scorch it.

MOSS CAKE.—Two cupfuls of sugar, half a cupful of butter, three eggs, one cupful of milk, three cupfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar sifted with the flour, and one teaspoonful of soda—unless prepared flour is used, in which case always dispense with the soda and cream of tartar.

CORN-STARCH CAKE.—One cupful of butter, two of sugar; beat to a white foam; add four eggs, beaten quite stiff; one cupful of corn-starch, one cupful of milk, two cupfuls of prepared flour, and flavor with one teaspoonful of bitter almonds. If you have no prepared flour, sift one teaspoonful of cream of tartar with the flour, and add half a teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in a teaspoonful of milk, the last thing; beat thoroughly after the soda is added, and bake immediately.

TO TAKE bruises out of furniture, wet the part with warm water; double a piece of brown paper five or six times, soak it in the warm water, and lay it on the place; apply on that a warm but not hot flat-iron till the moisture is evaporated. If the bruise be not gone, repeat the process. After two or three applications, the dent or bruise will be raised to the surface. If the bruise be small, merely soak it with warm water, and hold a red-hot iron near the surface, keeping the surface continually wet. The bruise will soon disappear.

TO STEAM A TURKEY.—Rub pepper and salt inside the turkey, after it has been well dressed and washed; then fill the body with oysters; sew it up carefully; lay the turkey in a large dish, and set it into a steamer, placed over boiling water; cover closely, and steam from two hours to two hours and a half, or till by running a fork into the breast you find it is well done. Then take it up; strain the gravy which will be found in the dish; have an oyster-sauce ready, prepared like stewed oysters, and pour this gravy, thickened with a little butter and flour, into the oyster sauce; let it just boil up, and whiten with a little boiled cream; pour this sauce over the steamed turkey, and send to the table hot. Of course, while the turkey is steaming, you will have the oysters all ready for the gravy from the dish, and the cream also boiled, that there may be as little delay as possible after the turkey is cooked.

JAPANESE HOUSE.—The Japanese have habits of living about as unlike ours as the inhabitants of the moon, if that satellite has any living beings. Here is a sketch of a Japanese house:

When the walls of the house are up it consists of but one large room, which is then cut up by partitions, which are nothing more than sliding screens that close up into each other in a fashion that admits of one apartment being divided into a dozen distinct ones instantly. There are no chimneys attached to the houses, and they contain no beds, chairs or tables.

The floors are covered with a series of clean bamboo mats or cushions, each six feet by three, and nicely bound with red or blue tape. They are stuffed with light wool or moss, and are as soft and yielding to pressure as the heaviest Brussels velvet.

These mats fit in with each other as regularly as the squares on a chess-board, and the whole floor is kept as clean and is dusted as often as the mahogany sideboard in the house of a Dutch burgher. No speck of dirt is ever allowed to rest upon the polished surface of the matting, and to step upon it with a pair of boots would be a greater insult than to make a footstool of a $700 piano.

The family sit upon the matting all day, with their legs bent under them, in a shape that would give any foreigner incurable paralysis in fifteen minutes, and they sleep upon it at night.

FAITH has an influence over all other graces. It is like a silver thread that runs through a chain of pearls: it puts strength and vivacity into all other graces.

WILES NILSSON was in Louisville, Kentucky, she gave all the colored waiters who waited on her party tickets to her concert, and they were, too.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no material change to notice in the general market since our last issue. Only a moderate business has been done in most branches of the wholesale trade. The receipts of sugar and molasses have been light, and met a ready sale at about previous rates. Flour has continued dull, without any quotable change in prices. Corn has been steady and in good request. Provisions have exhibited even greater dullness, and ruled still more in favor of buyers.

Our accounts from the country are still more gloomy, and it now appears that the promise of even an average crop is confined to a very few localities, while the general condition indicates a large falling off.

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales..	4,700
Mobile		487
Arkansas		201
Total		5,923

On Saturday, although operations were restricted by rain, which fell with but little intermission throughout the day, yet, under encouraging accounts from Liverpool and a decided advance at New York, 3,700 bales changed hands, partly, early in the morning, at previous rates, but mostly at an advance of ¼ to ⅜c., good ordinary closing at 15 to 15½c., low middling at 16⅛ to 16⅝c., and middling at 17 to 17¼c. On Monday, under the exciting New York dispatches noted above, the movement was much more animated, and while some few sales were made soon after the opening at Saturday's advance, the bulk of the business was at an irregular improvement of ¼ to ⅜c. and even ¾c., good ordinary closing at 15½ to 16c., low middling at 16⅝ to 17⅛c., and middling at 17¾ to 18c. The sales summed up 6,200 bales. On Tuesday the market opened buoyant, and after a few sales at a further improvement of ⅛ to ¼c., rapidly rose under the exciting telegrams received from New York, prices exhibiting considerable irregularity, but closing at an advance over Monday's rates of ⅝ to ¾c., and over Friday's of 1¼c. in low ordinary, 1⅜c. in ordinary, 1⅝c. in good ordinary, 1⅞ to 1½c. in low middling, 1⅞c. in middling and 2c. in strict middling. The movement at the same time was quite animated, the business embracing 5,700 bales, including one speculative list of 2,000.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 15,600 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,365,941 bales, against 1,102,854 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,007,838 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 879,555 bales to Great Britain, 298,360 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 218,982 to France.

Ordinary	14 to 14⅜
Good ordinary	16¼ to 16½
Low middling	17¼ to 17¾
Middling	18½ to 18¾
Strict middling	19 to ..

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—General Sherman, writing to the New York Herald from Fort Sill, May 25, says: To the Editor of the Herald: I have been skirting the Texas frontier for the past month. Here, for the first time, I meet files of Eastern papers, by which I see quite an unnecessary muss has been raised by a purported speech made by me at a supper of the Union League Club, of New Orleans, the night preceding my departure from that city.

Whoever reported that as a speech has committed a breach of propriety; for Governor Warmoth presided, and before I consented to respond to a call, I was assured by the president of the society that no reporters were present, and that whatever was said would be sacred and confined to the persons present.

Now, as to politics, I think all my personal friends know my deep-rooted antipathy to the subject; yet you seem not to understand me, therefore state, and mean all that I say, that I never have been and never will be a candidate for President; that if nominated by either party I should peremptorily decline, and even if unanimously elected I would decline to serve. If you can find language stronger to convey my meaning you are at liberty to use it. I am your obedient servant,

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 8.—The Selma and Chattanooga Railroad Company, better known as Stanton's road, was to-day placed in bankruptcy by Judge Busteed, of the United States District Court. The petition was made by W. A. Jamerson, Alabama creditor, whose claim is about $5,000.

E. H. Grandin and John F. Baily were appointed temporary custodians pending an election of an assignee by the creditors.

CONCORD, N. H., June 10.—The first session balloted for Governor to-day. James T. Weston, Democrat, received 167 votes; James A. Republican, 159.

The Legislature adjourned to-day, when Governor Weston will be inaugurated.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 12.—The steamship China brings 5,594 packages of tea, 1,111 bags of rice, 536 hogsheads of sugar and 4,621 packages of sundries, to San Francisco. The Bishop of Victoria is among her passengers. The China had about 100 Chinese passengers. Of the Japanese passengers by her two are treasury officials and eight are bankers, sent abroad to study our finances system, and seven are students. A private letter from Shanghai, received by the steamer China, says that uneasiness is felt at Pekin—the air is filled with strange mutterings, though danger to foreign residents is not supposed immediate.

FOREIGN.

VERSAILLES, June 7.—On the highest authority I state that the fusion of the monarchists has wholly failed, owing to the intrigues of Thiers, who privately exults over the certainty of maintaining a nondescript republic, with himself as chief, as in the case of Prim in Spain, for an indefinite period.

Incessant attempts are being made in Paris to induce the soldiers to fraternize with the people.

PARIS, June 7.—The funeral ceremonies to-day, over the remains of the clerical victims of the Commune, were solemn and impressive.

Notre Dame was grandly arrayed. The central object in the solemn group was the gorgeous catafalque containing the remains of Archbishop Darboy, surrounded by minor catafalques bearing the corpses of Guerry, curo of Madelaine, Suret, second vicar of the diocese, and those of Lecourt and Sabatur. The coffin of the archbishop was covered with rich black velvet, embroidered and enriched with a massive silver cross. Thousands of tapers were burning in silver candelabra, and the mass vessels were also of silver. The floor was covered with black cloth, and the pulpit was covered with black gauze, bespangled with silver stars.

In the transepts, one hundred and fifty feet wide, were huge recesses of black drapery, which covered every scene except those of the virgin and child and St. Donis, first Bishop of Paris.

In the midst of all were the black and charred remains of the Bishop's chair; and his throne, also half burned, with which the Communists had wavered to burn the cathedral, was left intact as a memento of the crime.

The weather was dull. Along the route of the procession the streets were crammed with spectators. Bells were tolling, a salute was fired, and a strong force of regulars, with reversed arms and muffled drums, were in the procession. The funeral car of the archbishop was covered with silver and drawn by six horses. Another beautiful car, containing the remains of Suret, followed.

The procession reached the cathedral at eleven o'clock. The priest's deputies left the chancel and proceeded by the great doors, which were draped with black, to meet the coffins. Chanting then commenced, and outside was heard the beating of drums, the pealing of trumpets and the roaring of cannon. At the elevation of the Host the firing was repeated. The altar was magnificently decorated, and the service was long and solemn. MeMahon, Dnay, Vinoy, L'Admiralt and Favre were present.

VERSAILLES, June 8.—It is reported Rossel and Courbet have been unearthed in Paris.

The court martial for the trial of the insurgents has not yet convened.

The official journal ascribes the insurrection to the congregation by Napoleon of three hundred thousand workmen in Paris.

LONDON, June 8.—It is rumored Count de Chambord has arrived at Boulogne.

A dispatch from Constantinople, dated yesterday, says fires broke out that morning simultaneously in four places, and at one time two hundred houses were in flames. Fortunately the wind was light, and there was a prospect of getting the fire under control. The damage done already was very heavy. The fires are supposed to have been the work of incendiaries.

The Marquis of Gallifet was assassinated to-day by the widow of a Communist who was shot by his order.

KINGSTON, June 8.—Carlotta Patti arrived from Panama and started for England.

Indian engineers have been at work on the irrigation of the soil.

Dispatches from Aspinwall, of the sixth, state that another engagement had taken place at Tilpa, State of Bayaca, between the government troops and the insurgents, in which the former were victorious, driving the latter on all sides and inflicting great slaughter. The government troops numbered one thousand and the insurgents eight hundred. The insurgents have dispersed and the government party is again secure in power.

The ship Illinois, from New York for San Francisco, foundered at sea. The crew were saved.

News from Panama to the fifth has been received. The Catholic bishop had arrived.

The bark Chester was wrecked on Turks' Island.

The United States steamer Rosaca returned to Panama disappointed at not discovering a canal route. She will return to the United States shortly.

PARIS, June 9.—A decree ordering supplementary elections to fill the vacant seats in the Assembly is expected to-morrow.

The Gazette of France says the princes have promised not to take their seats as deputies during the existence of the present Assembly, and not to allow their sons to become candidates.

It is almost certain that Prince Napoleon will run for the Assembly for Corsica.

LONDON, June 10.—The Paris papers continue upholding the administrators and the policy of Thiers, and affirm that monarchy is the synonym for revolution. They also appear to think that supplemental elections may change the majority of the Assembly.

VIENNA, June 10.—Prince Hohenlohe goes to Rome to congratulate the Pope on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his election.

BERLIN, June 10.—The Czar of Russia has departed. Count Waldorsee has been appointed minister to France.

LONDON, June 10.—The weather continues cold. There was a storm of an hour at Birmingham this morning.

The Marquis of Lorne and Princess Louise landed at Deal this morning, on their return from a tour on the Continent.

VIENNA, June 10.—The Austrian government has instructed its representative at the Italian court, Baron Kirbeck, to follow King Victor Emanuel to Rome.

BERLIN, June 10.—Count Waldersee will leave for Paris on the thirtieth instant.

RIO DE JANEIRO, May 13, via Lisbon, June 12.—The Regent of Brazil has been invested with full powers during the absence of the Emperor.

Senator Jacquaira has received the appointment of Brazilian minister of war.

The Brazilian government has presented to the chambers a bill for the emancipation of all slaves belonging to the crown.

BUENOS AYRES, May 16, via Lisbon, June 12.—Deaths from yellow fever are diminishing at the rate of twenty per day, and business is resuming its wonted course.

VERSAILLES, June 12.—Prince de Joinville having been chosen to the Assembly from more than one district, has addressed a letter to the president of the Assembly electing to represent the department of the Loire.

Thiers, to-day, invited the members of the Assembly to attend in a body a grand review of the army on Sunday next.

The trial of the Communists at Marseilles has commenced, amid much public excitement.

PARIS, June 13.—General Fabrice, the German civil administrator in France, officially visited Thiers, and will shortly leave France.

VERSAILLES, June 13.—Prince de Joinville and Due d'Aumale visited Thiers to-day.

LONDON, June 13.—A dispatch from Breslau this evening says a fire broke out in the Stadt Theater at a quarter to eight o'clock, and the building was in flames, with little prospect of being saved.

VIENNA, June 13.—General Von Goblinz goes to Berlin as special representative of Austria, to attend the triumphal ceremonies. He is the bearer of a congratulatory letter from the Emperor of Austria to the Emperor of Germany.

VERSAILLES, June 13.—General Trochu made a long speech before the Assembly in justification of his administration. He said he wrote to Napoleon in August urging the recall of Bazaine's army to Paris. He assented to the conference at Chalons when it was decided that he, as Governor of Paris, should prepare for the return of Napoleon to the capital, which was formally opposed by the Empress. General Trochu added that he was badly received by Count de Palikao as long as the latter remained minister of war. The general then gave a detailed account of the difficulties of the defense during the siege of Paris by the Germans.

LATEST NEWS BY MAIL.

DESTRUCTION OF THE TUILERIES.

NEW YORK, June 7.—Details of scenes in Paris at the time of its capture by the Versaillists have been received. A letter of May 26 says:

The destruction of the Tuileries was an act of pure malice. The Communists who held the Tuileries were commanded by Bergeret, and the destruction of the palace was accomplished by a great quantity of petroleum, which had been brought to the palace and to the other buildings occupied by the Communists. Bundles of hay, saturated with this petroleum, were placed all over the palace, the floors were all covered with the fluid, and before eleven o'clock the torch was applied.

The fire was first seen in the southwest wing of the palace, whence it rapidly made its way northward, and at two o'clock the whole grand edifice was a mass of flame.

HUNTING INSURGENTS.

A correspondent of the London Times says: After the fighting ceased the Versaillists began hunting for the Communists. The Parisians of civil life are craitiffs to the last drop of their blood. Yesterday they cried "Vive Communo;" to-day they rubbed their hands with livid, ourrish joy, to denounce a Communist and reveal his hiding place. Very eager at this work are the women; they know the rat holes into which the poor devils have got, and they guide to them with a fiendish glee the braves of France, and drag from one of the purlieus a tall, pale, hatless man, with something not ignoble in his carriage. His lower lip is trembling, but his brow is firm, and the eye has pride and defiance in it.

Then yell the crowd, "Shoot him! shoot him!" the demon women most clamorous of course, and an arm goes into the air, the fist falls on the head of a man, the men club their rifles and bring them down on that head, or dash them into splinters in the lust for murder. He is down; he is up again; he is down again—the thud of the gun-stocks on him sounding just as the sound when a man beats a cushion with a stick. They are firing into the flaccid carcass now, thronging about it like blowflies on a piece of meat. His brains spurt on my boot and plash into the gutter, whither the carrion is bodily chucked, presently to be trodden in and rolled on by the feet of multitudes and the wheels of gun-carriages.

Many were thus dragged out who had only hidden away when the retreat was cut off, and very lucky were they who were captured this (Wednesday) morning and marched away to the prisons. Many, very many were "passed into the other world by arms," according to the horrible phrase by which the French soldiers inform you that they have murdered some one.

A PITEOUS SPECTACLE.

A husband and wife were seized and ordered to march forward toward the Place Vendome, a mile and a half. They were both of them invalids, unable to walk far. The woman sat down on the curbstone and declined to move. In spite of her husband's entreaties she persisted, and they both knelt down together, begging the gend'arms to shoot them at once, if shot they were to be. Twenty revolvers were fired, but they still breathed, and it was only at the second discharge that they finally sank down dead. The gend'arms then rode away, leaving the bodies as they had fallen.

THE STEAMER NATCHEZ.—THE FIRST OF FOUR FAST TRIPS.

ST. LOUIS, June 7.—The steamer Natchez arrived here this evening on her first of four fast business trips she designs to make from New Orleans to this point. Time, three days and twenty-three hours—only four hours and a half slower than the famous race of the Robert E. Lee. She had over one hundred passengers and made twenty-two business landings. She lost forty minutes at both Memphis and Cairo. From Cairo up, and the first night out and most of the next day, was run against a terrific rain and wind storm. Distance from point to point, one thousand two hundred and sixty miles.

NOVA SCOTIA MOVING AGAINST THE TREATY.

HALIFAX, N. S., June 7.—New Brunswick has appointed three of its members, King, Moore and Frazer, as a delegation to confer with the governments of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward's Island, with a view to united action against the Washington treaty.

THE FUNERAL OF DR. JENKINS.—Rev. J. W. Lambuth sends the following account of the funeral of Dr. Jenkins to the Nashville Christian Advocate:

A very large number of the most respectable members of the various nationalities composing the foreign community of Shanghai attended the funeral of Dr. B. Jenkins, United States vice consul general, which took place at four P. M. this afternoon, at the Old Cemetery, where members of his family, and many of his old friends and fellow-laborers lie around him. An unusually bountiful afternoon permitted the attendance of a number of ladies. The majority of the foreign consuls of Shanghai were present, some of them being in full official dress. We noticed also the respectful presence of the Chinese Sub-prefect Chen, with whom the deceased has been associated on the bench of the Mixed Court since the establishment of that institution. A detachment of sailors from the United States steamship Monocacy were also present.

The Shanghai Volunteers, comprising the Mih-ho-loongs, Rifles and Artillery, turned out to the number of about seventy. Quite a number of Chinese friends of Dr. Jenkins were scattered about the cemetery.

The funeral service was impressively read by the Rev. Robert Nelson, of St. Savior church (American Episcopal Methodist,) in the Mortuary chapel, up to the usual point. The coffin was then carried to the grave by the seamen of the Monocacy. The service being then completed, the Volunteers presented arms and retired, and the groups of other attendants slowly dispersed.

Letter from the North Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I receive and read with pleasure the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. My little boy Frank, ten years old, said to me, a day or so since: "Papa, whatever other papers you quit taking, you must not quit taking the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE." Now when a child expresses his appreciation of my sermon, I take it as a gratifying evidence that my labor is not altogether in vain. So, I imagine, an editor will not be indifferent to the good opinions of the little folks. To speak or to write so as to interest and profit the young is a gift to be coveted.

Coming from the Mobile Conference, my heart frequently and fondly turns to my brethren of Alabama. I longed to be with them at their reunion in Montgomery last winter, when the Mobile and Montgomery Conferences were re-embodied, and again assumed the venerated name of "Alabama Conference." But the lines have fallen to me in another field of labor. Bishop Doggett, who presided at the session of the North Mississippi Conference, appointed me to take charge of the Verona Female College and of the church at this place. Thus far an encouraging success has attended our school enterprise, and we rejoice to record the goodness of God to his people. Our church at this place has recently enjoyed a gracious outpouring of the Spirit of God. Special services were held, beginning the second Sunday night in May, and continued from night to night for some two weeks. Bro. J. B. Stone, our excellent presiding elder, and Bro. Dunn, preacher in charge of Lee circuit, rendered effective service. Other ministers who were present helped forward the good work. More than thirty persons professed conversion. The church was greatly quickened and blessed, while many were constrained to praise God with a loud voice.

Methodists, Presbyterians and Baptists worshiped, rejoiced and praised God together about a Methodist altar. We were made to realize that the days of revival power had not gone by. God still performs in the sanctuary the miracles of his grace in the salvation of sinners. O that we had more frequent and more powerful visitations of revival grace! If we, as preachers and professing Christians, were willing to be the instruments of Pentecostal display, to be accounted as drunken with new wine—as singular, yea, as madmen and as fools—on account of our zeal for the cause of Christ, I verily believe we would be visited by more frequent and more signal displays of revival influence. But, alas! for us, we are too often willing to languish, even unto death, in a formal respectability, rather than prosper and grow mightily under the reproach of Christ.

Our school shared in the benefits of the revival, one of the teachers and a number of the pupils being among the converts. One of the number was the daughter of our beloved brother, Rev. J. Bancroft, of the Alabama Conference.

On last Sabbath, at the conclusion of the eleven o'clock service, twenty-one persons were received into the church; one of them came from the Baptist Church, and the others, chiefly the fruits of the late revival, took upon them the vows of the church for the first time. I like our method of receiving members publicly, and according to due form. Thus far I am a ritualist. The hurried, informal and unimpressive manner in which persons are sometimes taken into church membership is in a high degree reprehensible. But I am not altogether satisfied with the formula of reception as found in the last edition of our Discipline. Following immediately after the baptismal service, as occasion will frequently require, it would render the services long, and tend to weariness in the congregation. I know that the pastor is required "to keep and not to mend our rules." But is there not vested in him some discretionary prerogative, whereby he may so abbreviate or modify the ritual services of the church as not to weary his congregation?

OPELOUSAS STATION.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed an interesting and profitable meeting at Opelousas, which resulted in the conversion of fifteen souls—mainly the larger members of the Sabbath school. Nearly all of them were taken into the church last year. Two only joined during this meeting. Many of the older members received gracious spiritual blessings, and, I trust, were drawn nearer to God. We were frequently interrupted by showers of rain during the week of meetings, which seemed only to enhance the interest and enjoyment of those who came through them to present themselves before the Lord in his house.

The meeting closed with our second quarterly meeting, and the concluding service was a love-feast on last Sunday evening. In consequence of the frequent showers of rain only about thirty persons were able to reach the church. Out of this number twenty-six stood up as witnesses for Christ. The power of the Lord was there, and it was a time of deep and hallowed joy and rejoicing.

I feel encouraged, for I believe this is but the beginning of the gracious work for which some of us have earnestly prayed for for months past. Yours truly,

A. E. GOODWYN.

OPELOUSAS, June 5, 1871.

A RICH BISHOP.

Bishop Clark, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, lately deceased, was better off in point of worldly goods than the most of his brethren in the ministry. The Cincinnati Chronicle makes the following statements respecting his will:

Bishop Clark's will was this morning admitted to probate. The testator desires the payment of his just debts, including what may be due his wife as her own separate estate, as early as may be consistent with the judicious management of his estate. To his wife he bequeaths the residence No. 260 West Eighth street, together with the furniture, library, etc., and $10,000; to his two sons, D. W. and J. R. Clark, $10,000 each; to his daughter, Mrs. Fannie C. Davis, $9,000; to his daughter, M. Augusta Clark, $10,000; to his daughter, Mrs. Kittie S. Mullekin, $9,000. His married daughters had each received $1,000. The balance of his estate his executors are directed to divide into four equal parts, one of which shall be given to the Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society, the second to the same society for the Mission House in New York city, the third to the Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church for the support of a normal school (Clark University) of said society, located at or near Atlanta, Georgia, and the fourth to his wife. His wife and his sons-in-law, Dr. William B. Davis and E. W. Mullekin, were named as executors. The will was made on the thirtieth of December, 1870, and was signed in the presence of L. H. Swormstedt, Luke Hitchcock and W. M. Phillips. The estate is valued at $120,000.

IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE DRUGGISTS.—We direct attention to the advertisement of the extensive firm of Wheelock, Finlay & Co., who occupy the large building on the corner of Magazine and Gravier streets. They are extensively and favorably known, and have on hand a large assortment, and from their business connections are prepared to offer liberal inducements to the trade. We think no purchaser will have occasion to regret having acquainted himself with their stock and terms before purchasing elsewhere.

HYMN.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

Into the ocean of thy peace,
Almighty One, my thoughts would flow;
Bid thou this restless murmuring cease,
And thy great calmness let me know!

The world is bright and glad in Thee;
No hopeless gloom her face enshrouds;
Joy lights her mountains, thrills her sea,
And weaves gay tints through all her clouds.

The shadow, Father, is our own
That sends across our path a stain;
The discord is in us alone
That makes the echoing earth complain.

O God, how beautiful is life
When Thou its soul and sweetness art!
How dies its moan of childish strife
In the vast harmonies of Thy heart!

At one with Thee, forevermore,
Borne high beyond the caves of death,
A joy that ripples on Thy shore;
In songs shall pass my mortal breath.

The Education of Our Children.

MR. EDITOR: In my former articles on this subject I directed the mind and energy of the church to the importance of greater and more decided effort in elevating the masses of her children, by giving more attention to their education, by building up and properly sustaining primary schools.

I propose in this article to notice at some length our colleges and high schools under the control of the Alabama Conference. Strange as it may appear, many among our ministry and laity think we have too many colleges, and that the most of them, if not all, are located at the wrong points. Could we have seen twenty years ago what we now see, changes might have been made in this respect; but is it not more probable, if we could now see what will be the state of the church and country twenty years to come, that we would be glad we have so many institutions, and that they are located where they are?

When the public mind was quiet, and the church and country prosperous, their deliberate judgment located our institutions of learning where they are. Now the country is in an unsettled state, and the church is laboring under many embarrassments in adjusting herself to the new state of things around her. Would propriety, or even common sense, suggest this to be the time to attempt changes as to the future of our educational interests?

Had we not better unitedly sustain the present, and leave the future to adjust itself to the many changes that must inevitably occur for years to come? I have traveled extensively over all parts of the State, and from what I know of its geography and the people generally, and especially of their educational facilities, if I had to select the localities for our colleges (and I am sure I have no sectional feeling,) I would locate them for permanency just where they are; and beside the number we already have, I would add two more—one at Gadsden, in the North Alabama Conference, and the other at Ozark, in the Alabama Conference. I hope the brethren at those points will think of the above suggestion.

The Southern University is located at Greensboro, a beautiful town, with railroad facilities. The people are intelligent, refined and hospitable. The university is about the center of the largest and richest districts in the whole South, capable of sustaining a more numerous population than any section east of the Mississippi. The college is under the management of the ablest faculty in the South. The institution, in all respects, is just such an one as the church and public need in that part of Alabama.

The East Alabama Male College, located one hundred and fifty miles east of the university, in one of the most healthy sections in the State, is surrounded by an enterprising population. That part of the State will soon regain and go beyond its former prestige. The college is in a healthy condition, sustained by an experienced corps of professors, equal to any in the land. They are doing a noble work for the church, and the youth in that part of the State, east Alabama, must sustain this noble institution.

The Centenary Female College and Male Institute, located only seven miles from Selma, and near the center of the State, is the healthiest point in all middle and western Alabama. The people of Summerfield are proverbial for their piety, intelligence and hospitality. These institutions are certainly located at the right place, as their fruits abundantly show. They have furnished for the last twenty-five years educated men and women to the Church and State, from the mountains to the seaboard. The Male Institute is under the direction of Captain Massey, formerly of the State University. This institution is away from the great thoroughfares. The president experiences no difficulty in the control of the young men under his care. Captain Massey is a ripe scholar, an experienced teacher, and the best disciplinarian I have ever known. Where in all the land can a parent send a son and find so many advantages combined to secure his mental, moral and religious elevation? I would say, in all candor, to parents, send your sons to Prof. Massey, at Summerfield; keep them out of the way of temptation until they have strength and experience to resist the corruption of the present age. We shall soon have a daily hack running from Selma to Summerfield. The people are moving to build a railroad between those two points, which will no doubt be accomplished. We doubt, however, if a railroad to Summerfield would be any inducement to the more considerate to send their sons and daughters to Summerfield. If I had my children away from home, at school, I would be glad to have them as far away as possible from the great thoroughfares of disease and sin. The Centenary Female College is under the control and management of Prof. Vaughn and his refined and highly cultivated lady. No young lady can be brought under her influence without being made wiser and better. Prof. Vaughn is said to be, by competent judges, the ripest scholar of his age in the State. He has a large and successful experience as a professor in teaching both male and female. He has, besides his lady, a select corps of assistants. There is no female college in the land that offers larger inducements to the church and public than this time-honored and deservedly popular institution. The friends of this college are now making a united effort, and we heartily call on the many gentlemen and ladies, to be found all over the State, who were at Summerfield, to aid us in restoring these noble institutions to the prestige they had before the war. We hope to have a larger number of students in both institutions, at our next session, than we have had since the war.

Tuskegee Female College is located in Tuskegee, one of the most refined and tastefully arranged towns in the State. The president, Rev. Mr. Price, and his associate, Rev. Mr. Ross, are not only gentlemen of education, but combine with it the most refined and cultivated taste, fitted by nature as well as culture for the noble work of female education. They have an accomplished corps of teachers associated with them. This institution has now a large patronage, and is destined to be the institution for all east Alabama. We learned from the president that there was still a small debt hanging over the buildings. It is a shame upon the church of east Alabama that an institution so wide in its range of usefulness should be in debt. It is not worth my while to ask the church in east Alabama to sustain this popular institution. They are sustaining it. I should not be at all surprised if there were over two hundred students in attendance at its next session.

There is no Conference in the whole Southern Church so fortunate and so blessed with high educational facilities as the Alabama Conference. If the church was only true to herself, united and determined to sustain and stand by the good work they have so nobly begun, all thought of failure would vanish at once. The church has the means to amply endow both her male colleges. I suspect the Methodists in the Alabama Conference have now laid up in life insurances not less than $5,000,000. Her women spend annually in superfluous dress, by which they violate their vows to God and the church, enough to endow twice as many colleges as we have. Not one man in fifty has ever given anything, either to build or sustain our colleges. Hundreds do not know where our colleges are, and some of them important members of the church. The church don't act, because they are not enlightened. They do not appreciate, because they do not understand the worth of our colleges to the church and their own children. We might build up more reputation by having fewer institutions, but would we afford the means of a substantial education to more than half as many? We don't seek reputation abroad. We want to educate our own children at home.

The education of our own children is now one of the most important subjects before the church. It has become a permanent part of the duty of the church to provide for the education of her own children. To move or change the location of a college, when once permanently located, should never be thought of. We cannot afford to give up an institution that cost $50,000 or $100,000 every time a new village is built up, or a new railroad constructed, or perchance, after a rain, the roads should be a little muddy on the road to where some of our colleges are located. The grounds about our institutions should be cared for and made attractive, not allowed to grow up in briars and sedge. The oak and the elm, the cedar and the magnolia, should be planted around them. I hope the time will come when our institutions of learning will be so stable and prosperous that professors and teachers will find it to their interest to remain in the same institutions for life.

S. P. RICHARDSON.

THE COLLECTIONS.

MR. EDITOR: In the economy of our church there are certain collections of great importance to the interests of the church, especially to our Bishops, our superannuates, widows and orphans of deceased preachers, and the missionary cause.

But to bring up these collections the preachers must begin early in the ecclesiastical year, so as to scatter them through the year. Then there is a probability of getting what is needed for these purposes. Then, if the amount needed is not raised at the first collection, there is a chance for repeating the call and getting the deficit made up. Again, by beginning these collections early in the year, and keeping them up at intervals, till the whole amount is made up, we give the people the privilege of giving as they may have been prospered by the Lord, and to the extent of the demand or the necessity.

A very good plan, perhaps the better or best, is to ascertain how much is needed or required or expected from that church or congregation. State how much you want for that object. Now if each person here will give so much, that would make up the amount. But some may not be able to give that amount—perhaps not over one-half of it. So if some will give twice that sum, and the other half two-thirds, we will get what we want to-day. Be sure to let the people know how much you want for that object, and that it must be raised to-day or you will have to make application to them personally or lift another collection, as your honor and that of your charge require that the money must be raised—the amount must be made up.

I have found this plan to work well—better than any other I have ever tried. And if our preachers will adopt it and work up to it we shall not have such deficits in our collections, and such small pittances reported from some circuits. But to carry out this plan you will have to set your face like a flint against some stewards and some stingy members of the church. Yet if you persevere success will crown the effort, and those persons will see that the church has not been destroyed by those collections, and that the world still rolls on.

HERMAN.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Reminiscences of Rev. J. I. E. Byrd.

NUMBER THREE.

In 1814 the inhabitants of the Alabama portion of the Mississippi Territory literally dwelt in the midst of alarm and danger. Many families had to abandon their homes and live in the forts, especially those living as far eastward as the Alabama river. Fort Mims had been captured and massacred the previous year; many skirmishes had lately taken place between the whites and Indians, in which numbers had been killed on both sides; persons and small parties passing from fort to fort, or hunting game for the sustenance of their families, were frequently ambushed and fired upon by the murderous savages. In this state of affairs the itinerant preachers, who persisted in filling their engagements, were in constant peril, especially anywhere east of the Tombeckbee. The line of forts on that river rendered the settlements west of it comparatively secure from the predatory incursions of the hostile savages. Bro. Byrd had filled his monthly appointments in and near Mobile, and was making his journey to the settlements on the Chickasawhay, when he concluded that he might once more indulge in the luxury of reading on horseback. He was alone; the ride was long and solitary; but few Indians had ever made tracks in that section, and why should he not once more indulge his thirst for useful knowledge? He had lately come in possession of Dr. Joseph Benson's celebrated sermon on Proverbs xi, 30, "He that winneth souls is wise," and was so deeply interested in reading it that he became oblivious to all surrounding objects, when he was suddenly roused up by the immediate presence of two armed Indian warriors. He saw at once that escape by flight was impossible, and, with as much self-possession as he could command in an emergency so sudden and unexpected, he quietly submitted to his arrest. The Indians hastily stepped forward and seized his bridle, one on either side, holding the rein in one hand and the gun in the other. One demanded tobacco, and the other bread. Bro. Byrd, by words and signs, informed them that he had neither. With disappointed and angry looks they told him in their own language—a few words and sentences of which Bro. Byrd had learned—that he was "a great big liar." The evangelist now thought for a moment that his case was hopeless, and that he would either be hurried off as a prisoner or put to immediate death, and his body given to the vultures and wolves, and his scalp taken as an Indian trophy, when it occurred to his mind to resort to honest strategy, trusting in God for the success of the measure. He thrust his hands into his saddle-bags—the Indians no doubt thinking he was going to get out something for them—and drew out a book, which he opened on the pommel of his saddle, and pointing his finger to the page, and then solemnly looking and pointing upward, told the warriors, who still held his bridle, that he was "a reader for the great Spirit, and that his sole business was to travel among the people and read to them the book of the great Spirit." Their savage and angry countenances immediately relaxing, they let go the bridle and stepped back, when the preacher bade them a polite if not an affectionate farewell, and passed on without further molestation. In his intercourse with the preachers in after-life Bro. Byrd often recurred to this incident with gratitude to God for his deliverance.

The Mississippi district was still completely isolated from the Tennessee Conference, of which it was a part. The distance was so far, and the danger of traveling through the Indian nations so great on account of the existing war, that the preachers in the Territory thought it best to hold another informal Conference in the fall of 1814. At this, as well as others of a similar character, all the business of a regular Annual Conference was carefully transacted, except ordination, and their minutes sent to the Tennessee Conference for ratification. At this Conference Ira Byrd was appointed to Amite circuit, with Jonathan Kemp as his colleague. This was another one of those primitive circuits having often as many as thirty appointments to be filled every four weeks. It took in all of Amite county, with large portions of Pike and Franklin counties, in Mississippi, and St. Helena and Washington parishes, in Louisiana, and extended from the Choctaw nation on the north to Lake Pontchartrain on the south. He had but little to fear from hostile Indians this year, as the Choctaws were in league with the whites; but the British fleet under General Packingham was concentrating in the waters about New Orleans for the purpose of capturing the city, which kept his circuit, especially on the lake coast, in a high state of warlike excitement. Soon after his arrival on the circuit he met with a sore trial. The proximity of the British army to New Orleans made it necessary to call out additional forces of militia for the protection of the city. A requisition was made on St. Helena parish, which embraced many of the members and patrons of his pastoral charge. He went to the place of rendezvous, and expressed a great desire to go with them to the army, that he might minister both to their temporal and spiritual necessities. After some consultation among his friends, it was thought best for the country, in the absence of the men, for him to remain on the circuit, not only to preach to the old people and women and children, but to act as their protector in cases of emergency. The captain of one of the companies told me, many years after, that when they marched off Bro. Byrd stood and looked after them and wept, and invoked God's protection and blessing upon them, until they disappeared in the distance. The campaign was short and decisive, and most of them soon returned home to bring the good news of victory and a permanent peace. Ira Byrd occupied a high position in the confidence and affections of the people on this circuit, and when, ten years after, we traveled over the same territory, we found numbers who still loved to recur to the many happy meetings they had enjoyed with him. An increase of eighty-five members over the previous year shows that success attended his labors. In 1816 he was on Chickasawhay circuit, which had been lately detached from Tombeckbee circuit, and made a separate charge. At the end of this year, having made arrangements to marry Miss Margaret McRae on the twenty-first of the following January, he asked for and obtained an honorable location; for in those days the church made no provision for the families of the itinerant preachers, so that marriage and location were synonymous terms among the preachers as a general rule. After his marriage—which was suitable and happy—he settled on a small farm, and engaged industriously in agricultural pursuits. He was successful in his secular labors, but not satisfied out of the itinerancy. He was very active as a local preacher, and his services were in great demand, especially at funerals, two-days', quarterly and camp meetings. After his six days' hard labor on his farm, he often rode a distance of from fifteen to twenty odd miles to appointments on Sunday, preached, held class meeting, and returned at night.

J. G. JONES.

PORT GIBSON, Mississippi.

A WINTER SCHOOL IN GREENLAND.—The boys at nine o'clock go to the school house, which has no stove, because fuel is scarce. They come from their cold houses, and without eating anything warm, for the Greenlanders only cook in the evening. Often their boots, which are made of seal-skin, are not dry, and so the boys often have frozen feet. In spite of all this they come willingly to school. The girls have sewing and knitting school in the afternoon, which is kept by the wife of the missionary.

I SEE there is no such way to have a large harvest as to have a large heart. The free giving of the branches of our present estate to God is the readiest means to have the roots increased for the future.—Fuller.

Scotland Chapel Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I propose now a brief statement of the condition of my work. There are, in the four churches I am appointed to serve, a fraction under three hundred members, old and young. A very large proportion of the membership are young persons. These constitute an interesting and important field for usefulness. The success with which God has so far attended my labors in behalf of the children of the church is truly gratifying. We have two of the best Sunday schools within my knowledge outside of the large towns or cities of the Conference; and I may safely say the interest manifested in this good cause, both among parents and children, is rarely equaled. Although money can scarcely be had to pay the enormous taxes imposed upon the people, they still find it in their hearts to buy Sunday school libraries and replenish them. These two schools have each a new library; but the increase, almost weekly, of scholars demands already an increase of the libraries, and Bro. Harp will soon have new orders from us for books.

We had a Sunday school festival at Scotland chapel on Friday evening, May 5, which proved one of the most interesting occasions ever enjoyed by the friends of the Sunday school cause in this country. The exercises consisted of the coronation of the Queen of May, choice singing, recitations, and the personation of "Joseph and his Brethren" by the young men and boys of the school.

You will allow me, if you please, to give so much of the programme as the names merely of those who represented the principal characters in the coronation ceremony. My object I do not conceal. It is to let friends far away see and know that those they love are interested in the good cause still, wherever they may be. They were as follows:

"Queen of May"—Miss Maggie Dominick.

First maid of honor (Spring)—Minta S. Harris.

Second maid of honor (Summer)—Mary H. Peebles.

Archbishop—Mr. J. W. Ray.

Bishop—Richard W. W. Harris.

Herald—Master W. M. Lewis.

An immense church (for the country) was filled to its utmost capacity, and I am sure I speak the sentiments of hundreds when I declare that the exercises throughout were not only pleasing, but in every respect calculated to inspire love for God and the Sunday school. All was done with prayer and a truly devotional spirit. We have another Sunday school of some sixty or seventy scholars at Walnut Grove church, organized about four weeks ago, that is in a very prosperous condition.

We have the church conference fairly inaugurated, weekly prayer meetings, and a decidedly improved state of religious feeling in the congregations.

The financial condition of the country seriously affects the church interest in almost every department. But efficient stewards will generally provide a way to take care of the preacher. Two of my stewards started out on Monday last with a wagon to collect the preacher's quarterage in kind. They returned, bringing not their sheaves with them, but corn, nice hams, sugar, coffee, etc., to the parsonage. A clever young man came with horse and plow, and plowed my "patches." So we are "making out" to live "while we live." The Lord is good, and will provide.

I am teaching; have an interesting school. My people do not construe this, as too many would, as secularizing, and insist upon curtailing the preacher's allowance on this account; for I do this by agreement, and at the special solicitation of the church—for their accommodation. I am reconciled to this only on these grounds—that my people desire it, and I find a wider field for usefulness.

If in the providence of God and the tender mercy of our rulers we could be favored with the removal of unnecessary burdens in the way of taxation, so that the people could have something to invest in the various public and benevolent enterprises, this country would soon develop in every important interest. Would to God we could have peace!

While the oppression of these times is almost intolerable, and seems to paralyze commerce, manufactures, agriculture, and the aggressive spirit of the church, still it may be the crucible from which God's people will come forth purified as by fire. If all Christians would give themselves to prayer and fasting, God would sooner, no doubt, hear and deliver us out of our troubles.

TWILIGHT SHADOWS.

The daylight fades, and, strangely still,
Floats down upon the distant hill,
And on the nearer plain and trees,
The twilight vail of mysteries.

Unseen, the harbinger of night
Creeps stealthily between my sight,
And the faint letters of the book
That fade and darken as I look.

In silence sitting by the fire,
What wonder if my thoughts aspire
To people with companions bright
This silver border of the night?

What if to me the shadows take
A definite and real shape,
And I behold around me stand
Guests from the unseen spirit-land?

Invisibly, and one by one,
They gather in the gloaming dun;
I cannot touch nor feel them here,
But yet I know that they are near.

Oh, loved ones—kindest, dearest, best—
My spirit clings to you for rest;
Sweet comforters in life's sad pain,
For evermore with me remain.

It may not be. Alas! they go,
Fading majestically and slow;
Yet never doubt that they have been,
Because their presence is unseen.

DARWINISM.

ITS PROGRESS.—ITS CRISIS.—ITS RELIGION.

No scientific hypothesis has ever produced so general a sensation, within so short a time, as that of Darwinism. Spengel, a German, has just given, in the Zeitschrift fur Ethnologie, a catalogue of publications on the subject, which takes up twelve closely printed pages; and this list is necessarily very deficient, especially in American and other remote publications. Spengel first gives a catalogue of German translations of Darwin's different works; secondly, no less than forty-three German works on his theory; thirdly, about the same number of German books which treat of the subject incidentally, but, some of them, at considerable length; fourthly, lists of reviews and other periodicals in German, which discuss the anthropological bearings of the theory—the Descent of Man, etc. Next are books on this question, and then German translations of the leading English scientists on the subject—Huxley, Wallace, Lyell, etc.; lastly, a classified catalogue of other foreign publications on Darwinism—those of France, Holland, Italy, etc.

The Germans have very generally gone over to Darwinism, but the exceptions among them are men of high authority. The French scientists pretty generally hesitate, or directly oppose the theory. Mivart's book has produced a deep impression in England, and it is acknowledged there that the hypothesis has reached a crisis, and that the Darwinists must present some further demonstration, or retreat. Mivart acknowledges Darwin's law of Natural Selection (as all naturalists probably will,) but he proves that, while it accounts for some secondary modifications of species, it utterly fails to account for the more profound organic distinctions; that while it modifies species, it does not transmute them, much less effect genera; that for the fundamental variations, from the four sub-kingdoms, down to species, there must be some yet undiscovered law or force analogous to intelligence in man.

The scientific periodicals of England are rife with the subject. At a late meeting of the Anthropological Institute (Sir John Lubbock presiding,) Dr. Bleek read a paper on "The Position of the Australian Languages," in which he reached conclusions quite opposed to Lubbock's view of the original state of man. The London Nature says that, after pointing out the discovery made by Sir George Grey, that the languages spoken throughout the southern portion of the Australian continent were derived from one common stock, the author proceeded to inquire what relationship they bore to other languages. It was shown that in structure they were diametrically opposed to Polynesian languages; that they had remarkable resemblances to the Dravidian or South Indian languages, and should be placed with the latter in the same class. From the linguistic point of view, Dr. Bleek had arrived at the conclusion that the Australian native was, probably, mainly a degenerate offspring of the South Indian race. It would appear, from a comparison of the religious customs and observances of the past with those of the present time among the Australian aborigines, that these people had fallen from a higher civilization. If Dr. Bleek is correct, a most important application of Darwinism, made by Lubbock, to the savages of the Southern ocean, fails.

Meanwhile Beale, the well known microscopist, who has so effectively answered Huxley on Protoplasm, as related to the origin of life, appears with an elaborate discussion on the religious bearings of the new scientific tendencies. He insists that they threaten all religion whatsoever, and that their result must be the overthrow of the highest motives and guarantees of morality. On the other hand, Prof. Kingsley has addressed the clergy of London, at Zion College, in favor of more forbearance (to say the least) with the new theories. He contends that the Darwinian evolutionism does not necessarily deny God; that it only places further back the great first cause. This is obvious enough, and may be satisfactory enough to the theist; but the Christian thinker is not a mere theist. Bolingbroke, Voltaire, and most of the staunchest antagonists of Christianity, were Christians, if theism is the only essential matter in Christianity. Darwinism involves the whole Christian theory of man—his origin, his fall, his moral constitution, and especially the Pauline anthropology. We see no possibility of Mr. Kingsley's evasion of this fact. This sort of parleying with the scientific skepticism of the day by theologians, this soothing assurance that it can be reconciled with Christianity, is a species of truculence over which the scientists chuckle, for they know it is the timidly polite concession which precedes surrender. We prefer the scientist Beale's views of the relations of the new theories to religion, to the views of the novelist Kingsley of the relations of religion to the new theories. The great question, however, is not yet that of the relations of Darwinism to religion, but of the truth of Darwinism itself. When that is certified, it will be time for the biblicists to compromise, but not till then.—Methodist.

A MIGHTY BIG MIRACLE.—A gentleman once charged his slave, who was setting off for church, to remember the text and repeat it to him on his return home. But when questioned, Sambo's idea of a "text" seemed very vague.

"Well, if you can't tell the text, you can surely tell me what the sermon was about," said the master.

"O yes, massa, I can tell heaps of what it was 'bout," replied Sambo. "It was 'bout when de twel' 'postles was hungry dere was a mighty mericle worked to feed 'em."

"And what was the miracle?"

"Why, sah, dere was five thousand loaves of bread and five thousand small fishes fetched 'long by a boy to feed 'em wid!"

"But, Sambo," asked the master, "if there was so much food, where was the miracle?"

"Why, bless yer heart, massa, de mericle was dat do 'postles ate all dat stuff and didn't bust!" replied Sambo, with triumph in his air.

A great many people who are white, and wiser than Sambo, go to church Sabbath after Sabbath, and year after year, and yet know as little of the Bible as he did. We recently heard of a gentleman who had represented his town in the legislature, who, in advocating the division of a township, said: "Gentlemen, let us have peace! Our town is very large, and if we cannot agree on a site for a new town-house, let us say, as David said to Jonathan, when there was strife between their herdsmen: 'Let there be no strife between thee and me.'"

Another, a rich man, who had attended church from his boyhood, in speaking of a painful separation from friends, said: "I felt as Peter did when he said to his Master: 'Whither thou goest I will go, where thou diest I will die, and there will I be buried!'"

Did poor, ignorant Sambo's blunder beat that of the legislator or of the rich merchant?

It is not enough to hear or read carelessly the word of God. It must be studied and treasured up in the memory. If people choose to be ignorant of the best of books, they should never venture to quote from its pages.—Watchman and Reflector.

INFLUENCE OF A CHILD.—A gentleman lecturing in the neighborhood of London, said:

"Everybody has influence, even that child," pointing to a little girl in her father's arms.

"That's true," cried the man.

At the close he said to the lecturer: "I beg your pardon, sir, but I could not help speaking. I was a drunkard; but as I did not like to go to the public house alone, I used to carry this child. As I approached the public house, one night, hearing a great noise inside, she said: 'Don't go, father!' 'Hold your tongue, child.' 'Please, father, don't go!' 'Hold your tongue,' I said. Presently I felt a big tear fall on my cheek. I could not go a step further, sir. I turned round and went home, and have never been in a public house since—thank God for it! I am now a happy man, sir, and this little girl has done it all; and when you said that even she had influence, I could not help saying: 'That's true, sir.' All have influence."

A PLAIN-SPOKEN PREACHER recently declared that some people cannot see the difference between sounding the gospel trumpet and blowing their own horn.

HYACINTHE TO DOLLINGER.

The Independent publishes the following letter from Hyacinthe to Dr. Dollinger:

TO PROF. DOLLINGER, MUNICH.

ROME, April 26, 1871.

Dear and Illustrious Friend: Your most masterly letter to the Archbishop of Munich has produced a profound effect at Rome; and those who assume the air of caring very little for it are the very persons who best appreciate the importance of it. Notwithstanding, the passion which possesses them is so violent, the current in which they are drifting is so irresistible, that this great utterance of Christian learning and Christian conscience will not check them. We have the proof of it in your excommunication, which was decided upon here before it was pronounced at Munich. The party which just now holds control not only of the Pope, but of the episcopate, has not shrunk from a proceeding so well fitted to revolt all honest souls; and this impotent and iniquitous stigma is the acknowledgment which it has to offer to the old champion of the Catholic faith for fifty years of toil and conflict against Protestantism, in which his very antagonists have been compelled to yield him their respect and admiration. But the party has failed. It would fain have dimmed your glory, but has succeeded only in completing it. To suffer for the church, and from the church, while yet abiding in the church, is the most cruel of martyrdoms; but it is also the most glorious and the most fruitful!

As you so well put it in one of your last letters to me, "it is very significant of the present state of the church that a man becomes a heretic, and is excommunicated, in consequence of preserving the tradition of the faith, and continuing to believe and teach what he has been believing and teaching all his life long." This is the pass to which we have been brought by the maneuvers of that party—if I may call it by its true name, that sect—whose audacity, too long veiled, but constantly on the increase, has come to the point of attempting to establish a new Catholicism. On every side I hear talk of the dangers of schism in some nearer or remoter future. The schism is already here. It exists under forms and in proportions heretofore unknown; and (most fearful thing of all!) it has its roots in that very institution which ought to give us unity.

Therefore it is that the time for words seems to me to be passed, and the time for action to have come. We could make whole libraries out of the books that have been written against the exorbitant pretensions of the Court of Rome, and yet these pretensions have never stopped increasing. Against such a system the demonstrations of learning and the protests of conscience are of no avail. The men who represent it do not understand the language of truth and righteousness; or, rather, with a blindness that is more than human, they conceive themselves to have certain rights superior both to morals and to history, and they undertake to reconstruct both these in the likeness of their own infallibility. To open their eyes, they will have to be jostled by events that are stronger than they; and this, if I mistake not, is the terrible punishment which God is reserving for them, and this, at the end of time, is the unlooked-for deliverance which he is preparing for his church. "It is time," as the Apostle Peter says, "for judgment to begin at the house of God."

Courage, then, great and noble heart, and may God bless you for having freely offered yourself to danger for the house of Israel! Our mighty men have ceased from among us, and have fallen asleep. "Cessaverunt fortes in Israel et quieverunt." But the Lord has called you forth, in your old age, to new conflicts and new victories!

HYACINTHE.

THE Methodists in cities, it is said, pay $15 apiece to the support of the church, and $3.50 in the country. The Roman Catholics $10 in cities, and $5 in the country; the Episcopalians $25 in the former, and $5 in the latter. The ratio of other churches is not given. These figures show the great difference between city and country finances and expenses. They also may enlighten some minds that fancy because city preachers get the most money, they necessarily live better, and lay up more. The former may possibly be the case, though that is doubtful, good living costing but little in the country. But they undoubtedly have less at the end of the year than their rural brethren. So all dwell about on the same level.—Zion's Herald.

ELEVEN YEARS AGO petroleum was unknown as an article of utility. Now the total capital invested in it, at home and abroad, is $100,000,000, of which the American capital is $70,000,000.

They say that our Lord made an alcoholic intoxicating drink. Could not he have made a pure, unalcoholic grape juice then? Did our Lord there, for the first time in nature, make that alcoholic power which is the strongest, most destroying power in all strong drink? I leave the burden of proof on those that make such asseverations. I deny it. I believe the Lord, when he changed the water into wine, changed it not into alcohol—not into that which biteth like a serpent. Friends, I will give you the argument for a moment. Suppose he did make it real, intoxicating drink, just such as you can get at any fashionable table, or in any of the saloons of this city. I don't care if you call it wine, or Newark cider, or Bourbon, or anything else. You say our Lord made one hundred and twenty gallons for one wedding company. Well, then, because Christ did it, you may do it? Yes; well, Christ went one day in the week and worshiped in the Jewish synagogue. Do you follow and worship there? Christ went for a wise purpose and blasted a fruit tree. Does that justify you in doing the same? Christ went into the temple and drove out all the people there. Do you want to do that too? You say no; if Christ lived here now he wouldn't do these things. An eminent clergyman has said that if Christ lived in New York to-day, where you have a million of men poisoned by these intoxicating drinks, he would not do it now. Then what business have you got to quote his example and apply it now? I say it is disingenuous, it is an outrage to stand and say that our Lord, in this city, and at this time, would not make one hundred and twenty gallons of intoxicating liquor, and yet quote his action as a warrant for using it to-day.

HEALTH AND MIND.—Dr. Abel Stevens, in a capital article on this subject in the March number of the new health journal, Home and Health, says:

Alexander von Humboldt was the corypheus of physical science and a man of universal culture; a man, also, of "society" and of courtly life. He kept up his intellectual work to the last, laboring mostly while the world around him slept. It was his most substantial life. He lived about ninety years, and crowded into them centuries of the life and work of ordinary men. On the third of May, 1859, the journals of Berlin announced that "Alexander von Humboldt has been confined to his bed the last twelve days; his strength has been gradually failing; his mind retains all its clearness." In three days more, as the sunlight poured into his window, he exclaimed: "How grand those rays! they seem to beckon earth to heaven!" and died. For twenty years or more, the time in which men are usually said to be beyond the "allotted period of life," and during which they usually mentally decay from day to day, he was writing the greatest work of his life, the greatest of his generation, the "Cosmos." He laid down his pen, his task splendidly finished, but a short time before he laid himself down to die. The "Cosmos" kept him alive, mentally and physically.

Brain-work is sanitary work. Nay, it is a necessary condition, more or less of it, of health in advanced life, a necessary preventive of cerebral decay. Not only moral purification, but growth in intelligence, in wisdom, is the divinely appointed result of human life as a probation, and nature deals out her penalties for the neglect of the latter, as well as for the neglect of the former.

VARIOUS GIFTS.—Christians vary as the leaves of the forest, and are only prepared to be useful when they cease "comparing themselves among themselves, and measuring themselves by themselves." If God has given you a courageous, outspoken nature, consecrate it to Christ. Do not try to be like your friend, whose life work is as unlike yours as the expression of his face and the form of his person. Every Christian can find a place to work in the vineyard. Giving himself unreservedly to Christ, Christ will mold him into his own precious image, and give full exercise to every power.

THE OLDEST ENGLISH WORD.—It has often been said that "basket" is the oldest word in the English language, as its existence is shown by the fact of its being mentioned both by Juvenal and by Martial, who says: "Barbara de pictis vemi bascauda Britannis." But it may be questioned whether "bark," as an equivalent for "ship" or "vessel," is not older, as a writer in the Academy, quoting from an ancient writer, "Certamen barcarum," as Latin for a "regatta," remarks that "the word barca is probably of Phœnician origin."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

A GENTLEMAN in Boston has subscribed $20,000 for the endowment of Liberia College, at Monrovia, in West Africa.

THE Methodists in England publish three religious weeklies, the Independents and the Baptists one, the Presbyterians and the Episcopalians four.

THE Philadelphia Press states that the Sultan is endeavoring to induce the Jews to immigrate to Palestine, and even offers to sell them the Mosque of Omar, which occupies the site of the ancient temple on Mount Moriah. Some of the hills around Jerusalem have already become Jewish property.

THE committee representing the different missions at Peking, and engaged for several years in translating the Bible into Mandarin, reached the end of the Gospel of John in revising their former version, and the American mission press there was to begin publishing it a month or more since.

THE Non-Episcopal Methodist Conference, which has just closed its session at Pittsburg, refused by a very decided vote to authorize the ordination of women to the ministry. The Book Concern of that denomination is to be removed from Springfield, Ohio, to Pittsburg, and Rev. Alexander Clark has been re-elected editor of the Recorder.

THE Presbyterian General Assembly has been trying hard to abolish the order of "stated supply," which is fast becoming more popular with the churches than with the presbyteries. Out of the four thousand ministers of the church, only sixteen hundred are settled pastors, while eleven hundred are "stated supplies." Pastors are installed by consent and authority of presbyteries; but stated supplies are hired for a year or other period by the trustees of the local church, thus establishing an order of things independent of the presbytery.

LATEST and best authority gives the population of the globe at 1,350,200,000; in America, 72,800,000; in Europe, 287,000,000; in Asia, 798,600,000; in Africa, 188,000,000; in Australia and Polynesia, 3,800,000. These people speak about 3,600 different languages, and are cut up into 1,000 different religious sects. The adherents of the principal religions, counting the whole population, are supposed to be nearly thus: Greek Church, 69,692,700; the six other Oriental churches, 6,500,000; Roman Catholics, 195,000,000; Protestants, 98,139,000; Mohammedans, 160,000,000; Buddhists, 340,000,000; other Asiatic religions, 260,000,000; Pagans, 200,000,000; Jews, 6,000,000.

BUXTON, MAINE, has had a great awakening. "It began outside of any apparent church influences, among neglecters of religion, who came into a prayer meeting, convicted of sin, to ask direction. Converted, they went to work, and numerous skeptical, profane and intemperate persons have been drawn to the truth." A resident litterateur, who was about to publish a $300 story, abandoned the project at once. One prominent business man, who sought to stifle the workings of the Spirit by a glass of whisky, suddenly realized that he was throwing away his last chance of salvation. At midnight he called up his wife and friends, and after hours of bitter agony he found at length great peace.

THE Presbyterian says that the churches of that denomination are generally acting upon the principle that no assent to a creed is to be exacted of private members when entering into the membership of the church. Such assent is required only of those who are ordained to office in the church. The Assembly of 1839 made this explicit declaration: "We have ever admitted to our communion all those who, in the judgment of charity, were the sincere disciples of Jesus." This may have been the rule among the Old School churches, but we have known of the refusal to admit members to New School churches on account of their avowal of Arminian doctrine.

PRIMITIVE METHODIST MISSIONARY ANNIVERSARY.—This anniversary was held in Spurgeon's great Tabernacle, London, May 2. The annual report showed that in the number of members, in income, and in school and chapel erection, there had been considerable progress during the year. There were two hundred and eleven missionaries, of whom ninety-two labored in England, eight in Wales, seventy-one in Scotland and Ireland, nine in circuit work, and the remainder in Tasmania, Victoria, New South Wales, Queensland, Canada and Africa. Mission stations were constantly being absorbed in circuits as they became self-supporting. The income of the past year, £23,117, showed an increase of £2,719 over the previous year, but the outlay had been still more, and there was a balance due to the treasurer of over £1,500.

METHODISTS IN ITALY.—The London correspondent of the Central Advocate says: "I see that my friend Dr. Vernon is appointed missionary to Italy. He will be cordially welcomed by the brethren of the society who are already there; and the history of the Wesleyan Italian Mission proves that there is a grand opening for Bro. Vernon. Our mission has been established about eleven years. We have sent to Italy only three English missionaries, and of these, one, through failure of health, was able to remain only a short period. Our present superintendent in Italy is Rev. Mr. Piggott. He is a man of accomplished scholarship, a graduate and prizeman of the London University. He is, moreover, a man of very devout spirit, of calm judgment, and yet of considerable vigor and push. He is an admirable speaker of Italian. The other English missionary is Mr. Jones, and he has his headquarters at Naples. He has gained a remarkable command of the Neapolitan dialect of Italian, and is a very effective preacher.

A NEW SECT has arisen in Scotland under the name of "The Northern Evangelistic Society." One of the articles of their faith is personal perfection, which they thus confess: "I sin not." "I have no time to sin." "I am as pure as the Angel Gabriel, and purer." Holding up his hand, one said: "My hand is as holy as God." "I am as holy as God." "I have left my sins behind me in Egypt." Their opinion of Christians not in their own communion is, of course, in inverse ratio to their good opinion of themselves. Of the southern counties of Scotland they say there is not a spark of spiritual life in them all, excepting at Pittawein and Kelso. Their haunt is in the glens that girdle the base of Benachie, Aberdeenshire; and Mr. Hugh McIntosh, who unearthed them there, expresses the very probable opinion that "there have been more anathemas uttered by them at the foot of Benachie during the last three months than by all the popes of Rome during the last three hundred years." A sure mark of your professional perfectionist is an utter uncharitableness.

THE Free Church of Holland, which was organized in 1836, has had a troubled history. It has been rent by secessions. Recently the two branches into which it was divided have come together, under the title of the "Reformed Church of Holland." According to Dr. Burt, in the Presbyterian, this church "now enters upon a new and more promising stage of its history—having about three hundred congregations and two hundred and thirty pastors. It also has a theological school, with a full equipment of professors, and this year no less than sixty-two students. So many students, relatively, to the number of pastors and churches indicates that the church is about entering with new zeal upon an aggressive or missionary work. This church is said to recruit its members almost wholly from the humbler classes of society, and the success with which its institutions are maintained and its work is propagated elicits the warm admiration of the free churches of other countries of the continent. They see herein an encouraging triumph of voluntaryism."

THE occupation of Rome by the infidels has had the effect of destroying a very valuable branch of business formerly carried on by the cures of the parish churches. All parishioners were legally bound to confess and receive the communion at least once a year, at Easter. If they failed of this duty, they were liable to fine and imprisonment. Accordingly, there was an open trade carried on in certificates of communion, by buying one of which the purchaser established his reputation as a good Catholic, and avoided the trouble of trying to recollect all his sins and obtaining absolution for the same. Now that there is no penalty attached to this delinquency, excepting such as will be administered in the world to come, the number of these impenitent sinners is so great that the list of their names is not affixed to the doors of the churches, as formerly, because of its intolerable length. The cures still visit the houses of their parishioners, and bless the beds and other furniture, sprinkling them with holy water; but very few of those thus favored think it necessary to make any pecuniary return—not even of the bad money they had received during the year, and which they used to lay up carefully for these pious uses.—Independent.

NEVER OUT OF THE HARNESS.—Eliot, in his eightieth year, as he was teaching the alphabet to an Indian child, was asked why he did not rest from his labors. "Because," said he, "I have prayed that I might be useful, and God has heard my prayer; for while I can no longer preach, he leaves me strength enough to teach this poor child." This was on the last day of that good man's life.

LAYMEN AT WORK.

We have some good agents among the laymen. We are indebted to a number of them for as many as ten, fifteen, and as high as nineteen subscribers.

Below is an extract from a private letter, written by one of them, who, in a short time, has secured nineteen subscribers at an office than which there are few in any part of the South where such a result would seem more difficult to accomplish. The following is the extract which we wish you to read:

Considering our people are generally poor, and this part of the country thinly settled, I humbly think the subscription list from this office will not rank below many of the lists of other offices in the country. For my part I can say, "I have done what I could," though I court no praise, because my best efforts hardly come up to "my duty," which is to aid in every way God's cause and religion, and the dissemination of religious truth is not the least of the instruments in effecting good; indeed it is no small lever in moving men's hearts to righteousness.

I consider the Advocate a preacher (and a good one, too;) and as it has not of itself the power of locomotion, it has to be moved around in order to exercise its mission, and it is our duty to do the "moving," otherwise many who would be moved to holiness through its teaching are lost to God and the church. As the apostle says: "How can they hear without a preacher?"

A WORD ABOUT REMITTING.

State explicitly whether the money which you send is for the Book Agency or for the Advocate. The two are separate and distinct concerns. Though they are conducted by the same agent, we must not mix their business. If convenient, write to each on separate sheet or half sheet, but be sure to state for which office the money sent is intended; and if for both, then state how much for each. This will save trouble and prevent mistakes.

SEND US OURRENCY.

We cannot use State money. We have to lose by discount here, or by the expense of sending into the State where it is issued to have it exchanged for currency. Procure the currency and save us the trouble and loss.

A little boy in Muncie, Indiana, made his father a New Year's present of $150, which he had made by doing odd jobs during the summer.

STIRRING UP THE GIFT.

The resources of the church are but partially developed. Her power is to a great degree latent, and her capabilities are but feebly exhibited in the religious enterprise of the day. No one feels that she is doing all that is possible in the work of subduing the world to Christ. The undone is more than is accomplished. There are knowledge, grace and wealth enough to cover the earth with the glory of the Lord in a single decade. Much has been achieved, and much more is unfolding in the field of gospel activities. But still there are pent-up energies, and the fire which Christ came to send is a smoldering rather than an all-consuming flame. The gift of God, embracing the tongue of fire and all consecrated accessories, is capable of larger returns to him who bestows it. The Christian world, with its millions of professors, with its cultivation and learning, with its vast possessions, and with the improved facilities of diffusion, does not reach the measure of its responsibility.

What is true of Christendom at large is also true of churches and congregations. Very few are working up to their capacity, in their local or connectional mission, as centers of moral influence, and as fountains of spiritual benefits. The materials of which they are composed are but partially brought into service. The working members of a congregation are exceptional, and alarmingly few in comparison with the entire number. The amount given for church enterprises is small in proportion to the aggregate ability, and the improvement of the gifts and graces possessed falls far below what ought to be expected. In any given case so large a company of converted people, having the unction of the Holy One, and constrained by the love of Christ, should be instrumental in effecting many fold more than is actually realized. Here and there a church is honorably known as "the old beehive," prolific of new-born swarms, and thrusting them out to become the centers of power in other neighborhoods. Too often, instead of the busy hum of an irrepressible spiritual activity bursting forth into fresh enterprises, and planting the gospel in new places, there is the satisfied torpor of winter. If the store for self-support be adequate, there is no restless reaching out after a thrifty extension to the regions beyond. The multiplication of members indicates life, but the highest exhibition is where a congregation becomes the parent of other societies, and impresses its individual vigor upon distant missions and connectional undertakings. The power of a single congregation to devise and execute liberal things, so as to be felt pre-eminently in the community and in the more distant fields of enterprise, is rarely called out in its fullest exercise. The church of Pentecost effected a marvelous work in a brief space of time. The gift of God was burning at its height, and the results were such as are likely to follow where the Spirit is not quenched. The germ of a grand conflagration is in every church, it is flickering in every heart, and only needs to be recognized and fanned into a mighty flame.

The gift of God in the individual is often allowed to remain in a half latent condition. The most is not made of what we have. Greater gifts and better opportunities are conceivable, and perhaps desirable; but what we have are allowed to slumber, or are but partially improved. The stream of spiritual life flows sluggishly, or has become repulsively stagnant, when it should be moving on with ever-increasing depth and purity. God's gift is in the preacher—the gift of power and authority as imparted by the Holy Spirit, and as recognized by his call and solemn ordination. Has he wrought this gift up to its uttermost as a refining fire in his own soul, and as a means of usefulness to others? If Paul was so solicitous for Timothy, lest he should neglect the gift that was in him, there is surely reason for every minister of the gospel to examine himself. There was and is danger of negligence. Hence the weight of the admonition: "Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God which is in thee by the putting on of my hands." It is something already in us that must be rescued from neglect—a fire already kindled that must be kept from going out. Only the half that might have been done has been achieved for want of more prayer and a deeper devotion. In too many instances the man of God has grown rusty in the service for want of exercise, and he has got out of the harness when he should be in the van of the host. All over the land are men upon whom the hands of consecration have been laid, and who are neglecting the gift that is in them. It must be stirred up and rekindled. It must be drawn out into active usefulness. Methodism in America began in the waking up of a local preacher. It was the stirring up of the gift of God in Philip Embury that marked the rise of the denomination. Would that some good Barbara Heeks might arouse the scores, and perhaps hundreds, who are now slumbering at their posts! Stir up the gift of God that is in thee, the gift of converting grace, the gift of ministerial authority and consecration, the gift of the Spirit in the heart.

All believing men and women have in them a wonderful gift of usefulness. It is enough if God has converted their souls. They are henceforth qualified to "show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light." All the divine gifts need to be developed, but they are abundantly bestowed. The capacity for work is unknown until brought out in actual use. Gifts for teaching, gifts for prayer, gifts for sanctified social influence are scattered profusely. The materials for all the demands of the church are in its members, but the divine gift is neglected. Every Christian must see to it that he stirs up the gift of God that is in him. The present may be a feeble religious life, and the soul sinks and languishes under a felt sense of weakness and uselessness. But there is a world of power in every converted soul—a mine of inexhaustible riches; a capacity of faith and a boundless embrace of love, to move the arm of God, and to bring blessings upon the earth. Christians are almost as ignorant of their present capacity as they are of their future glory. The gift that is in them, to be expanded into influence and usefulness, as much exceeds their apprehension as the glory which shall be revealed in the world to come. This gift of gifts, under whose genial beams all the graces spring into bloom and fruitage, under whose leading the humblest life becomes a means of untold good to the world—how it is dishonored by fear and unbelief! It should be the prayer and study of every child of God to stir up this divine gift, and to bring out the matnrest fruits of which it is capable. The purpose should be to make the most of himself in holiness and in usefulness, to wake up the dormant powers of his spiritual nature, and thus to meet the fearful responsibility which the gift of God has laid upon him. Money, talents, time must all be accounted for, but above all must we account for the gift that is in us—the Holy Ghost.

NEW BUSINESS.

A correspondent of the Nashville Christian Advocate gives the following. A very good item, and searching, for a Quarterly Conference.

Temperance.—I find that the first resolution under this head, in our Conference Minutes (Louisville,) has proved a success in this district.

The presiding elder goes through an examination of character every quarter; and he finds all of my officials temperate men. Doubtless it is one of the best newly-invented features in his office. It brings men to thinking. I was amused not long since, in attending him to one of his circuit Quarterly Conferences, when the question was asked a steward: "Do you drink ardent spirits as a beverage?" The steward was very much confused, but he acknowledged that he did. But he made promises to reform.

DEPOSITION.

The case of Mr. Cheney, which has been so long before the public, has, we suppose, now come to an end. The rector of an Episcopal Church has been deposed for the grave crime of omitting a single word in the baptismal service. That word was significant as teaching baptismal regeneration, and hence the import of the whole affair. It is gratifying to the true friends of spiritual religion to see the resistance bravely maintained against this most absurd and dangerous dogma, and to witness the number of influential ministers of the Protestant Episcopal Church which extends aid and sympathy to Mr. Cheney. There is manifested in the trial and deposition abundance of high church bigotry and error, but these manifestations have brought to light hopeful indications of reaction in favor of evangelical doctrine. Beyond this aspect of the affair other denominations care little about it. Our Episcopal brethren can cough over the hard place, leave it out altogether, or read out regenerate, plump and with true priestly emphasis. Manger the deposition, Mr. Cheney is just as good a preacher as ever, and possessed of a celebrity which, we hope, he will turn to good account in calling sinners to repentance, and in fighting against prelacy and all the ecclesiastical trumpery connected with it. The Interior gives an account of the solemn farce, which would be more appropriate to Rome than Chicago:

The ax has fallen at last on the neck of Rev. Charles Edward Cheney. On Friday morning, June 2, in the Cathedral Church of SS. Peter and Paul, Bishop Whitehouse—notice having been served on the standing committee of the diocese, Mr. Cheney and the clergy of the city, requesting their presence—proceeded to pronounce the ecclesiastical sentence of deposition from the ministry in "the church of God."

Few were present beside those who had been officially cited to appear, Mr. Cheney not being of the number. The morning prayer was read, after which the diocesan, in full robes, and surrounded by the clergy in full canonicals, addressed the small assembly in a regretful strain. He said that for the first time in his episcopate he was compelled, by his position, to pronounce upon a presbyter a sentence of deposition. He had hoped that this duty was one which he could avoid, and had waited four weeks in the hope that something would occur to relieve him of the painful necessity of pronouncing sentence. Nothing of the kind had occurred, and he saw no hope for the future. Under these circumstances he saw no alternative but to pronounce sentence according to the finding of the Ecclesiastical Court. He then produced the sentence, written on parchment, to which was affixed his corporate seal. The sentence contained the verdict of the court, and deposed Mr. Cheney from the office of presbyter of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The sentence having been read, the clergy present, acting in the capacity of witnesses, appended their signatures, it being provided that the sentence should be witnessed by not less than three presbyters.

SINGING MINISTERS.

What the editor of the Raleigh Christian Advocate says on this subject is true and well timed. We wish everybody could sing. We have painfully felt the want of this gift. More than a few times have we gone through a service without a song, the people depending upon the preacher to raise the tunes, and the preacher utterly helpless to relieve the embarrassment. Our theological schools should teach singing as a part, and an important part, of pastoral theology. Let the young ministers learn to sing, by all means, "while the evil days come not." Ordinarily a singing preacher is worth twice as much as one who does not know the difference between Old Hundred and Coronation.

Ability to sing well is not only an accomplishment for social life, and a source of great personal enjoyment, but also a wonderful instrument—ability for usefulness. The power of religious song, in connection with religious services, is inestimable. To a Christian minister this qualification is scarcely second to any that he can possess. With it he can seal his exhortation on sermons indelibly upon the hearts of the people; with it he can breathe life and power into the dull and sleepy prayer meeting; with it he can subdue the heart of the sinner, lead the penitent to faith in the Savior, and inspire the Christian with the joys of heaven. Many times has song determined the victory on the side of the right. Well selected hymns with tunes wisely adapted, and practiced until they can be sung with expression, seldom fail to do execution.

Many of our most vivid and lasting religious impressions, and pleasing religious associations, are connected with sacred song. An old familiar song, as it echoes through the soul, will startle from their slumbers a thousand precious recollections of former days, companions and joys. We doubt whether any be so poor as not to possess such treasures of memory.

We have known several ministers of the gospel, popular and useful, whose principal dependence has been their ability to sing. They have an appropriate hymn to sing at the close of the sermon, or sometimes will introduce it in the middle of the sermon, with great effect. But without these eccentricities a minister who can sing well doubles his power to do good. We advise our young ministers to cultivate music, not for ornament merely, but as a power of usefulness—as a refining and elevating study. Luther placed it next to theology. Especially is this important at the present day, where the tendency is so strong to make our sanctuary service of song a mere scientific performance. Choirs properly trained are good in their place, but it is well for ministers to be independent of choirs and of scientific performers.

ADDRESS OF THE BISHOPS ON OUR MISSION WORK.

To the Ministers and Members of the M. E. Church South — Dear Brethren: The work in the mission fields of our church, at the present time, calls for a special address from us in behalf of the Board of Missions. At its recent session in Nashville it became apparent that the resources of the missionary treasury were not adequate to satisfy but a small part of the demands which press upon it; yet on every side our missions call for enlargement. In the vast West, between Kansas and California, now included in the Western Conference; on the Pacific, from Los Angeles to Oregon; among the tribes of the Indian Territory; the Germans of the Southwest; and in the open Empire of China, our missionaries are laboring with marked success; and we are only restrained from following up the constantly increasing opportunities presented them for occupying new points, by the lack of the money necessary to support men.

During the past year our Indian work has been prosecuted with the most cheering results; more than twelve hundred converts were received into membership—an increase of thirty-three per cent. Our missions in China have been blessed with a number of clearly-defined conversions, and an increasing work of grace at the several appointments. The grandeur and promise of a field that gives access to a people and tongue that include six-tenths of the whole human family, cannot be overstated. The board has enlarged the appropriations for the support of this mission for the coming year.

The old debt will have been fully provided for by the time of the meeting of the Annual Conferences. This releases the energies of our church, and prepares it for assuming at once a more active and enlightened discharge of the weighty obligation to send to "all nations" the gospel of the Son of God. The spiritual soundness and vigor of a Christian people must depend upon the swiftness and constancy of their purpose to follow closely upon the most advanced presence of the Holy Spirit, and to obey fully his earliest motions. And we call upon the ministers of our church to enforce, both in public and private, this duty, which has been laid upon us equally by the Savior of men and by the spirit of grace. For by so much as we believe ourselves to be the true witnesses of the power and life of Christ, are we impelled to send the gospel to all who have been bought by his blood. We believe that our people, and especially our children, greatly need indoctrinating into these first principles of our holy Christianity. Let us bestir ourselves, beloved brethren, that no man take our crown.

The board has not hesitated in the line of its duty, but relying upon the Spirit of God and your co-operation, has appropriated the sum of $40,000 for the foreign field, and those missions which are outside of the domestic work. It confidently expects a revival of zeal and an awakening in the congregations, in the Conferences and in the Sunday schools, in behalf of this cause, that shall pour into the treasury, from a thousand rills, during the present year, the sum of $130,000. This expectation is not an extravagant one, for our people are abundantly able to meet it. We look, therefore, to all our presiding elders, preachers in charge and other officers of the church, to so bring to the notice of each member the pressing need of the Board of Missions as will secure from him a liberal support. "God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work."

The following extract from the action of the Board of Missions will present accurately the list of its appropriations for the coming year:

"The appropriations for the ensuing year, beginning with the meetings of the Conferences, are as follows:

For China Mission	$1
For the Indian Mission Conference	1
For the German work in the city of Baltimore and vicinity, supplementary to what had already been appropriated by Annual Conference Boards
For the German work in Louisiana
For the German work in Texas
For missions in the Los Angeles Conference
For missions in the Columbia Conference
For missions in the Western Conference
For missions in West Va. Conference
For missions in Holston Conference
To aid in publishing a German hymn book
Total

"To this must be added the current expenses, embracing salary, traveling expenses of the secretary and printing reports, etc., which will swell the amount to at least $1[illegible]. It will be remembered that this is to be added to what is to be appropriated to domestic missions by the various Annual Conference Boards, which will swell the amount to about $130,000."

We remain, dear brethren, your fellow-laborers and servants in the kingdom of God,

Robert Paine.
G. F. Pierce.
John Early.
H. H. Kavanaugh.
D. S. Doggett.
W. M. Wightman.
E. M. Marvin.

J. C. Keener.

We have received the following note from Rev. W. P. Barton, of the North Mississippi Conference. [illegible] bereaved ones have our hearty sympathy. The obituaries will appear soon. Bro. Barton writes from Black Hawk, Mississippi, June [illegible]:

Dear Bro. Parker: You see by the inclosed that death has been busy in my district the past week. Bro. [illegible], some, in charge of the Lexington circuit, lost his wife (of which I send you an obituary;) same week Bro. K. A. Jones, in charge of Black Hawk circuit, lost a dear, sweet little girl three years old, whose obituary I also inclose.

The work in my district is generally in an encouraging condition.

Mrs. Eleanor Davies Curry. This estimable Christian lady died at Hazlehurst, Mississippi, on the eighteenth of May. She was the widow of Rev. William M. Curry, and had a wide circle of appreciative friends, both in and out of the church to which she belonged. An obituary will appear next week.

The Flood, which has covered a portion of the back part of the city for more than ten days, is slowly receding. Pumps and drainage machines are at work, and it is thought that in a few days the overflow will be entirely abated.

We may remark that the extent of the overflow is scarcely equal to one-tenth of the entire area of the city. The Picayune of June 14 says:

Notwithstanding the severe storm which prevailed yesterday evening and last night, the water in the overflowed districts is falling gradually. Indeed, each hour shows a marked diminution in the volume of water, and the public are beginning to congratulate themselves on its speedy disappearance. It will be seen from the figures in a previous issue that one hundred and ninety-eight million of gallons were displaced every day. Although the boundaries of the flood are [illegible] this exercises a noticeable difference in its appearance. To-day quite as much, if not more, will be taken away, and by Thursday the inundated district will be free from water.

Death of Rev. Humphrey Bill. We have received a letter from A. Wiles, announcing the death of this venerable member of our Conference.

He was one of our oldest ministers, and stood with Bishop Early, Rev. Joseph Carson and Rev. M. Dance, now our three oldest preachers.

For some years he has been on the superannuated list, but so far as his strength would permit labored faithfully in the vineyard among his kindred and descendants in the Methews. He preached with much zeal in the days of his vigor on many of our circuits, and by his warm heart, genial manners and faithful ministrations won a host of friends.

His end was not only peaceful but triumphant.

"Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

WHY DID HE NOT DIE, OR THE CHILD FROM THE EBRAERGANG. After the German of Ad. Von Volckhausen. By Mrs. A. L. Wister. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1871.

The above is a duodecimo of three hundred and seventy-two pages. We know nothing of its merits. For sale by Eyrich, Canal street, New Orleans.

The author is an optimist, and little better than an infidel. He gives coarse misrepresentations of orthodoxy, and distorts and perverts the accepted evangelical doctrines. If this book be liberal Christianity, may the world be delivered from it! For sale by Eyrich, Canal street, New Orleans.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER'S CLASS BOOK, published at the Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, is well adapted to the purpose. All of our schools should be supplied with it. Muslin backs, $1.50 per dozen; paper backs, seventy-five cents. Order from Nashville, or from 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

THE PULPIT AND THE PEW is a new monthly magazine "for the study and the pastorate," published by E. Goodenough & Co., New York. Edited by Rev. R. Harcourt. A brilliant array of contributors is announced. The first number promises well for the future.

GOOD WORDS FOR THE YOUNG is in some respects the most valuable of all the magazines devoted to the young. The June number is elegantly illustrated, and more than usually entertaining. Published by Lippincott, Philadelphia.

HEARTH AND HOME, of June 10, is an unusually fine number. The illustrations especially are better than ever. Peace and War is a most expressive and well designed picture. The Bird's Nest in the Mouth of a Cannon is excellent.

THE UNIVERSITY MONTHLY, published by the University Publishing Company, New York, is a good periodical, and of special value to teachers and educators. We have received the May number.

GOOD WORDS this month has a fine table of contents. Among other articles of value we notice: Thoughts on the Temptation of our Lord; The Coolie; On the Overmuch in Words; A Semi-Dutch Town.

THE HOUSEHOLD for May reaches us long after the time it is due. It is a domestic journal of great merit, and very cheap, being only $1 per annum. Published at Brattleboro, Vermont.

TRACTS FOR "OUR DEFENSE."

The editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate (Chicago) has been down to Atlanta, Georgia, to strengthen what remains of Northern Methodism in the "conquered" territory. He says:

"It is not possible entirely to suspend controversy. It will arise. But let our Tract Society give us a series of tracts suitable for our defense. One of them might explain the great secession that followed the action of the General Conference of 1844. Another might treat of "Church Stealing." Another might be on fraternization, and dispose of the Pierce embassy, and so on; and they could be distributed as occasion requires."

Really, something has to be done; and we would like to see those "tracts." The one on "Church Stealing" would be specially interesting—a novel contribution to religious literature. It will require several—yea, a series—"suitable for our defense." Can the cases at Athens, Knoxville, Jonesboro and Greenville, Tennessee, and at Moorefield, Virginia, and at other points that might be mentioned, be defended? Let us see the defense.

The suggestion on the other two points comes too late. Redford's History of the Organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church South is out and going. It contains an array of documents which cannot be gainsaid; of facts which no series of tracts can overcome. The miserable cant of "secession" is therein disposed of. In the light of that well-authenticated volume, the cheek of falsehood must blush when its traducing tongue employs the word against the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The "Pierce embassy," too, is set forth in that history so clearly, so justly, so fully, so correctly, that if our Northern friends have had trouble heretofore in reconciling their people to their status on "fraternization," they will have more trouble hereafter. It will take "a series of tracts" on that subject alone to make up their defense. We are willing to abide by the record, and are glad that it is in a shape to go forth. Northern Methodists, in the South or elsewhere, are welcome to all the "tracts" they can "distribute" on the questions at issue, if Redford's History of the Organization can be circulated along with them. Let our preachers and people read and circulate the book.

GENERAL MINUTES FOR 1870.

We take the following from the Nashville Christian Advocate:—After many vexatious delays and difficulties in procuring the Minutes of the Annual Conferences, we have at length stereotyped this work for 1870. Some of the Conferences have excellent secretaries, and some have not. We have begged the Conferences to be more careful when they elect these officers, and that the Bishops will see that full answers to all the disciplinary questions are forwarded to the editor without delay. The connection has cause for gratitude in a net increase of 15,177 ministers and members—after deducting a decrease of 6,423 colored members, who, it is presumed, are for the most part reckoned in the Colored Conferences, which the Bishops have organized according to the provisions of the General Conference. Besides the collections for missions reported in the Minutes of the Annual Conferences, some contributions were remitted to the treasurer of the Board of Missions, which are not reported in the Minutes, but will be found in the annual report of the treasurer. At the last session of the Saint Louis Conference that Conference was divided, so that there are now thirty-five Annual Conferences in the connection. The following is the

[The transferred preachers are reckoned with those of the Conferences to which they now belong. The ten Bishops are not counted; their addition would make the number of traveling preachers, including those on the superannuated list, 2,922. The preachers who located this year (71) are not counted; on the other hand, the preachers who were admitted on trial (207.) and those who were readmitted (48.) are counted among the traveling preachers, though many of them are also reckoned with the local preachers. There are some members in China who are not counted, not being officially reported. There are defects in the Minutes of some of the Conferences, which the editor vainly endeavored to supply. The returns of baptisms are specially imperfect. The preachers and members of the separate colored connection, which the Bishops have organized, are not counted here, as they have their own Minutes.]

THE St. Louis Christian Advocate, of May 31, says: "Bishop Miles, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, has been sojourning in this city during two weeks past. He has preached frequently to large assemblies of colored people, and held meetings to explain to them the history and organization of the church he represents. We have it on reliable report that he has impressed most favorably our colored population. He has formed a society here of about one hundred members, and appointed Rev. Mr. Thomas to the charge of it. The Bishop is much gratified with the prospects for the establishment of his church in our State, and will repeat his visits to Missouri. He left on Tuesday to attend a call for the organization of a Colored Conference for Virginia and North Carolina, to be held on June 16. The Bishop is a valuable and faithful officer of the church, and we bid him Godspeed, and hope he may at an early day traverse our State in the interests of his church organization.

Obituaries.

Died, in Algiers, Louisiana, at nine o'clock A. M., June 7, 1871, ALICE LILLY, aged ten months and twenty-eight days.

Miss MARY FONVILLE was born in Lonisville, Winston county, Mississippi, October 30, 1831, and died near Lexington, Holmes county, Mississippi, March 19, 1871.

In 1858 she professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which communion she remained until the Lord called her hence. She displayed an energy of character seldom equaled in caring and providing for her afflicted and widowed mother and orphaned sisters and brother. Up to the time she was taken ill her life was devoted to these cares. When she first realized that she had consumption she complained at the hardness of her lot, but after a time became reconciled to the will of her heavenly Father, and looked steadily to a glorious inheritance. She died in peace, exhorting the friends and loved ones around her to meet her in heaven. J. D. N.

CHRISTIAN JOHNSON, born in the kingdom of Sweden and Norway in 1808, died in this city May 22, 1871, aged sixty-three years, two months and twelve days.

The deceased had been a resident here about twenty-five years, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South some twenty years, as near as I can learn. He was at one time, for five or six years, sexton of the Felicity Street church, and for several years past has been sexton of the Cadiz Street church, of which he was a member at the time of his death.

Having been his pastor for something over two years, my conclusion in regard to Bro. Johnson is that at any time, almost, during this period, he could with the Psalmist have said truly, and with an emphasis: "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." Our brother, by his life and conversation, showed that he knew what it was to be a Christian experimentally; while it was to be seen from the scriptural allusions and quotations frequently made, both in his prayers and when speaking upon the subject of religion, that he had been a thoughtful and prayerful reader of the word of God. His health gradually gave way during the last two years of his life; and though he went about his work usually—being confined to his house and bed only now and then—he was a great sufferer, at times, from the disease that finally carried him off. But through grace he was enabled to exercise much patience in affliction, and amidst all to exhibit a good degree of cheerfulness and Christian fortitude. Peace to thy soul, and rest to thy oft-wearied body, old man. A companion is left to journey on alone. May grace, too, be her stay and support, and at the last may her death be peaceful as was his. P. M. GOODWYN.

NEW ORLEANS, May 31, 1871.

PARILEE D. HALL was born April 15, 1828, in Hinds county, Mississippi. She was the oldest daughter of David C. and Lucinda Hall, who brought up an intelligent family of children, all of whom became members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and all but one of whom have gone to join the church in heaven.

Sister Hull was married to A. B. Magee, April 27, 1847; professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1849; and left this world of sin and sorrow on Friday, March 31, 1871. She leaves a husband, two children and many friends to mourn her loss. She was aged forty-two years, eleven months and fifteen days.

She continued faithful "unto death," and has now, we believe, "received the crown of life." In her were united decision and firmness without bigotry or stubbornness, humility and sobriety without melancholy, cheerfulness without levity. In her religious principles she was steadfast and immovable, and yet liberal to those who differed with her in opinion. She filled all the relations of life, as daughter, sister, wife, mother and neighbor, faithfully. All the graces that adorn the Christian character were exemplified in her life. We leave the full developing of her character to the great day of judgment. Her house was a home for the ministers of the gospel.

Her little son had typhoid fever; she attended him day and night. When he began to mend she was taken sick. So violent was the attack that she conversed but little. What she said gave evidence that she was prepared to die. The writer preached her funeral sermon from the following text: "Them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." We deeply sympathize with her husband and family.

ARGYLE BITTERS STILL AHEAD!

They cure Dyspepsia, Flatulence, Colic, Biliousness, Torpidity of the Liver, Nervous Disorders, Hypertrophy of the Spleen, Habitual Constipation, Intermittent Fever, Menstrual Suppression, Imbecility in the Aged, and Weakness in Children. They cure Inebriety, and remove the ungovernable thirst for strong drink that torments the poor, heart-broken drunkard. They will promote digestion, and eminently assist in the assimilation of food. They correct disorders of the liver, and cure headache and bad spirits. They invigorate the weak and cheer the down-hearted.

There are other preparations in the market known as bitters, but which are destitute of the elements that render the Argyle a monument of success as a gentle Stimulant, a safe Tonic, and a sure Alterative, for family use.

"Take more Argyle and less whisky," said an eminent temperance man, "and the vice of drunkenness would disappear from our midst." This is worth remembering, and its immense popularity and sale show that these words were fully spoken.

Buy the Argyle always for a safe fatally medicine for summer use, to prevent Chills, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia and Nervous Debility. Jes 1m

Of a far Higher Class than any other proprietary medicine of the day stands Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient. And for this reason: It is an exact counterpart of one of the most valuable natural medicines in the world. We refer to the great Seltzer Spring of Germany, to which thousands of the dyspeptic, the bilious, the rheumatic and the victims of venal diseases resort annually, and return to their homes convalescent or cured. NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

THE TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION of this school will begin on the FIRST MONDAY IN AUGUST, 1871. The entire expense for board and tuition, for forty weeks, will be $150. The board is of the best description that the country affords, being furnished by the steward from his own farm and prepared by the hands of his own family. We had boys from five different States last year, and not a word of complaint was ever made on this point, which is often the subject of just complaint at boarding schools. The fare is peculiarly grateful to Southern boys, who require a more generous diet when they change their climate.

The manner of governing the school is paternal, as the entire exemption from temptations in the surrounding country renders the discipline easy. The institution is under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but under my own control. The young men attending the school last year were, without exception, moral and religious. Young men preparing for the ministry may receive tuition free, and in certain cases can obtain lower rates of board. Regular services are held in the College Chapel.

The location of the school is near Madisonville, Monroe county, East Tennessee, in the midst of a fruitful and beautiful country, and surrounded by a thrifty and intelligent population. No negroes live in the neighborhood, all the laborers in the fields and servants in the families being white. The citizens of Monroe county were true to the South in her late struggle, and have adhered to Southern churches.

Students arriving by the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad will get off at Sweetwater, forty miles south of Knoxville, whence they will find conveyance to the College, seven miles distant.

Our post office is Madisonville, Tennessee.

F. M. GRACE, President.

P. S. 1. Families from the South will find good board in the neighborhood, and a delightful summer retreat at White Cliff Springs, sixteen miles distant from Madisonville. For information on this point parties may address R. A. McKenzie, steward of the college. The health of the country is proverbial.

P. S. 2. Younger boys may be safely sent to this school, as all are under the immediate oversight of the principal, both when in school and when at the boarding house. Je8 3m

The Child's Corner.

BED TIME.

BY EDNA CHUCKR DAVIS.

Come, Daisy, the clock's striking eight;
'Tis your bed-time, my darling, you know;
Put dolly away for the night,
And kiss dear papa ere you go.

The chickens are all fast asleep,
Safe under their mother's warm wings;
You hear not a sound nor a peep
From the queer, little, soft, fluffy things.

Hark! the birdies are chirping good-night—
How sweet—from their nests in the trees;
The lilies are hanging their heads,
And are rocked by the murmuring breeze.

Now kneel down, my darling, and pray—
Thank "Our Father" for all His kind care;
He keeps you by night and by day,
With the flowers and the birds of the air.

Ask HIM to watch o'er you to-night,
To shield you from sickness and harm,
To bless the dear friends whom you love,
And guard with His sheltering arm.

Independent.

Lead Umber Nickel Ivory Tin

Now you may string these together, in the order in which they occur here, and wear them as a charm against sin. I will tell you what I mean: The first letter of each in order stands for that portion of our blessed Lord's Prayer which you cannot repeat too often or too meaningly:

LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION.

A better rosary, I opine, could not be found in Christendom.

Here is a famous firm, that do a thriving business; that have thousands of drummers, of pleasing address, to prevail on people to patronize them. This is the sign of the company:

RUMANDTOBAC CO.

Can you read the riddle? The brains of this mammoth establishment are constantly employed in leading folks into temptation, knowing that when once infected with the appetite, their custom will be chronic. King Alcohol is the head manager. He has a strong, fiery temper, but he knows how to keep it subdued; and, indeed, he governs nearly half the world by softening himself down to a bewitching tenderness, and making poor, deluded mortals believe he soothes them when he seduces, and invigorates when he ensnares. And so, step by step, he draws thousands on to a drunkard's grave.

He breathes into the juice of the apple. The liquid trembles at his power, and changes into fermented cider. He breathes into the juice of the grape, and it becomes wine. He breathes into ale, porter and beer, and they all catch his seductive spell. These mild exhilarants are his emissaries, his drummers. The unfortunate victim tastes of reviving royalty in the cider or beer, and longing for a nearer acquaintance with his majesty, ventures to taste something stronger and stronger, and so he goes on to his ruin.

Simpleton Grundy
Sipped cider on Monday,
Drank beer on Tuesday,
Wine on Wednesday,
Rum on Thursday,
Whisky on Friday,
Brandy on Saturday;
He died on Sunday;
And this is the end
Of Simpleton Grundy.

From the record of one simpleton, know the fate of all. Remember these two things: that

1. The Bible nowhere associates God's blessing with strong drink. And that

2. Alcoholic liquors do not give a particle of sustenance to the system. Nature never designed their use. They are no more found in creation than pistols and powder, bullets and bowie-knives.

As to the other partner in the above mentioned firm, it is none less than the whose business is to stupefy and kill out the vitality of the human system by repeated assaults on the nerves. To this end he cooks tobacco leaf in molasses and laudanum, and presses it into tootheome cakes to chew; or he grinds it into dust, scents it with fragrant bergamot, and makes old ladies think, when they snuff it up, that they are inhaling the aroma of some rare Oriental flower; or he winds it into porous roulcaus, and gives them to young men to smoke. Do you know the proper definition of a cigar?

Now let me tell you plainly, young folks, why your loving friends warn you against having anything to do with spirituous liquors and tobacco, in whatever form. It is not because one cigar or one glass of Madeira will kill you, for it will not, but because by tasting of these dangerous things you are very likely to form the habit of using them more and more. If a friend ever asks you to drink, decline. This is the way old Dr. Bubblesmile did when at an alumni dinner. A classmate pressing him to take some sherry, he said, "Je vous remercie," which is the French for "No, I thank you." "But here is some hock, doctor; you can't decline that," said another. "O, yes," replied Bubblesmile, "I learned to decline that when a boy:

"'Hic, hæc, hoc,
Hujus, hujus, hujus.'"

The only safe motto, children, in regard to every form of alcoholic drink, is this, which I write in a form to allow the printer to economize his type:

Touch
Taste
Handle } NOT.

Zion's Herald.

THANK YOU, JESUS.

On a sick-bed, with no prospect of recovery, lay a little boy of ten years, whose mother knew nothing of the saving grace of Christ Jesus. A friend near by felt very sad that the poor little sufferer should die without any one to instruct him in the way of salvation, so she went for a devotedly pious young lady who loved to go on errands of mercy.

After Miss B. had inquired into his state of health, she asked about his hope for eternity. George answered that he had obeyed his parents, and had always said his prayers.

"That is right; but is that your only hope for eternal life? You at times remember things you've done wrong; and nothing can enter heaven that defileth. Did not Jesus come into the world to save sinners?"

The boy became interested, and said: "I want to know how I'm to be saved; please teach me."

Coming quite close to the dear boy, taking his burning hand in hers, she said: "George, shall I tell you a story?" His eye brightened.

"Suppose in a school room a little boy had blotted his book with ink, and the schoolmaster was about to whip him for it, and a big boy should step forward and say, 'Teacher, I'll take the whipping instead of the little boy,' what would you think if the little boy never said, 'Thank you!'

"George, there was One who prayed in a garden in great agony; drops of blood fell on the ground. After his prayer wicked men came with swords, lanterns and torches. They led him away, beat him with stripes, took away his clothes, crowned him with thorns, and nailed him to the cross. There he died in agonies and blood. All this he did for you. Did you ever thank Jesus?"

Weeping, the boy said: "I've never thanked him, but I will thank him! I understand it now. I did not understand it before." And his thin face lighted up with animation.

"Won't you now say, 'Thank you, Jesus?'"

"He bowed his head, and twice repeated in a low but firm voice: "Thank you, Jesus! Thank you, Jesus!" She prayed with him.

Calling shortly after this interview, the mother said to this messenger of mercy: "He has been talking to his father all about it since you were gone. He said: 'I did not understand how to be saved, but now I do understand.'"

Miss B. asked him: "Do you think you would like to go and live with Jesus soon?"

"Not just yet! I would like to do some good first, and read the Scriptures to others." He lay awake most of the next night, and was frequently heard saying: "Thank you, Jesus, for suffering and dying for me!"

THE CROSS OF CHRIST.—The cross of Christ is the sweetest burden that ever I bore; it is such a burden as wings are to a bird, or as sails to a ship, to carry me forward to my desired heaven. Those who, by faith, see the invisible God and the fair city, make no account of present losses and crosses. Truly, it is a glorious thing to follow the Lamb; it is the highway to glory; but when you see him in his own country at home, you will think you never saw him before. More than Christ I can neither wish nor pray, nor desire for you. I am sure that the saints are at best but strangers to the weight and worth of the incomparable excellence of Christ. We know not half of what we love when we love him. That Christ and the sinner should be one, and should share heaven between them, is the wonder of salvation. What more could love do?—Rutherford's Letters.

NO WORDS can describe the wonderful and continually enlarging blessings in Christ which have been poured into the souls of many of the children of God, through the simple, unreasoning faith which prays confidently and with ever-unceasing trust.

Examination of Horses for Purchase.

With a respectable dealer, after using your eyes and discretion, you had better depend on the warranty, and his character, than by any unnecessary display of suspicion offensively question his honesty. Nevertheless, as the trade is taken up by needy gentlemen of good standing in society, and broken down black-legs of respectable connections, who are ever ready to give a warranty not worth a dump, or satisfaction, if you are dissatisfied thereat; if you have reasons to suspect the horse or his master, the directions here laid down will be found useful. Always bear in mind that the observation of one symptom should induce the examiner to follow up the inquiry into those other symptoms which are characteristic of the suspected disease, defect or unsoundness.

The best time to view a horse is early in the morning, in the stables, as then, if there is any stiffness in the joints or tendency to swelled legs, it will be most apparent.

The horse should always be examined from a state of rest. If there are any symptoms of his having been previously exercised, such as sweat about his withers, or his legs have been recently washed, it is advisable he should be left in his stall till cool; for there is more than one species of lameness, which becomes less apparent after exercise, and where there is a tendency to swelled legs a smart trot and grooming will fine his legs, and render them clean.

This precautionary measure is more especially to be taken when you suspect your man; for in horse-buying we have to deal with gentry who are acquainted with the science of imposition in all its ramifications. A stable examination is the best for observing indications of wind-sucking, crib-biting, chronic cough, the state of the respiration, and for discovering vice.

For this purpose always have a horse shown quietly; when there is much noise and bustle there is generally something wrong; and when the animal is agitated slight lameness will escape the eye.

The first thing to be observed is, that when standing evenly, the weight is thrown equally on both feet. If there be any complaint in the fore-feet one will probably be "pointed"—that is, extended before the other—or he will frequently alter the position of them, taking one up and setting the other down; or the hind legs will be brought under the body to relieve the fore feet of some portion of the weight. Any of these symptoms will direct your attention to the feet when you see him out.

To judge of his respiration it is necessary to be acquainted with the indications of health. Observe if the flank alternately rises and falls with regularity. In health the respiration of the horse is from four to eight per minute; average, six in the day time; during sleep it is seldom more than four. If quicker than ordinary it betokens present fever; other symptoms will be developed, such as increased pulse, heat of mouth and dullness, while the delicate pink appearance, which the membrane covering the partition of the nostrils assumes in health, will be increased in color.

But if none of these symptoms of ill-health are present, and yet the horse heaves at the flank more than ordinary, if the weather be moderate, and the stable not oppressively hot, it is probable such a horse is thick-winded.

When inspiration appears to be performed readily and quickly as in health, by a single action, but expiration with difficulty, by an irregular and prolonged movement, or double action, the respiratory muscles appearing as if interrupted in the act of expelling the air, and then the flank drops suddenly, it is a symptom of broken wind. His cough should then be tried. The cough of a broken-winded horse is a peculiar low hollow grunt, difficult to describe, but when once heard is easily recognized.—American Stock Journal.

THE TURNIP CROP is no small affair to the progressive farmer, and we begin now in June to prepare our people to think, to examine, and to be prepared for action. The turnip crop was to England a savior; it has done much, very much, for the North, and why not assist us at the South? We advise, determine how many can be used by cattle, sheep and hogs, and then make a calculation at three hundred bushels per acre; select the acres, and prepare for a thousand bushel crop. Whenever a lull in the farm work, better take a day or two and spread on the acres, say twenty to forty good loads of manure per acre, turn it under with a two-horse plow, subsoil to follow as deep as possible, and harrow well. All practical farmers know the absorbing and retaining moisture, and the gases from the atmosphere are in proportion to the thoroughness in which the soil is pulverized. Take time to do this thoroughly, then use bone meal, superphosphate and guano freely, sown on the land and harrowed well; if the plowing is done in June, then in two or three weeks sow the fertilizers and harrow thoroughly, or use a cultivator, so as to mix and cover an inch or two. The Swedes (ruta baga) should be sown in latitude thirty-two to thirty-three degrees, say fifth to the tenth of August; strap-leaved, etc., about the fifteenth. Be ready, and have land in ridges, say twenty-eight inches apart, and drill on the ridge not less than two pounds per acre; thin out to twelve inches; thin out when in the rough leaf. A thick stand insures to a great extent freedom from the turnip flea, and grows faster. Good, rich land, stirred often, and a turnip one foot by twenty-eight inches, should grow eight to ten hundred bushels. We have fed hogs, when housed for fattening, the yellow ruta baga and the green top ruta baga, as we have fed our Billy horse, our cows and sheep. Really we prefer them for the table. We saw, in 1869, fine Swede, and first-rate for soups; also cooked otherwise, when sown late in October, in 1868. We learn from English and Northern practice that turnips and straw are used to feed cattle and sheep, and no question but that with a light feed of cotton seed meal we can grow beef and mutton cheap with the turnips and straw. More oats are sown for 1871 than in all probability ever has been, and we urge turnip culture to economize the straw and increase the manure bank—an item not to be overlooked.—Southern Farmer.

SLOW CHURNING BEST.—The Scottish Farmer, in opposing rapid churning, says: "We have of late been accustomed to the advertisement of churns, the great merit of which is stated to be that they produce the butter in a very short time. This quickness is very deceive; it conveys the idea that something is gained; but the point is not, is time gained? but is the butter in the condition in which it should be? To do work quickly is not always to do it well; on the contrary, we are inclined to say that, as a rule, good work almost always includes the outlay of patient labor. But this notion of quick churning as the right thing to aim at proceeds from an ignorance of what the points involved in butter-making really are. Quickly made butter may be good enough if it is to be used at once, but it will not keep well. The reason is simply this—that the buttery particles of the milk are encased with thin pellicles of casein or the cheesy particles of the milk; if these are allowed in too great a proportion, the butter has that cheesy flavor we all so much dislike, and this will be the case if the churning is done so quickly as to fail to break up or separate the casein pellicles from the oily or buttery particles; this perfect separation can only be effected by slow churning. Of course there is a medium; but we should be inclined to place the minimum time in which the churning operation is to be kept up at thirty minutes; between this and forty-five or sixty minutes, if the butter 'comes,' then the quality, other things being equal, will be good."

PULLING FODDER BAD ECONOMY.—We discarded fodder pulling for years before the war. It is a slow and costly matter. We say it has been proven that the corn, from a row from which no blades are removed, is worth the corn and the cured blades. We say crab grass, when cut in full bloom—no later, and well cured, not permitted to cure in hot sun, but cured in cocks—from an acre, is worth the fodder from three to five acres of similar land, both good stands; yea, verily, good crab grass hay may fatten stock—fodder never did, nor never can. Why not grow Hungarian grass (this is the old Egyptian millet,) or millet grass, which requires yearly sowing? After all danger of frost, cut when in bloom. Lucerne drilled, rich land and kept clean first year, will give three to five cuttings each year, and will last twenty years. Herds (red top,) timothy, clover, full meadow oats, orchard,—all will make hay that will nourish. Say a mower can cut ten acres a day, and only two tons, how many hands, weather to risk, to save equal value in fodder? Cipher it up. Let the corn blades stay. Save crab grass and pea vines.—Southern Farmer.

SOUTHERN TEA CULTURE.—General Capron, commissioner of agriculture, reports that tea culture is fast becoming a feature of importance in the Southern and Southwestern States, and that in a few years enough tea will be grown in those sections to meet the home consumption. Over forty thousand tea plants have been distributed by the department, nearly all of which flourished, and now the seed from plants raised in South Carolina are being sent out.

The Earth Large Enough for Heaven.

Many persons believe that the earth is to be fitted up for the future home of the saints, while others, just as sincere, believe to the contrary. Among the arguments opposed to the theory of the earth being the place of "many mansions," is that it is too small to contain even those who have gained that "goodly country." This latter opinion is certainly wide of the mark.

We make the statement that all the inhabitants of the earth, from the creation till the present, could stand on the State of Illinois, giving one square yard to each one. This may seem impossible to many; but let us try the figures:

The population of the world at present is about 1,000,000,000. Six thousand years ago there were but two—Adam and Eve. All the inhabitants of the earth are said to pass away in 33 years—that is, as many as the whole number. Divide 6,000 years by 33 years gives nearly 182 generations. Counting the whole number from the creation and the loss sustained by the deluge, 500,000,000 would be a very liberal calculation for each generation. Hence 500,000,000X182=91,000,000,000 inhabitants, including Adam and Eve, with all their posterity. The State of Illinois contains 55,409 square miles; there are 3,097,600 square yards in a square mile; therefore 55,409X3,097,600=171,634,918,400. We have a square yard for each one, and 171,634,918,400—91,000,000,000=80,634,918,400 for future generations, which, according to the above ratio of increase, would require 5,000 years yet to fill the State of Illinois.

In accordance with this calculation the whole earth would supply ample room for all the inhabitants of the earth for several hundred thousand years to come. I am fully satisfied that the earth is sufficiently large if the Father intends to make it the future home of the redeemed, without increase or solidifying the water—for we are taught by the word of God that many, because of unbelief, shall never see life.

God's "footstool" is not so small, after all; and when we take into consideration the stupendous fact that this earth, vast as it is, is so small that had Jupiter a mountain volcano as large in proportion to the size of that planet as Ætna is to the size of the earth, our earth could be dropped into the crater of such a volcano without touching either side, we stand in wonder and amazement before such a being as God!

There is not only Jupiter, but countless millions of planets, many larger still, and these do not define the measure of the Almighty's work. Reader, are you preparing to receive the approval of this awful God when time is no more?—T. D. Walker in Western Christian Advocate.

ONLY ONE CHILD.—It is harder to bring up one child well than six. In a large family the children help to bring one another up. It is not merely that the elder ones assist in taking care of the younger, but they all influence one another profitably in other ways; vanity is sometimes laughed into modesty, and arrogance is snubbed into humility. Each child is kept constantly in mind that others have rights and feelings and preferences as well as himself; he forms the habit of considering those rights, feelings and preferences; and he is thus prepared to "get along," as we say, with those among whom his lot may be cast. Parents with one child have a difficult task, and their best way is to get for their solitary chick as many play-fellows of its own age as they conveniently can. It is bad for a child to associate too much with persons of mature age.

CONTROL YOURSELF.—A good deacon, who was naturally a high-tempered man, had been used to beat his oxen over the head, as all his neighbors did. It was observed that when he became a Christian his cattle were remarkably docile. A friend inquired into the secret. "Why," said the deacon, "formerly, when my oxen were a little contrary I flew into a passion and beat them unmercifully. This made the matter worse. Now, when they do not behave well I go down behind the load, sit down, and sing 'Old Hundred.' I don't know how it is, but the psalm tune has a surprising effect upon my oxen."—Canadian Visitor.

THE question is not, "What ought I to do?" but "What am I doing?" If you are praying for your enemy, there is good reason to hope that your heart is right; if you restrain prayer for him, there is good reason to believe that your heart is not right. A right heart toward a foe is never found coupled with forgetfulness of him at the throne of grace.

BASE all your actions upon the principle of right. Preserve your integrity of character, and never reckon the cost.

GRACE and truth came by Jesus Christ.

Scientific.

THE dyspeptic world have been longing for some substance which will reinforce their digestive powers. Foremost among such agents are the artificial preparations called pepsin, pancreatin and maltin. Dr. Farr thinks that a mixture of lime-juice with the former of these substances is excellent for dyspepsia, as he has already used it with excellent results. "Lime-juice with either pepsin or pancreatin forms a very elegant preparation."

THE gum trees of Australia, belonging to the botanical genus Eucalyptus, have been acclimated with success in Algeria and the islands of the Mediterranean. From the former place walking-sticks are imported into England, and Nature states that the leaves of one kind have been made into cigars, which have been recommended as being very efficient in aiding digestion. The leaves have been used in the late war as lint. "Their balsamic nature not only cures, but after a few hours all unpleasant odor ceases." Could not these trees be grown in the drier portions of the West? When shall we have an acclimatization society in this country? Meanwhile Dr. Muller, of Victoria, is introducing European trees into Australia; and people there are longing for the time "when the cerks, oaks, hickories, red cedars and firs shall have in part replaced our Eucalypts mimosæ, and other far less useful trees."

A MONSTER STEAMSHIP.—The largest vessel ever built on the banks of the Mersey was recently launched. With the exception of the Great Eastern, no larger craft floats. The new ship is the screw steamer Egypt, built for the service of the National Steamship Company between Liverpool and New York. The Egypt's total length is 440 feet; on the load-line, 435 feet; beam, 44 feet; depth of hold, 36 feet; gross measurement, 5,150 tons. This enormous vessel will be propelled by engines of nominally 500 horse power, but capable of working up to 2,500 horse power. They are on the compound principle of high and low pressure, and will be supplied with steam from six boilers, arranged in two sets. The boilers will be fired at each end, and will carry a pressure of 75 pounds per square inch. The engines are expected, from the fine lines and great length of the vessel, to drive her at from twelve to thirteen knots an hour during her voyage in ordinary weather. The great length to which ships have reached since the general adoption of iron for building them has made the straight stem a necessity on account of turning very long vessels in dock, and the Egypt is an instance of the new fashion. She will be fitted for 190 first-class and 1,400 steerage passengers, for whose comfort and safety during the Atlantic voyage every provision will be made.

THE last part of the Journal of Biology contains the results of an elaborate series of experiments by Gustave Meyer on the effects of feeding dogs and man on bread alone, and bread mingled with meat and other articles of diet. He shows—what, indeed, has long been known—that to feed either animals or man on bread alone is a great waste of material, and that immense quantities must be given in order that the body should lose no flesh; whilst, on the other hand, the addition of some, even though a small quantity, of meat is economical. He demonstrates that the tissues of the body become more watery with insufficient food, which renders the whole organism less capable of resisting injurious influences. In his experiments on man he endeavored to ascertain which of the several kinds of bread in ordinary use (white bread, rye bread, black bread) was absorbed in greatest amount during its passage through the alimentary canal, and found that white wheaten bread occupies the first place, then leavened rye bread, then the bread (rye) prepared by the Horsford-Liebig process, and lastly the pumpernickel (North German black bread.) Nevertheless, the first is not so satisfying to the feeling of hunger as the three latter, and is more expensive in every point of view. He denies the great nutritious value often attributed to bran, since the nitrogenous compounds it contains are mingled with much non-assimilable matter; but admits that, if these could be extracted, and were then returned to the flour, the best results would be obtained, as the meat already contains abundance of salts.

THE vitality of the church could be continued, though the man of talent and learning should be removed, as the body may live when the arm or the leg is amputated; but that vitality could not continue if the saint of humble and retiring piety, and of fervent prayerfulness, were removed, any more than the body can live when there is no heart and no lungs.—Barnes.

IMITATION is the sincerest of flattery.—Colton.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has continued quiet since our last issue, with only a moderate business doing in most branches of the wholesale trade. The receipts of sugar and molasses have been limited, and meet a steady demand at steady prices. Flour has shown more firmness, but the movement in it has been mostly confined to a moderate local trade. Corn has been in fair supply, and ruled about 3c. more in favor of buyers. Provisions have been quiet but firm, and pork, in particular, has further advanced about 75c. per barrel.

We have nothing less discouraging to report from the country. Where replanting has not been necessary, the cotton crop is weak and sickly, and choked with weeds and grass, and the prospect quite as gloomy as last week. The exceptions to these unfavorable reports are scattering and few, like that of the hard-working negro farmer, Harmen Morrison, near Port Hudson, who deserves high credit for winning the honor of the first bloom, which is reported to have opened on the ninth instant.

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales	2,937
Lake		23
Mobile		658
Florida		16
Texas		848
Total		4,482

On Saturday, in accordance with the rally at New York, factors raised their pretensions ¼ to ⅛c., but the demand, nevertheless, was quite lively, and 2,300 bales changed hands, partly at previous rates, but mostly at an advance of ¼ to ⅜c., ordinary closing, as before, at 13½ to 14c., but good ordinary at 16 to 16⅛c., low middling at 17⅜ to 17⅝c., middling at 18¾c. and strict middling at 19¼c. On Monday buyers came forward with unabated spirit, and, although they were met by still higher pretensions on the part of factors, took 3,150 bales at a further advance of ¼ to ⅜c., ordinary closing at 13¾ to 15⅛c., good ordinary at 16¼ to 16½c., low middling (to which a wider range was given in consequence of the scarcity and extreme prices for strict) at 17⅛ to 18⅛c., middling at 19c., and strict middling at 19¼ to 19½c. On Tuesday the market opened with higher pretensions on the part of factors, and the sales during the morning were at a further advance of ¼ to ½c., but after the receipt of the New York telegrams quoting ⅛c. and subsequently ¼c. lower, prices were marked with less buoyancy, and the advance could not be stated at over ⅛c. The demand was fair and the sales embraced 3,150 bales. Clean white cottons, especially of even-running, continue to command disproportionately high figures compared with the ordinary run of average lists. Strict low middling, for example, was reported on Tuesday as high as 19c., which must be regarded as an extreme rate.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 8,900 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,371,876 bales, against 1,109,284 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,027,385 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 312,763 bales to Great Britain, 299,631 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 212,650 to France.

Ordinary	13¾ to 14½
Good ordinary	16½ to 17
Low middling	18 to 18½
Middling	19¼ to ..
Strict middling	19½ to 19¾

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical,

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, June 13.—The Pope's encyclical letter declares solemnly to the world that not only what are called safeguards, and what are devised by the Sub-Alpine government, but all titles, honors, immunities and privileges, whatever shape they take under the general name of safeguards or guarantees, can be of no avail whatever toward securing prompt and free use of the power divinely transmitted toward us, nor toward guarding the liberty necessary to the church. Such being the condition of affairs, as we have repeatedly declared and professed, that without the crime of breaking our solemn oath we can consent to no conciliation which in any manner would destroy or diminish the rights of God or of the apostolic see. So, now, as of our bounden duty, we declare we will never agree to nor accept, nor can we so agree to or accept, these cunningly wrought out safeguards or guarantees proposed by the Sub-Alpine government, whatever their device, or any others of whatsoever kind, or however ratified, which, under the form of securing a sacred power and liberty, shall have been offered to us in lieu of and in exchange of that civil principality with which the divine Providence willed that the holy apostolic see should be furnished and strengthened, which is ratified to us by legitimate and irrefragible titles, as well as by possession for more than eleven centuries. God grant to the rulers of this earth, whom it much imports, that such a pernicious example of usurpation as we endure may not take root and flourish to the destruction of all power and order.

New York, June 14.—The Polaris, the vessel selected by Captain Hall for his Arctic expedition, arrived from Washington this morning. She was hauled into the navy yard at Brooklyn, where she remains ready to start northward.

Those of the crew who accompanied former expeditions speak enthusiastically of the preparations made by Captain Hall, and hopefully of his discovery of the northwest passage to the open Polar sea. The Polaris will take in supplies and last to a point in Greenland, where she will await the coming of the storeship Supply with additional provisions. The reception to Captain Hall and officers, to be tendered by the American Geographical Society, will come off next week.

Washington, June 14.—Governor Lindsay, of Alabama, who is here under a summons from the Ku-Klux committee, utterly denounces the testimony of the Rev. A. S. Laken, whom he characterizes as a sneak and a liar, and a stirrer up of strife. The proof of the falsity of Laken's statement still lives in the locality in which he speaks. Governor Lindsay lives in the same locality. The Governor represents Alabama as thoroughly quiet and peaceful. Governor Lindsay will probably testify to-morrow. His health is feeble.

Minister Washburne, at Paris, has gone to visit home.

Rev. G. C. Chenoworth has been appointed disbursing agent of the Post Office Department.

The homeopathist removed by the former commissioner of pensions, has been restored by the present commissioner as medical examiner. A clerk in the auditor's office shot a negro magistrate in the groin. The quarrel grew out of a swindle in the sale of a second-hand stove.

San Francisco, June 14.—The Cotton Growers' Association report complete success in the San Joaquin valley. The crop is the largest ever seen on the continent.

Washington, June 15.—The South-claims commissioners will, shortly after the close of the present month, take a recess till fall. Their time till adjournment will be fully occupied by cases already assigned, and they are now upon applications of claimants and attorneys, allotting their time from adjournment to their report to Congress in December next.

The Kansas, from Tehuantepec, has arrived. Sixty of her crew go to the hospital with chills and fever. Her crew numbers one hundred.

It is understood that in the case of the Central railroad tax the appeal from the revenue commissioner to the Secretary of the Treasury was denied, because the road can appeal to the courts. The amount involved is over a million dollars.

The Department of Agriculture has received returns from nearly three hundred counties, representing the most productive districts of each of the cotton States, and showing the comparative average and the condition of the crop in the first week of June. A diminution in the area planted in cotton appears in every State except Florida.

The most careful analysis of the returns, with due regard in making averages to the extent of the cotton production in the respective counties, gives the following per centage of reduction in comparison with last year: Virginia, 30 per cent.; North Carolina, 14; South Carolina, 13; Georgia, 12; Alabama, 13; Mississippi, 15; Louisiana, 8; Texas, 14; Arkansas, 16; Tennessee, 12.

These State averages, reduced to a general average, the assumed acreage of the respective States being an element in the calculation, will place the reduction of the cotton of 1871, as compared with that of 1870, between 14 and 15 per cent., equivalent to nearly a million and a third of acres. This would leave between seven and a half and eight millions of acres as the present area in cotton.

The average yield has not in former years exceeded 150 pounds per acre; that for 1870 was more than 200 pounds. The condition of the growing plant is below an average in nearly every State. The spring has been unusually wet and cold, retarding the growth and causing many of the plants to turn yellow and die, and obstructing the cultivation to a large extent. Replanting has refilled the vacant spaces of imperfect stands. The weather has recently been more favorable, and it is not impossible that an average condition may be attained by the commencement of the picking season.

The condition of cotton in July, 1869, a year favored with an abundant yield, was only a little better than the showing for June of the present year, while the prospect is slightly unpromising, but there is nothing in it of a decisive character. The per centage below an average condition is respectively as follows in the respective States: North Carolina, 10 per cent.; South Carolina, 8; Georgia, 18; Alabama, 17; Mississippi, 16; Louisiana, 10; Texas, 7; Arkansas, 17; Tennessee, 10. In Florida the condition is 3 per cent. above an average.

An official estimate of the ultimate result so early in the season would be an absurdity. The influence of future rains, floods, frosts and insect enemies cannot be calculated in advance, but in view of the extremely favorable circumstances affecting the crop of last year, there cannot be expected in the present year, upon a reduced area, a crop exceeding 3,500,000 bales. An early frost, or the prevalence of insects, or a very unpropitious season, might reduce the yield to 3,000,000 bales, and a still further reduction is possible in the Union.

St. Louis, June 15.—Advices received at Fort Leavenworth, from the borders of Texas, state that a scouting party of troops south of Fort Bascomb captured a strong party, consisting of ten Mexicans and one Indian, with twenty loads of ammunition, arms, etc., which the troops destroyed the next day. The troops captured five hundred head of cattle, stolen from Texas and traded off to the Mexicans.

A letter from Leasburg, New Mexico, says: Gen. Gordon Granger, who recently assumed command of this military district, has determined to solve the Indian question within the limits of his jurisdiction with rifle and revolver, and, as evidence that he means business, he has ordered all his available force to report to General Thomas C. Loven at a point west of the Rio Grande, in Grant county, who will direct operations against the Apaches.

Philadelphia, June 16.—In the Moral Science Congress to-day the committee on constitution made a report defining the objects of the association, which are to define, promote and manifest the visibility and unity of the Catholic Church of Christ, which are held to be the sum of all particular evangelical denominations; to elevate, unify and strengthen the conscience of its members; to consecrate, systematize and develop the resources and agencies of the church, and thereby, under divine blessing, hasten the so long-desired time when the kingdom of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord. The constitution and by-laws were adopted; and after fixing the time of the next congress, which was decided to be held in New York, in the last week of April, 1872, the convention adjourned.

Washington, June 16.—The Monocacy, Palos and four steam launches, under command of Commodore Blake, were sent June 1 to examine the river Sable, in Corea. At a point called Difficult Passage, where navigation is most perilous, masked batteries, manned by several thousand Coreans, opened a heavy fire. A French vessel in advance fought gallantly. The American vessel, bearing up, drove the enemy from the works, and the tide swept all the vessels past the batteries. They then anchored and threw shell among the retreating enemy.

The Monocacy was slightly injured by running on a sunken rock. The vessels returning received no fire from the forts. Three Americans were hurt. Pacific overtures are expected, otherwise the fleet will destroy the forts, and take such other measures as the interests of civilization demand. The Coreans are a treacherous and warlike people, who are entirely independent of China.

Washington, June 17.—City of Mexico dates to the eleventh instant have been received.

Tampico, which was held by the insurgents, was captured by storm and all the insurgents killed, wounded or captured.

Yellow fever is raging at Vera Cruz.

Washington, June 17.—Two and a half million dollars in gold reached the Treasury Department safely from San Francisco. It weighed six tons.

Lebanon, O., June 17.—The Hon. C. L. Vallandigham, while illustrating to his fellow-counsel in a murder case how the dead man might have shot himself, accidentally discharged the pistol, wounding himself in the bowels.

At two o'clock this morning he was still conscious, but in great pain. Internal hemorrhage is probable.

His physicians pronounce his condition very critical. There seems hardly a possibility of his recovery.

Cincinnati, June 17.—Mr. Vallandigham died at eighteen minutes before ten o'clock this morning. He went down very rapidly after three o'clock, having no pulse scarcely after that hour.

Rochester, N. Y., June 20.—A collision occurred to-day on the Central railroad, at Fairpoint. Cyrus Andrews, of Savannah, had a leg broken, which was subsequently amputated.

FOREIGN.

London, June 14.—The Times says of the treaty of Washington: It was not England alone who yielded some of her claims. The United States also made great concessions.

The Times considers it unprecedented that such a grave difference between nations as the Alabama claims should have been settled without a resort to arms. The demand for consequential damages for injury done American commerce by the Alabama and kindred vessels was unacceptable to the English commissioners, and was abandoned by the United States. The Times, in conclusion, expresses the hope that, taking pattern from the adjustment of the American questions, the nations of Europe will rise to a higher conception of arms and the duties of international fellowship.

Versailles, June 14.—The administration respects the rules forbidding work on Sundays.

All the journals approve of the coming visit of the Assembly to Paris, and regard it the first approach to genuine reconciliation with the Parisians.

The Gucho publishes a manifesto to the Paris electors against monarchy and in favor of a republic.

Berlin, June 14.—The committee in charge of the donation bill met to-day, and was addressed by Prince Bismarck on the subject of its labors.

The bill was then adopted with an amendment, under which the Emperor will distribute four million thalers among the generals and statesmen who achieved the results of the war.

The Bank of Prussia has been authorized to establish branches in Alsace and Lorraine.

The German Parliament unanimously sanctioned the grants made by the crown to the relatives of the members of the reserves and landwehr who fell during the war.

A bill making special grants to generals and statesmen who achieved the results of the war, also passed.

Florence, June 15.—A circular from the minister of the interior instructs the prefects to give the people full liberty to celebrate the jubilee, but to take proper precautions against disturbances. All quiet at Rome.

Rome, June 15.—Several deputations have arrived, and more are coming, to congratulate the Pope on the jubilee.

Versailles, June 16.—General Douay's corps has gone to Lyons to disarm the National Guards in the valley of the Rhine, from Lyons to Marseilles. Two thousand troops will be sent to Algeria.

London, June 16.—It is said, upon the entry of Victor Emanuel into Rome, the Pope will go to Corsica.

Rome, June 16.—The jubilee of Pope Pius the Ninth was celebrated here to-day. The receptions at the Vatican followed each other in constant succession from morning until night.

Versailles, June 16.—The government will remain at Versailles until October.

Motions have been presented in the Assembly for prolongation of the powers of the Assembly and Thiers for two years.

Berlin, June 16.—The triumphal entry of the army and the inauguration of the equestrian statue of King Frederick William occurred to-day. The display was grand. The city was thronged with people. The procession was one of the most magnificent of modern times, and was headed by the eagles and standards captured from the French.

After the address of welcome and congratulations, the Emperor, at the head of a brilliant cortege, rode down the Via Triumphal road, which was strewn with flowers as he advanced by hundreds of young girls dressed in white.

The procession was mainly composed of detachments representing every regiment which was engaged in the war. The enthusiasm of the spectators was unbounded.

Upon unveiling the statue of his father, Emperor William delivered a speech, closing as follows: "This monument, which was projected in a time of the profoundest peace, has now become memorable by one of the most brilliant, though bloodiest, of modern wars. May the peace so dearly achieved be a lasting one."

The ceremonies closed with the conferring of honors on the victorious generals; among them General Von Roon was made count of the empire and Von Moltke field marshal of the imperial army.

London, June 17.—The Telegraph has a dispatch from Versailles which states that the Bonapartist candidates are making vast efforts and spending a great deal of money to effect their election to the Assembly. They really have no chance of success, for the Assembly itself is determined upon upholding its status quo.

Paris, June 19.—The reorganization of the Central Committee and its proclamations excite great dismay.

A new loan will be forced on the twenty-eighth, bearing five per cent. interest, at eighty-two.

Rome, June 19.—A plot for the assassination of the Pope has been discovered. It was concerted in London, Florence and Paris. The assassination was planned to take place on Saturday.

Paris, June 19, evening.—Liberte asserts that Felix Pyatt has been arrested.

Twenty-five hundred women incendiaries have been sentenced to transportation to New Caledonia.

Gambetta soon returns to France.

The Imperial Guard is being reorganized under the name of the Republican Guard.

Versailles, June 19.—The Assembly passed a bill giving the natives of Alsace and Lorraine franchise and eligibility to the Assembly.

One hundred and eighty thousand French prisoners yet remain in Germany, but are returning at the rate of thirty-five hundred daily.

Paris, June 19.—Indications of a renewal of the insurrection continue to multiply. Workingmen openly insult the soldiers. Attempts at assassination and incendiarism continue.

The international candidates will be returned.

Twenty-five Commune officers have been arrested since Friday. They were mostly foreigners.

London, June 19.—The Pope's jubilee was celebrated throughout Ireland.

Two ships have reached English ports with yellow fever aboard.

London, June 19.—George Grote, the historian, died yesterday, aged seventy-seven.

Artist Bradford lectured on Saturday.

New York, June 19.—European mails bring the following news:

Castellar, the Spanish Republican orator, delivered a powerful appeal in the Cortes, on the twenty-ninth ultimo, for the fugitive Communists.

A Paris correspondent of the London Times writes that the International Society, from which sprang the Paris Commune, numbers two million members in Europe.

Hearts Content, June 20.—The Atlantic cable of 1865 was repaired at noon to-day.

Paris, June 20.—The war between eighteen monarchist and five republican papers is very bitter. The republican papers repudiate the Commune. It is thought they represent the most voters, and are united, while the monarchist journals are divided. The monarchical press fear a union of the republican journals.

A committee has been formed to procure the return to the Assembly of the former representatives of Alsace and Lorraine.

M. Gambetta has declined a nomination for the Assembly.

Demonstrations of Communists are made daily, and arrests continue frequent.

An idea is mooted of forming a second chamber, to be elected by the general councils.

Prince Napoleon has accepted the candidature for the Assembly from Corsica, and his election is thought to be certain.

Pius the Ninth continues to receive many visitors, Protestants as well as Catholics, and he recommends himself to the prayers of the former as well as the latter. To an English lady who attended one of the recent receptions the Pope said: "Pray for me; Protestants also can pray for the cause of justice and truth." The following expressions to some other visitors are quoted as indicating the Pope's own opinion of his confinement: "You have come to see him who is called the Prisoner of the Vatican. Truly I am so. I could doubtless materially go out, but I could not do so morally, without seeing the afflicting spectacle of a city entirely changed from what it used to be. Every step, every glance, would torture me; therefore I shall go out no more until God puts an end to the bitter trial to which he has chosen to subject us. Your prayers will hasten that day."

Noble Answer.—"You ask," said the famous William, Prince of Orange, to Sonoy, the governor, "if I have entered into a treaty, or made a contract for assistance with any powerful king? I answer that before I ever took up the cause of the oppressed Christians in the provinces I had entered into a close alliance with the King of kings; and I am firmly convinced that all who put their trust in him will be saved by his almighty hand." Afterward, when offered every personal and family favor if he would but give over his life-long endeavors to secure religious freedom to the poor Netherlanders, the brave prince replied: "He regarded the welfare and security of the public before his own, having already placed his particular interests under his foot, and was still resolved to, so long as life should endure."

The German imperial crown is a foot high, of twenty-one karat gold, and heavily set with pearls. The scepter is of silver, gilt, and two feet long. The globe carried in the hand is of the finest gold, three and seven-eighths inches in diameter, and encircled by two rings, one perpendicular and half covered with jewels, and the other horizontal and entirely crusted with gems. On top is a cross which fairly blazes with precious stones. The insignia have long been kept in the Hofbourg at Vienna, and will be brought forth for Kaiser Wilhelm's coronation.

Oxford University, England, has an army of students. The attendance during the last term is stated to have numbered over seven thousand—the largest number at the university for ten or twelve years. The usual attendance is something less than five thousand, with an average of about three hundred students at each of the nineteen colleges that compose the university.

Virtue has been described as an awkward habit of doing things differently from other people. It creates great mirth in fashionable circles.

Meridian District Conference.

Enterprise, Miss., June 7, 1871.

Mr. Editor: The conference of the Meridian district of the Mississippi Annual Conference was held in Enterprise, beginning June 1 and closing June 4, 1871.

The exercises were opened on Thursday, at eleven o'clock A. M., by the presiding elder, William B. Hines.

On Friday morning Bishop Paine arrived. The conference was harmonious and spiritual. All the matters under the jurisdiction of the conference were thoroughly and searchingly handled.

The spiritual condition of the church was reported by pastors and delegates as being favorable and hopeful compared with the past. The brethren from all parts of the district are expecting and praying for a revival of religion. This feeling was a marked feature of the conference.

Finances, except in two or three charges where there was a well-defined plan strictly adhered to, were in a cloud. The whole question was a bottle of smoke. The stewards pursued "the old plan," whatever that is. What it is they did not clearly know, or at least did not tell. But, after all, the pastors were not uneasy about a support. They were represented as religiously and faithfully doing their duty, and they all had faith to believe that God and the brethren would take care of them in it.

Sunday schools are increasing in number, interest and power.

The conference, so far as it could, took steps to establish a new mission in neglected parts of Wayne and Greene counties.

The conference was a blessing to the members of it, and to the church in Enterprise. It was preceded by a very interesting and profitable preachers' meeting on Wednesday, and succeeded by a series of meetings. Ten persons, all young, and nearly all members of the Sunday school, were added to the church.

Past experience, and the judicious counsel of well-informed brethren, admonish me that long reports of district conferences are objectionable to the editors of our church papers. I therefore leave out of this many things that were of interest to us.

Thos. S. Abernethy, Jr.,
Secretary.

Louis Harms, in Luneburg, Germany, originator of a mission to Africa, whose fame is known throughout the world, and which has developed into ten other missions in Southern Africa, was pastor there, as a young man, of a small and poor parish, commencing to preach then in 1848. It was at the close of his first year with them that Harms proposed to the congregation the establishment of the mission. The first question, Who will go? was answered by twelve persons who offered themselves. A mission school was at once set in operation to train them, and Harms' brother undertook the work. Then others wished to go out as farmers, mechanics, etc. The people built a ship to go on their errands to Africa. This was the brig Candace—cost $16,000, and $4,000 outfit. In 1853 she weighed anchor for Port Natal. The labor accomplished by Harms in seventeen years was almost incredible. But he was a man of holiness and prayer. He prayed, talked and lived as an instrument in God's hands.

A Salutary Movement.—Sabbath-breaking in Chicago has received a rebuke from habitual Sabbath-breakers, says the Advocate of that city. Ninety-two real estate dealers have pledged themselves to hereafter abstain from Sunday advertising, and earnestly request all business men to unite in the effort to secure the reform. They state that they believe "that the growing practice of Sunday advertising tends to prevent the proper observance of the Christian Sabbath, and that the moral, religious and business interests of the city would be promoted by its discontinuance." Many of the leading mercantile firms have joined in the movement.

GOD ABOVE THE STARS.

The sun goes down in storm and gloom—
The stars fade out in mist and rain,
Fast-gathering clouds around me loom,
And throbs my heart in fear and pain.

My prayers are turned to tears and sighs,
'Mid thorns and stones I sadly grope:
Will the fair morning never rise,
Nor shine again the star of hope?

Sad mourner, hush; thy grief is heard,
Thy tears are counted ere they fall;
Thou canst not breathe a single word
Ere Jesus hears and answers all.

Wherefore his faithfulness distrust?
He never yet put faith to shame;
Thy Father knows thou art but dust,
And will not crush thy feeble frame.

What though the stars in darkness fade,
And clouds o'er every step be drawn—
The morning comes in light arrayed;
This darkness ushers in the dawn!

What though thy path is hedged about,
'Tis but to guard from Folly's ways;
And Love's own hand will lead thee out,
And crown thy pain with songs of praise.

God's faithfulness will never fail;
Only in restful patience wait
Awhile in sorrow's gloomy vale,
And thou shalt find it heaven's gate.

A little while—'tis darkness now,
But soon shall every cloud be gone,
Or form around yon mountain's brow
A golden chariot for the sun.

Mr. Editor: Some months ago I gave some grand totals from the minutes of our Conference for the year 1869. I have learned that that exhibit made quite an impression in some quarters. But as the case is chronic, one dose will not effect a cure—not perfect, at least—for the case has been of such standing that some time may be required to extend and equalize the circulation and impart proper vigor to the whole body. I am afraid that after all the treatment we can give, perfect health, soundness and vigor will not be restored to the whole body.

Well, to begin, the whole number of white members reported is 15,386. The amount allowed all the pastors (including presiding elders) was $51,345, which is $546.25 for each preacher engaged in the work. The amount paid to the preachers, as reported, was $36,876.29, which was an average of $392.29, nearly. The amount paid per member, for the support of the ministry, was $2.29½. The deficit in the salaries of 94 preachers was $14,468.71—that is, an average of $153.92 to each preacher. So that while the average amount paid by the private members was $2.29½, the average amount of the preachers was $153.92. Who pays most for the support of the gospel? Fully one-half of our private members do not pay anything for the gospel. Are they so poor they cannot, or do the stewards never call on them for anything, and thus deny them the blessed privilege of giving for that purpose? Or have the preachers failed to preach on the duty of supporting the gospel? Is this neglect of duty the result of ignorance, of pecuniary inability, of indifference on the part of the stewards, or of perversity on the part of such members? It is time that each of us should examine ourselves, that we may see where the fault is, and what it is.

Well, there was reported for the Bishops, $946.50; for missions, $1,144.40; for Conference collection, $1,659.51; making for these three objects just $3,750.41, or about 24 cents for each member for all these objects. For missions it is not quite 8 cents per member; for the superannuates, widows and orphans about 10 cents per member; for Bishops about 6 cents per member. So that, summing up all that is paid for pastors, Bishops, missions, superannuates, etc., it does not amount to more than $2.54 per member. Alas! alas!

But, sir, turn to the minutes, and you will see that from 29 pastoral charges, where 4,728 members are reported, not one cent was reported for missions! Look again, and you will see that from 29 pastoral charges, reporting 4,494 members, not one cent is reported for the Bishops! Yet again, here are 22 pastoral charges reporting 3,155 members, and not one cent for the superannuates, etc.! Shame! shame!

Who is to blame for this dereliction? May we not say: It was the preachers? So I believe. So my observation and experience teach me. Think you that none of those 4,728 members would have given for the cause of missions if the preachers had presented the claim and asked them? I believe they would have responded with cheerful hearts. So of the 4,494 in reference to the Bishops. So of the 3,155 in reference to the Conference collection.

Think of a circuit of 348 members paying the preacher within $20 of the amount of his salary, and nothing reported for Bishops and Conference collection, and only $8 for missions. What was the preacher doing? Anything for these causes? Did he try?

Think of another circuit of 313 members paying the preacher within $20 of his claims for salary, and not a cent reported for Bishops, Conference collection or missions. That people were greatly wronged by that good brother. Think of a pastoral charge reporting 1,000 members, and not a cent for missions. That beats all others!

Well, sir, if I could not do better than some preachers do in these matters, it seems to me I would conclude that I had mistaken my calling, and would go hunting gophers or splitting rails for a living, and try to say my prayers at home and live in quietude. May the Lord stir up those preachers to do better in this work, or get out of the Conference. Amen. Perhaps more anon.

Ex-Pastor.

HISTORY OF TRANSFERS.

Mr. Editor: The history of transfers is the transcript of the golden age of Methodism. The connectional feature harmonizes the church in all its parts, preserving the equilibrium of the whole system. The transfer power was one that Mr. Wesley "did not seek, but used." Freely it was used. Just a century since Mr. Asbury, the embodiment of American Methodism, landed at Philadelphia as a transfer for à special work. Dr. Coke, with episcopal powers, arrived in 1784. When Mr. Whatcoat's assistance was desired by Bishops Coke and Asbury a great excitement was gotten up; the excuse for which was that he was an Englishman. He was elected and ordained, and the factionists were equally fortunate in concealing, for the time, their motives. Methodism in the West and South was established principally by transfers. Tobias Gibson, in Mississippi, Elisha Bowman, in Louisiana, and Drs. Ruter and Alexander, in Texas, were all transfers. New Orleans, the commercial center of the Southwest, and the stronghold of Romanism, was at last conquered. Benjamin M. Drake, a transfer from Tennessee in 1824–5, gave to Methodism there its first permanent organization. It is now a place of great importance to the church. A great man said: "Louisiana has been the Macedonia of Methodist preachers." From the North and East they heard the cry: "Come, help us." "Westward the star of empire took its way." Some of the richest blood ever shed by men in the strife against sin has crimsoned her soil. Fifty-six years have passed since Nolly was a martyr. Latterly Hewitt, Randall, Hallberg and a host of others have fallen. And the field is occupied. But by whom? By men to the "manor born?" Nay; by transfers chiefly! Other Conferences have been as nurseries from which our grounds have been beautifully planted. The names of McTyeire, Keener, Walker, Cobb, Thweat, Armstrong and Harp are already historic. Besides this, every Bishop, and every man of influence in the church at large, has been at some time or other a transfer. Yet, after the most important services have been rendered, the glaring flames of prejudice threaten them with persecution. There prevails to a considerable extent an impression that they are merely sycophantic adventurers—the parasites of the more wealthy churches. This is evident from "a feeling irrepressible," which agitates many "old, tried and experienced men of unsurpassed ability as preachers" (shades of Olin and Bascom!) who find therein "a trial" too severe for sufferance. The Bishop leaves a "preferred place" unsupplied, unless a "carpet-bagger" is available. Hark ye a moment. What means all this anxiety about "preferred appointments," so called? Have those anxious ones the oversight of the whole work? "Preferred places!" What constitutes them such? Religion? Nay, they are no more religious than piny woods Methodists. Society? None is better than that in the hill country of Louisiana. Stipends, mayhap, or honors? Alas! for poor humanity and for the church, that ministers would listen to such seductions of the Devil. "From such, good Lord, deliver us." And the sooner such men, no matter how "old, experienced or able," quit, the better for the church. If they will not "take another appointment within our bounds," they forsooth will "carpet-bag" it to some other Confersuce. Being new men there, and of tremendous inherent abilities, they will glide unconsciously into "preferred places," when the same blistering process will be applied to them which they have so unnecessarily applied to others. In the halcyon days of Methodism, when halos of glory crowned her brightest achievements, the motto on her banner was: "The man for the place." "The place for the man" was considered unsound policy. Efforts to reverse this are apparent. Men who, in a life of devotion, have shown a willingness to serve ANYWHERE, are vituperated by those who probably grumble over every appointment given them. It is known who privily engineered certain protests and resolutions around through the last Conference. Had they been heeded the Conference would have occupied an attitude before the whole church supremely ridiculous. Handsomely did the authors thereof beat a retreat, and at length signed the capitulation! Much of this ado was made by transfers! In an age of protests, we beg leave to enter protests against: 1. Any, however "old, experienced or tried," who assume to overses the work in whole or in part. 2. The "few" ruling "the many." 3. Any hints that transfers are understrappers—carpet-baggers. 4. Contradictory terms, as "preferred places," "Bishop's pets." We are Methodists. 5. Presiding elders who give any hints about "negotiations" they may have set on foot. 6. Any "to the manor adopted" (no matter how well) who attempt to "stir up the natives" against transfers. 7. Most earnestly against "volcanoes." They are underground arrangements; have fire, sulphur and brimstone in them; cast up mud and slime, and bury cities sometimes. May New Orleans never have her Vesuvius! Hills that smoke are not always of the Lord's touching. Should the Confersnce fall into the fire, may the Lord help us, and give us faith that will remove the burning mountain, and quench it in the laver of regeneration. Meantime may the work of the Lord prosper; may transfers flock to Louisiana. When your work, Mr. Editor, is done, may you transfer to the heavenly city; and as our work for the present is completed, we will cease transferring thought to paper.

Yours in love, Prairie.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Mrs. Eleanor Davies Curtiss was born in Augusta, Georgia, on the eleventh of October, 1806, and died on the eighteenth of May, 1871, in the town of Hazlehurst, at the residence of her son-in-law, Rev. E. G. Cook.

At the time of her death she had been a member of the church forty-nine years. As might be supposed, forty-nine years of sympathetic intercourse with Christian men and women of the circle that formed her associates and friends in the city of New Orleans, and in the interior of Louisiana and Mississippi, and in the itinerant service into which her marriage with Rev. William M. Curtiss brought her, deeply and permanently impressed the mind and character of Sister Curtiss.

She was, therefore, framed upon a strict Methodist model in the development of her religious life. In some brief autobiographical notes which she left, the family likeness with Wesley, Fletcher and Hester Ann Rogers can be distinctly traced; and her form of faith, inculcated by Revs. William McMahon and J. W. Burruss, her spiritual instructors, can be readily identified in Methodist theology and Christian life.

She was incapable of a blind faith; at least she felt an instant resistance springing up in her mind to every form of dictation. There remained to her, therefore, the path of a troubled experience, which lasted through several years.

In her "notes" she marked two distinct stages in her religious life. The first was her conversion; the second receiving the blessing of perfect love.

At the age of sixteen, while a student in Elizabeth Academy, in Washington, Mississippi, she joined the church. Her convictions antedated this period by several years, and led to this act as the first of a series of duties which must be done by every one seeking to be a Christian. She began in earnest, and with some method, to seek the evidence of personal religion—the witness of the Spirit. The Bible was studied for information. Prayer was resorted to for guidance and help. Her sincere, earnest and persistent seeking was eventually rewarded with divine manifestations, which opened to her communion with God, and filled her soul with the joy of a triumphant faith.

A close acquaintance with Christians of riper experience brought about an awakening on the possibility of a higher state of grace. Much anxiety and eager inquiry resulted in the settled conviction of a call to seek the blessing of perfect love. Thenceforward her thoughts and prayers were given to the attainment of the blessing, and although baffled at many points, and repeatedly disappointed, she neither distrusted nor despaired. She marks the moment of receiving this grace by several particulars—by an unusual press of domestic duties, by a great agony and outpouring of desire in prayer, by an entire consecration, upon the altar, of her all, which she was enabled to make. There ensued a peace in her mind and heart which was surprising for its power over her entire nature, and for its depth, which seemed to be unfathomable. This peace lasted through life, and bore her up all through the stormy vicissitudes of persecution, which, as they construed it, befell her husband through the tedious phases of her last sickness, giving to her last hour of life a solemn tranquillity, and impressing upon her features the composure of a peaceful sleep.

Sister Curtiss was an active Christian—a real persistent worker—for years the leader of a female prayer meeting in the church in which she last held her membership.

She was an intelligent, well informed and deeply experienced Christian. Her religion was a comfort, not a cross to her. Her example was an advantage, not a stumbling block to others. She was loved in her household for her meek and quiet spirit. She was esteemed in the church for her faith and good works.

She is missed, painfully so, by those who remain, who, while she lived, felt her age, manners, conversation and sympathies to be congenial with theirs. She possessed the grace of a Christian lady, the sweet charity of mellow age, and the persuasiveness of a life unblemished.

A GENTLEMAN of the old school thus describes the rendering of a well-known hymn by a modern fashionable choir: "Firstly, the soprano, in a soaring leap, sings, 'Take thy pil'—followed by the alto and tenor in duet, with like advice (while the soprano is magnificently holding on to the 'pil,') and as the deep base profoundly echoes the same, 'Take thy pil'—they finally unite and repeat together, eventually succeeding in singing, 'Take thy pilgrim to his home,' etc., greatly to the relief of both minister and people, who seem alike awfully impressed with the suggestive advice so emphatically reiterated."

MINISTERS are stars, and Christ knows best in what part of the firmament of the church to fix them.

Reminiscences of Rev. J. I. E. Byrd.

NUMBER FOUR.

Every consistent follower of Christ will take his religion with him wherever he goes, and into whatever business either his interests or duty may lead him to engage. This was a fixed principle with Ira Byrd, and was most beautifully exemplified in his Christian experience and practice. Where he could not practice and enjoy his religion he would neither go nor stay. We have a forcible illustration of this in connection with a singing school in his neighborhood, on Chickasawhay, during his residence there. In the days of which we write there were itinerant teachers of vocal music in the country, who would make up a school and give weekly lessons for a term of three months wherever they met with sufficient encouragement. They were called singing masters. Bro. Byrd was very fond of vocal music when employed in sacred purposes, and in the days of his strength had a fine voice for social and congregational singing. One of those singing masters made up a school in his neighborhood, which was taught in the church, and in order to encourage the enterprise both himself and his young and happy wife entered themselves as pupils. The school was opened and closed with prayer, and otherwise conducted with religious propriety, as many of the pupils were members of the church, and their main object being to perfect themselves in congregational singing for church purposes. The school was prosperous and the scholars advanced rapidly in all the rudimental elements of good singing. Their weekly meetings for practice were looked to as a sort of holiday, and they had both religious and social enjoyment at their reunions. One of the natural effects of good singing is to drive away carking care, and produce contentment and cheerfulness, and hence the last day of these singing schools was frequently shaded with sadness and marked with tender emotions, especially among the young people. The teacher would deliver his valedictory and unite with the school in singing a parting hymn. We have seen the face of tender-hearted women bathed in tears and the voice of manhood choked with emotion at such times. It was on such an occasion that we first learned, in our boyhood, to sing:

"Brethren, farewell I do you tell,
Since you and I must part!
I go away, and here you stay;
But still we're joined in heart."

Such, however, was not the parting scene of the singing school on Chickasawhay.—It was indeed arranged to sing an appropriate parting hymn, but in addition Ira Byrd, one of their ex-pupils, must preach them a farewell sermon. The preacher ascended the pulpit and took for his text Psalm civ, 33: "I will sing unto the Lord as long as I live; I will sing praise to my God while I have my being." He at once became inspirited with his theme, and while discussing the obligation, nature, elevating effect and perpetuity of singing praise to God, he caught all afire and "spake as the Spirit gave him utterance." The pious in his audience were in full sympathy with their preacher, until they could no longer control in silence the struggling emotions of their enraptured souls, and broke out in loud shouts of praise to God. And why not? Heaven is said to be a very noisy place, made so by the ever-swelling volume of adoring praise to God from its countless inhabitants. Why not practice somewhat beforehand, that it may come the more natural when we get there? Many of the pupils of the school in question sang not only with "the understanding," but also "with the Spirit." Would to God we had at the present day, in all our churches, more of the full-chorused, outspoken, lusty singing of the chivalrous days of our beloved Methodism! The singing school in McRae's settlement, on Chickasawhay, ended in nothing unpleasant, but in a rapture of religious joy and holy praise.

During the two years he was local, by hard and well-directed labor, Bro. Byrd provided for the immediate wants of his young family. But his spirit was not at rest in the local ranks. His divinely appointed destiny was that of an itinerant pastor. At the Conference, held late in 1818, he re-entered the field, and the two following years labored with his usual acceptability and usefulness on Chickasawhay circuit. It was during the year 1820, while traveling this circuit, that he suffered the partial loss of his sight, which continued to the close of his life. He thought it probable that his eyes received their first injury in his youth by being required to work late at night at the shoemaker's trade, to which he was apprenticed, but the immediate cause he believed was his incessant reading on horseback and by candle and torchlight. His eyes became greatly inflamed and it was long before the inflammation could be reduced, and when it finally subsided it left an excrescence over the point of vision which never could be removed, though all-known remedies, under the direction of the most skillful oculists, were often resorted to. This was the great affliction of this good man's life for half a century. He could see well enough to travel and to perform some manual labor about home, but not to read; and though he could still write mechanically, he could not read what he wrote. Why this great affliction was permitted we know not now, but the mystery will be explained hereafter, when "we shall know even as also we are known." Up to this date Ira Byrd was, perhaps, the most indefatigable and successful student in the Mississippi Conference except William Winans. He had a well-balanced and expansive mind, stored with good, common, practical sense; and, so far as we are able to judge, had it not been for the loss of his vision, which deprived him of the use of his hooks and pen, he would in due time have filled, with acceptability and usefulness, all the higher positions in the itineracy below that of Bishop. As it was, he aspired to nothing beyond the privilege of preaching "the glorious gospel of the blessed God," and attending to such other pastoral duties as his dimness of vision would permit for the remainder of his protracted life. Notwithstanding the example of Mr. Wesley and many other eminent ministers, we must express our disapproval of reading much on horseback. We had ample experience on this subject in the early years of our itineracy, but fortunately saw our danger and desisted from it before receiving any permanent injury. The necessary jolting of the book by the motion of the horse and the dazzling light of the sun on the page makes the practice very straining to the eyes; and to say nothing of the danger of a fall from a sudden stumble or fright of the horse, the constant effort to hold the book steady is oppressively fatiguing to the chest. It may be well enough in riding to read a short paragraph as a subject for meditation, or to read what we wish to memorize, as the rudimental branches of our theological curriculum, prose or poetical extracts, hymns, etc.; but continuous reading we think ought not to be indulged in, as the consequences may be very disastrous to our sight in all after-life. In hope of receiving his sight by quietness, regular habits and the persistent application of approved remedies, he again retired to the local ranks, and remained local in 1821–2. Obtaining no permanent relief, and apprehending that he was doomed to grope his way in comparative darkness the remainder of his life, he re-entered the Conference at the end of 1822, and was never local again, though often on the retired list on account of his loss of sight or family affliction. In 1823 he again traveled Chickasawhay circuit with his usual acceptability and success.

THE FLOWERS.

BY GEORGE HERBERT.

How fresh, O Lord, how sweet and clean
Are thy returns! e'en as the flowers of spring;
To which, besides their own demean,
The late-past frost tributes of pleasure bring,
Grief melts away
Like snow in May,
As if there were no such cold thing.

Who would have thought my shriveled heart
Could have recovered greenness! It was gone
Quite under ground; as flowers depart
To see their mother-root, when they have blown,
Where they together,
All the hard weather,
Dead to the world, keep house unknown.

O that I once past changing were,
Fast in thy Paradise, where no flower can wither!
Many a spring I shoot up fair,
Offering at heaven, growing and grouning thither;
Nor doth my flower
Want a spring shower,
My sins and I joining together.

And now in age I bud again,
After so many deaths I live and write;
I once more smell the dew and rain,
And relish versing, O my only light.
It cannot be
That I am he
On whom Thy tempests fell at night.

These are thy wonders, Lord of love,
To make us see we are but flowers that glide;
Which when we once can find and prove
Thou hast a garden for us, where to bide,
Who would be more
Swelling through store,
Forfeit their Paradise through their pride.

The Crusade of the "New Innocents."

One of the most remarkable episodes which took place in the middle ages has been neglected by the historians—Gibbon and Milman not even mentioning it in their pages. It was called the children's crusade, and took place in the thirteenth century. It was made up of two separate movements, one in France and the other in Germany, originating from a common impulse, but differing in particulars. A peasant boy of Cloyes, France, Stephen by name, and twelve years old, in the year 1212, believed himself commanded by a vision of the Savior to preach a crusade to the boys of France, promising them, under divine leadership, an assured triumph. A letter was given him to the King of France, Philip Augustus, ordering him to assist the novel enterprise. Stephen made his way to Paris, preaching everywhere on the road, showed his letter to the King, and established himself at St. Denys. Crowds followed him. His fame spread throughout France. He worked miracles, or was supposed to, and was called the prophet. Mimic prophets—children like himself—were sent, through the kingdom, preaching from the text: "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast thou perfected praise, because of thine enemies, that thou mayest still the enemy and the avenger." Children, including girls, marched through the towns with banners and torches, singing: "Lord, restore Christendom; restore to us the true and holy cross." Thirty thousand marched from Vendome in June, of whom twenty thousand reached Marseilles, three hundred miles distant. Here they expected the sea to divide and make a road for them, as it did for the Israelites of old, but it did not. Many were disappointed and returned home. Two merchants, however, offered to fit out ships for them, and five thousand of the youthful heroes waited and embarked for the Promised Land.

While this was going on, a boy, Nicholas, was preaching the crusade at Cologne. He collected an army of children, like those of the French Stephen, but containing a greater proportion of children of high birth, and of girls. They marched seven hundred miles over Mount Cenis to Genoa, encountering on the way a succession of hardships and cruelties. Of the thirty thousand who set out with Nicholas, only seven thousand reached Genoa. They also looked for the sea to open to them, but it did not. Some of them remained at Genoa, and became the founders of families there. Others reached Rome, and were sent home by the Pope.

Still another band left Germany and crossed the St. Gothard, after which they were scattered. Nothing was heard of the expedition that embarked from Marseilles for eighteen years. But in 1230 an aged priest arrived in Europe, who said he had been with the party, and had now returned to tell of their unhappy fate. The day after leaving port they had been assailed by a violent storm, and two of the seven ships were dashed to pieces on the rocks of St. Pietro, a little island off the southeastern coast of Sardinia, and sunk with all their crews of at least one thousand children. The pretending merchants turned out to be slave-dealers, who had bargained to sell the deluded children to the Mohammedans for their vile purposes. They were divided into three companies; some were taken to Bujeiah, a town on the African coast, about one hundred miles east of Algiers, some to Alexandria, some to Bagdad. Not one of them ever returned to Europe. Not one, so far as the old priest knew, could ever be tempted to apostasy. The princes at the caliph's court had plied them assiduously with threats and promises to induce them to renounce their faith. They one and all refused, and eighteen were put to death on the spot, some by drowning, some by arrows. The rest were reserved for a more tedious and trying martyrdom.

In all, some one hundred thousand children were made victims to this adventure. Pope Gregory the Ninth had the "Church of the New Innocents" erected in memory of the little martyrs on the Island of St. Pietro.

The history of the children's crusade is fully set forth in a work recently published by an American author, which we have not seen.—Methodist.

UTILITY OF PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

As for mankind thriving by common sense: they have not thriven by common sense, because they have not used their common sense according to that regulated method which is called science. In no age, in no country, as yet, have the majority of mankind been guided, I will not say by the love of God, and by the fear of God, but not even by sense and reason. Not sense and reason, but nonsense and unreason—prejudice and fancy—greed and haste—have led them to such results as were to be expected—to superstitions, persecutions, wars, famines, pestilence, hereditary disease, poverty, waste—waste incalculable, and now too often irremediable—waste of life, of labor, of capital, of raw material, of soil, of manure, of every bounty which God has bestowed on man, till, as in the Eastern Mediterranean, whole countries, some of the finest in the world, seem ruined forever; and all because men will not learn nor obey those physical laws of the universe, which (whether we be conscious of them or not) are all around us, like walls of iron and of adamant—say rather, like some vast machine, ruthless though beneficent, among the wheels of which, if we entangle ourselves in our rash ignorance, they will not stop to set us free, but crush us, as they have crushed whole nations and whole races ere now, to powder. Very terrible, though very calm, is outraged nature.

"Though the mills of God grind
Slowly, yet they grind exceeding small.
Though he sit and wait with patience,
With exactness grinds he all."

It is, I believe, one of the most hopeful among the many hopeful signs of the times, that the civilized nations of Europe and America are awakening, slowly but surely, to this truth. The civilized world is learning, thank God, more and more of the importance of physical science: year by year, thank God, it is learning to live more and more according to the laws of physical science, which are, as the great Lord Bacon said of old, none other than "Vox Dei in rubus revelata"—the voice of God revealed in facts; and it is gaining, by so doing, year by year, more and more of health and wealth; of peaceful and comfortable, even of graceful and elevating, means of life for fresh millions.

If you want to know what the study of physical science has done for man, look, as a single instance, at the science of sanatory reform—the science which does not merely go to cure disease, and shut the stable door after the horse is stolen, but tries to prevent disease; and, thank God, is succeeding beyond our highest expectations. Or look at the actual fresh amount of employment, of subsistence, which science has, during the last century, given to men, and judge for yourselves whether the study of it be not one worthy of those who wish to help themselves, and in so doing, to help their fellow-men. — Charles Kingsley.

ARCHBISHOP OF PARIS.—Monseigneur Dupanloup, Bishop of Orleans, who is announced as the successor of the murdered Archbishop of Paris, is the most eminent man in the Catholic Church of France. He is Gallican in politics, unorthodox with regard to the papal temporal power, but an adherent to the See of Rome in doctrine. When the discussion of the infallibility dogma began he was counted among its opponents, but at the close of the discussion, recognizing the constitutionality of the council, he formally announced his submission to the decree. He is the author of many valuable contributions to French literature, notable among them being a volume entitled Learned Men and Studious Women, which is a powerful argument in favor of the highest education for both sexes. His elevation to the cardinalate is looked upon as certain.

A Quarterly Meeting in the Fiji Islands.

These islands were once peopled by cannibals, or eaters of human flesh. A quarter of a century or more ago the Wesleyan Missionary Society sent a mission to them. The result has been the destruction of the practice of man-eating and the formation of regular churches among them, served largely by native preachers and exhorters. These have been trained for the work among themselves, and it is executed under the supervision of missionaries from England. It is organized and prosecuted as the work is at home. Indeed it is the complete destruction of heathenism in the islands, and the transplanting of Christianity. The coming of the people to the quarterly meeting and their dress will make the reader smile, but he will remember their late deliverance from heathenism, and the warm climate in which they reside. The Missionary Notices for May says:

"One Monday, early in the afternoon, there were signs of a coming to the Bose vakavulatolu (such is the native name for our quarterly meeting;) canoe after canoe hove in sight until the horizon was dotted with sail, and the bay swarmed with small craft. Some were soon moored at the edge of the expansive mud-flat, and the living portion of their freight came straggling over the mud with all sorts of bundles and boxes on their shoulders. Succeeding canoes came racing on by twos and threes to the landing place, while seaward the view was kept lively by a constant supply of mat sails skimming before the breeze. From the hills descended little files of men who had taken the overland route, and were walking leisurely along with their wardrobe swung in a swag over their backs.

"The mission house was beset by teachers and others who came to report matters or to bring strange-looking bundles and parcels. The study veranda soon presented an odd appearance. One part of it was occupied by a heap of native cloth, and the other by long baskets of cocoanut leaf, which were stuffed with cotton. The former was the circuit, baptism and marriage fees; the latter, payment for Bibles, catechisms, copies of Bunyan's "immortal Pilgrim," and other books. A missionary must needs add to his medical, legal and other accomplishments that of being wirehouseman.

"It was now time for the prayer meeting drum to be beaten, and in answer to its clanging beats a numerously attended assembly was soon formed, and teachers from widely separated sections of the circuit lifted up their voices in prayer for a blessing on the business of the morrow.

"On the next morning, Tuesday, the quarterly meeting commenced. Contrary to the orthodox manner, the local preachers' meeting came second, and the genuine quarterly meeting, with the circuit stewards, took the lead. The chapel was a good sized building, and thoroughly filled by a large company, every one dressed in a shirt, in addition to the usual two or three yards of cloth. There was evidently scope for the exercise of individual taste in the matter of clothing, for great was the variety in shirts—every material, color and shape was to be seen; still each garment was a shirt, and the individual possessing it was consequently in full ecclesiastical uniform, and a highly respectable member of the meeting. Indeed, one or two lavish gentlemen were arrayed in waistcoats and some in coats."

A CAST IRON CHURCH.

The Evangelist has a description of a novel church:

The Ross Street Presbyterian congregation of Brooklyn have commenced the erection of a church edifice which, from the novelty of its plan and its beauty of arrangement, is creating much interest. The location is upon the highest ground in the eastern district of Brooklyn, between Bedford and Lee avenues. The dimensions of the building are eighty-seven feet front by one hundred and ten and a half feet deep. It is to be constructed of metal, i. e., cast iron, ridged and wrought iron, pressed zinc and medallion metal, with a frame-work of heavy timber. The style of the architecture is the German Gothic, carried out at the smallest detail.

On the south corner will be a large tower and high spire of one hundred and seventy-four feet, and a smaller tower and spire of one hundred feet will rise on the north corner. The spires are to be covered with polished medallion metal. On the front, in the center, will be a spacious vestibule thirty-four feet in length, with three large doors. In each tower will be a door, leading to a side aisle six feet wide, running the whole length of the building. These aisles are distinct from the auditorium, and connect the front with the rear. The auditorium will be seventy-two by one hundred and two feet in the clear. Its side walls and ceilings are to be covered entirely with iron, over which will be decorated molded work. On each side, and on the semi-circle in front, will be projecting columns, resting on octagon corbels, and supporting the arched ribs of the ceiling. These columns are to be of polished metal, with white and gold ornamental caps and bases. The entire ceiling will be of iron, over which are formed deep molded panels, studded with gold stars on a sky-blue ground. This edifice, so far as we know, will be the first one of the kind in the country. Thoroughly church-like, and yet with the most novel combinations of constructive material and architectural arrangement, it will no doubt attract much attention. If the expectations entertained are at all realized, it will go far toward solving the problem how to build a structure at once beautiful, durable and commodious, with sufficient economy to avoid that crippling burden of debt which distresses so many of our city churches of all denominations. This new Ross Street church will cost, exclusive of the ground, which is already paid for, not much over $50,000.

A SINGING SERVANT.

Charles Wesley was a born poet. Like Toplady, he was all nerve and fire and enthusiasm. God gave him a musical ear, intense emotions, ardent affections and a glowing piety that never grew cold. He ate, drank and dreamed nothing but hymns! He must have been the ready writer of at least four thousand. One day, while on his itinerancy, his pony stumbled and threw him off. The only record he made of this accident in his diary was this: "My companions thought I had broken my neck. But my leg was only bruised, my hand sprained and my head stunned, which spoiled my making hymns until—next day!" Truly, a man must have been possessed with a master passion who could write a sentence like that.

Wesley found his inspirations "on every hedge." He threw off hymns as Spurgeon throws off sermons. For example, when he was preaching to a crowd of rude stone-cutters and quarrymen at Portland he turned his appeal into meter, and improvised a hymn, in which occur the vigorous lines:

"Come, O thou all-victorious Lord!
Thy power to us make known;
Strike with the hammer of thy word,
And break these hearts of stone!"

Standing once on the dizzy promontory of Land's End, and looking down into the boiling waves on each side of the cliff, he broke out into these solemn and thrilling words:

"Lo! on a narrow neck of land,
'Twixt two unbounded seas I stand.
Yet how insensible!"

For every scene and circumstance of life, for prayer meetings, for watch-nights, for love-feasts and for dying hours and funerals he had a holy, impassioned lay. But like Watts, Cowper and Toplady, he had his masterpiece. The Lord of glory bestowed on Charles Wesley the high honor of composing the finest heart-hymn in the English tongue. If the finest hymn of the cross is "Rock of Ages," and the greatest hymn of providence is Cowper's "God Moves in a Mysterious Way," and the grandest battle hymn is Martin Luther's "God is our Refuge," then it may also be said that the queen of all the lays of holy love is that immortal song:

"Jesus, lover of my soul!
Let me to thy bosom fly;
While the billows near me roll,
While the tempest still is high!".

The one central, all-pervading idea of this matchless hymn is the soul's yearning for its Saviour. The figures of speech vary, but not the thought. In one line we see a storm-tossed voyager crying out for shelter till the tempest is over. In another line we see a timid, tearful child nestling in a mother's arms, with the words faltering on its tongue:

"Let me to thy bosom fly,"

"Hangs my helpless soul on thee!"

Two lines of the hymn have been breathed fervently, and often out of bleeding hearts. When we were once in the valley of the death-shade, with one beautiful child in the new-made grave, and the others threatened with fatal disease, there was no prayer which we uttered oftener than this:

"Leave, ah! leave me not alone,
Still support and comfort me."

We do not doubt that tens of thousands of other bereaved and wounded hearts have cried this piercing cry out of the depths: "Still support and comfort me." The whole hymn is at once a confession and a prayer. It is a prayer in meter. And no man is prepared to sing these words aright unless his soul is filled with deepest and most earnest longing for the Lord Jesus.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D. D.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THERE are six hundred and twenty-five registered Universalist ministers in the United States. This is a net gain of twenty-nine over the figures of 1869.

THE FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.—The Foreign Missions Committee of the Free Church of Scotland have received £32,000 of the £50,000 which they wish to raise for residences for their missionaries in India and Africa.

THE missionary work in Hangchow is very encouraging. Though the station has not been occupied long, there are already about a hundred church members connected with all the churches, including neighboring out-stations.

THE Baptist Missionary Union will take the responsibility of sending seven new men to Burmah, three to the Telooguos, one to the Garos, two to the Assamese, and two, at least, to China, within one year, if the men can be found.

A FAREWELL MEETING was held, on Thursday, May 18, at the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, on the occasion of the departure of Mrs. Pruyn, Mrs. Pierson and Miss Crosby for Japan, as missionaries of the Woman's Union Missionary Society.

THERE are five missionary societies represented in Hangchow, China—two in England and three in America. The Presbyterian, North and Sonth, and the Baptist represent America. The latter have for their representative the Rev. Horace Jenkins and his wife.

THE American Congregational Union met in Boston on Thursday. The treasurer's report showed $50,000 receipts, and $25,000 expenditures, including the balance of last year. Seven hundred churches have been built since the organization of the society, at a cost of $2,500,000.

A CORRESPONDENT writes, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, that the Northern Methodists in McMinnville, Tennessee, not being able to supply their pulpit, have tendered it to the Cumberland Presbyterians, whose pastor, Dr. Chaddock, occupies it and the parsonage.

JEWS IN THIS COUNTRY.—The first anniversary meeting of the American Society for Promoting Christianity Among the Jews was held in New York on the twelfth ultimo. The report shows that there are two hundred and fifty thousand Jews in this country, and sixty-five thousand in New York.

THERE are seven distinct Protestant congregations in as many streets of the City of Mexico, and Protestant congregations in forty-five towns in the whole country. In northern Mexico, near Zacatecas, there is going forward a remarkable work of evangelical religion. In Chili the American and Foreign Christian Union has had five missionaries.

THE trustees of the California Congregational Seminary have purchased the Pacific Female College for $80,000. It consists of the college building, a large, well-built and rather imposing structure, located on a fine knoll, with twenty-six acres of land, about a mile and a half from the center of the city of Oakland. Seventeen acres have been already sold by the trustees for $60,200.

FROM LISBON the Rev. R. Stewart sends home to Scotland this word: That there "are larger sales of the word of God than have ever been known before. During the part of this year gone he has given out to colporteurs and others about five hundred Bibles and four hundred Testaments, and is certain that when people as poor as the Portuguese eagerly pay 1*s.* 3*d.* for a Bible and 3½*d.* for a Testament there is a strong desire to know the truth."

THE first mission has at length been established, "after much prayer and anxiety and persevering effort," on that ultima thule of our American continent, Terra del Fuego. An iron house has been erected, and two men—self-banished from all but savage society, to save a few score Indian barbarians from sin and degradation — are now at work among them. Such men believe in preaching the gospel to "every creature." They were "hopeful and confident, trusting in the Lord for wisdom, strength and blessing," as last heard from.

ONE of the most earnest and successful evangelists in London is Henry Varley, who was formerly a prosperous butcher. While pursuing his business he began to labor for the spiritual welfare of the masses of that city, until a church was organized, now numbering over five hundred members, of which he has become the pastor. Every year he invites the butchers of London to a tea meeting. He recently held the sixth festival in Mr. Spurgeon's great Tabernacle, when nearly two thousand butchers and their wives attended; after tea the assembly was earnestly addressed by Mr. Varley and Mr. Spurgeon.

THE GREAT PAPAL CONTROVERSY.—The battle of the prominent leaders of the Roman Catholic Church in Europe thickens. In the meantime the cause of truth is in the ascendant. It is now announced that religious liberty in Rome is daily being asserted in some new and striking manner. A correspondent announces that "influential men are gathering around Father Hyacinthe, and are preparing to offer the Jesuits a severe battle. In a few days Father Hyacinthe will deliver in the Coliseum a speech on papal infallibility."

REV. WILLIAM CLARK, in a private note from Italy, says: "There is continual progress in the work of evangelization in Rome. There are now six places where the gospel is preached—those occupied by the "Free Italian Church," congregational in idea and polity; one by the Waldensians; one by the Wesleyans; and one by an American Baptist. With regard to the Free Italian Church, where Gavazzi preaches, there are often six or seven hundred present. Everything is encouraging, and the three evangelists are finding every day new and more important opportunities for usefulness.

NEW YORK, as well as Boston, has its "Flower Charity," the object of which is the distribution of flowers and fruit to the sick at the city hospitals. Though only in operation for a short time last summer, it distributed more than four thousand bouquets, besides large quantities of oranges, strawberries and grapes. Gifts of fruits and flowers may be sent to the "Flower Charity," No. 239 Fourth avenue, on any Monday or Thursday. Persons living in the country are solicited to send their contributions by express on the days above mentioned. It is a most delicate and beautiful service which is thus rendered to the sick poor in the hospitals, and we trust there may be a prompt and unfailing response to this appeal.

GEORGES DARBOY, the late Archbishop of Paris, murdered by the Communists, was born in 1783. He was for a time professor of philosophy and dogmatic theology in the Ecclesiastical Seminary of Langres. In 1816 he was appointed chaplain to the College Henri the Fourth. He participated in the definition of the dogma of the immaculate conception at Rome in 1854. He was made Bishop of Nancy in 1859, and Archbishop of Paris in 1863. He wrote several religious works, among them Les Femmes de la Bible and L'Introduction a l'Imitation de Jesus Christ. He was regarded as a liberal in theology; he showed some disposition to treat Father Hyacinthe with fairness; but he finally gave in his adhesion to the dogma of infallibility.

THE BIBLE IN ST. PETER'S, ROME. The Christian World furnishes the following interesting information: "A son of Dr. Cote, the well-known missionary in Canada, has written to his sister in this city that he lately read and distributed copies of the New Testament beneath the dome of St. Peter's, at Rome, and that the people eagerly took them. The prelates of the church came forth, and unsuccessfully attempted to prevent the distribution. The police were called upon to drive the heretics from the 'sacred place;' but when they found that Mr. Cote and friends were doing nothing more than scattering the word of God, they not only refused to arrest them, but asked for copies themselves, saying: 'This is what we have long wanted.' Truly, a wide and effectual door is now opened in Italy for the triumphal entrance of the truth."

THE number of schools of all kinds is rapidly increasing in Italy. Among them is one of two hundred children, of both sexes, at Turin, supported by the excellent Mrs. De Sanctis. It is considered a Protestant engine by many Roman Catholics, who try to injure it every way. The royal inspector of schools—a brother of the Archbishop of Turin—lately visited it, but could find no fault with it beyond the mixture of boys and girls in the same school room. He met a mother bringing several of her own and her neighbors' children. He asked her whether she were a Protestant. No, she was not. "Why, then, do you bring your children here? Have we not plenty of other schools, that you must bring them here, where boys and girls are taught together?" To this she replied that she did so because it suited her; that she had already sent four, who were now doing well for themselves in the world; and that she would advise every one who had children to send them to this school. As to the morals, to which he referred so sneeringly, there was nothing to fear, since the teachers were so zealous in superintending the children and seeing that their conduct was good. "You won't remove your children, then?" "No, sir!" she answered. "Then remember," he added, "that you must give an account to God of your action." "Just so," she replied; "and it is for that very reason I shall continue to send them here."—Independent.

Centenary College of Louisiana.

The annual commencement of Centenary College, Jackson, Louisiana, will take place on the second Wednesday in July (the twelfth.)

The meeting of the Board of Trustees and Visitors will be held at Jackson, Louisiana, on Monday, July 10, at two P. M. A full meeting of the board is much to be desired; and the friends of this institution are earnestly invited to be present, and give their countenance and support to this important enterprise of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences. Commencement sermon on July 9, by Rev. John Mathews.

President Board of Trustees.

A WORD ABOUT REMITTING.

State explicitly whether the money which you send is for the Book Agency or for the Advocate. The two are separate and distinct concerns. Though they are conducted by the same agent, we must not mix their business. If convenient, write to each on separate sheet or half sheet, but be sure to state for which office the money sent is intended; and if for both, then state how much for each. This will save trouble and prevent mistakes.

SEND US CURRENCY.

We cannot use State money. We have to lose by discount here, or by the expense of sending into the State where it is issued to have it exchanged for currency. Procure the currency and save us the trouble and loss.

We have received the annual announcement of the Southern University, Greensboro, Alabama, for 1870-71. Parties wishing information concerning this institution should send for a copy. There are ninety-two students in attendance this session. The following is the order of commencement exercises:

Sunday, July 2—Commencement sermon, by Rev. Bishop H. N. McTyeire, D. D.

Monday, July 3—Meeting of trustees; exhibition of Belles-Lettres Society.

Tuesday, July 4—Address before the literary societies; address before the alumni, by Thomas W. Dyer, A. M.; exhibition of the Clariosophic Society.

Wednesday, July 5—Orations by the graduating class; degrees conferred; baccalaureate by the chairman.

George Woods & Co.'s Organs.—We call attention to the advertisement of Woods' Organs, which are now for the first time offered in this market. All that is asked for these instruments is a fair comparison of their merits with others. The agent prefers that purchasers should be satisfied; and if they are not equal in compass, variety and brilliancy of tone to any other ever offered in this market, the purchaser will not be urged to buy. See advertisement; also on back of the Amaranth, published at the Southern Methodist Publishing House.

Take Notice.—The Vicksburg District Conference will meet on the twenty-seventh of July, and not on the twenty-fourth of August, as previously announced.

GOADS AND NAILS.

Our dull and sluggish human nature requires the most vigorous treatment. It needs pricks and spears to worry it along the path of duty, and to stimulate the moral sensibility. The conscience, left to itself, is a dead and perverted thing, and the conceptions of right and wrong are wayward and uncertain. The spiritual nature is in a profound sleep, and is dead in trespasses and in sins. Negligence, indifference and unbelief are the mildest phases of the carnal mind, while its more positive aspects are exhibited in an utter defiance of God and of his authority. The obtuse sense of the lukewarm in religion, the blinding delusions of error entrenched behind orthodox professions and pious forms, and the fanaticism of a false and ignorant zeal, are even harder to overcome than shameless and undisguised infidelity. Taking the world as it is, both Christian and unchristian, human nature, as it always has been, must be dealt with plainly and pungently if we would witness its reformation.

The present times are bad enough. The public conscience has evidently grown worse within the last ten years. There is less of integrity in business, less respect paid to obligations, and a painful lack of thorough and sterling honesty in the affairs of commerce. Bribery has almost secured the indorsement of public opinion, and it is resorted to, without much attempt at concealment, by individuals and corporations. Courts of justice and legislative halls are the chosen places of buying and selling, and it is well understood that bills, having money in them, cannot be passed in the national or State legislatures without a heavy outlay for influence and votes. Washington, Albany, Springfield and New Orleans are alike in this respect. Corporations, railroad companies and monied institutions, proverbially without souls, are more than ever without conscience. The sacredness of the marriage bond was never so rudely threatened and so generally disregarded as at the present moment. Licensed and incorporated institutions for lotteries and schools of gambling flaunt their tickets in your face at every corner of the street, and publish their advertisements in the most influential newspapers. Licentiousness, in forms innumerable and in every shape of uncleanness, pervades and infests the very core of society. There is a fearful breaking away from moral restraint, and the fear of God is losing its influence and hold upon the people.

The average Christian conscience has doubtless felt the outward pressure, and to some extent has given way under it. The morals of Christians feel the influence of abounding iniquity—the love of many waxes cold, and there is spiritual declension. Influenced and imbued unconsciously by the worldly spirit, and by the temptation to competition with worldly practice, the Christian conscience has lost its truth and tenderness. Many take lenient views of transactions which they once abhorred, and are disposed to conciliate and compromise where they formerly gave no quarter. With some there is a loosening of the stringency of the divine precepts, and the obligations to lead an honest and pure life. The church is in close contact with the world, and is more or less conformed to its low and defective code of principles and practice. The professed followers of the Lord Jesus are yielding more and more to intemperance, dishonesty, and to the dissipating pleasures of sin. For the evils which are so rampant in society, and that threaten to demoralize the church, there is balm in Gilead and a physician there.

We must turn to "the law and to the testimonies," and the word of God must not be bound. A one-sided and partial gospel will not do, but truth must be presented with all its sanctions. One cause of all is the prophesying of smooth things, and making the gospel a lovely and sentimental song, when it should be an outburst of thunder against sin, and a revelation of wrath against those who hold the truth in unrighteousness. A partial theology which dwells too exclusively upon the fatherhood of God, and keeps back the thunderbolts which are launched from the cross against unbelievers, has wrought mischief. The dreadful and interminable punishment of the ungodly is losing its prominence in the doctrinal statements of the press and the pulpit. The law of God, as the standard of practice and as the rule of life, is too little recognized and expounded. The decalogue needs a fresh proclamation, and to be newly impressed upon the conscience of the world; and the terrors of the Lord, as they frown in the judgment to come, need a more impressive treatment. It is becoming a fashion to address sinners as the helpless victims rather than the responsible agents of crime, and to expound sin in its worst phases as a species of invalidism, to be tenderly extenuated rather than denounced as worthy of eternal retribution. It is a time to cry aloud, and spare not, and to tell God's people of their sins, to denounce vice and ungodliness with the plainness and authority of the oracles of God. Lust, profanity, dishonesty and lying must be exposed and fearlessly branded, as they deserve. Jerusalem should be searched as with a lighted candle, until the sinners in Zion are afraid, and until the last refuge of lies shall be laid open to the guilty conscience.

The hurt of society and the church is too grievous to be slightly healed, or to be put at rest by crying peace when there is no peace. Moral æsthetics, cultured essays, and the rose-and-lavender style of preaching can never arouse the blunted sensibilities of this or any other adulterous generation. Amidst the pantheism of philosophy, and the atheistic tendencies of science, the living God must stand out as a clear and sharp antidote to all wild and dreamy speculations. The rugged features of the truth must be brought out, and God must be proclaimed as a consuming fire. The great error of the period has been in the undue emphasis of the benign and the merciful, at the expense of the severer and equally important properties of the gospel. This deceitful handling of the word of God must give place to the whole truth, and the whole counsel of God must be declared. The sons of thunder must awake and go forth after the manner of the prophets and apostles, and after the style of Chrysostom, Luther, Wesley and Edwards. The spirit and power of Elijah must be blended with the unction of John. The law of God must occupy its true place in the light of a transfigured Savior, and as deriving its most powerful sanctions from the cross itself.

"The words of the wise are as goads and as nails"—sharp, penetrating, quickening; such are the characteristics of the inspired volume, and such is the effective message to a world steeped in indifference and sin. Nothing else will go down to the hidden roots of the carnal nature and awaken deep and thorough conviction. Nothing else will bring the dead conscience to life and lead to godly sorrow. Nor will any other means secure the conversion of sinners. Goads and nails, and not a soft and limp distortion of the gospel. Society, with its utter rottenness, and with its deep and festering ulcers, needs a heroic, and not a weak and empyric treatment. The church demands the application of strong stimulants to effort, and to a closer walk with God. "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maranatha." To them that are at ease in Zion the woe that hangs over them must be proclaimed with solemn and emphatic fidelity.

We call attention to changes in wording the advertisement of Mr. P. Werlein, the enterprising piano and organ dealer at 80 and 82 Baroune street. Mr. Werlein has just returned from the Texas State Fair, at Houston, where, we are informed, he received two blue ribbons and diplomas, awarded for his two entries of piano (Cottage Square) and organ. We bespeak for him an examination of his stock. Call and see and hear his instruments.

OHIGNONS.

From time immemorial the pride of woman has been her hair. Solomon evidently counted it as prominent among the graces and charms of the "fairest among women" when he declares: "Thy hair is as a flock of goats that appear from Mount Gilead." Paul, while asserting that "if a man have long hair it is a shame unto him," nevertheless coincides with the great King of Israel, and with the common sentiment of all ages and peoples, when he says: "If a woman have long hair it is a glory to her; for her hair is given her for a covering." All the pictures we have seen of Mother Eve represent her with an abundant suit of auburn tresses, however scantily draped in other respects, and evidently given her for a covering. It was too early for false hair, and so, beyond suspicion, it was all her own.

We imagine that Sarah, Rebecca and Esther were affluently endowed with rich and flowing locks, as are the daughters of Israel even at the present day. In that beautiful incident of the alabaster box, and the anointing wherein Mary wipes the Savior's feet with her hair, we learn that she was not wanting in this glory of her sex. To have been available for this sacred office of love, we judge it must have been worn in the natural way, in free and graceful simplicity, without plait or braid. The custom of excessive ornamentation came in for comment and stricture at the hands of both Paul and Peter. Broidered hair and plaiting the hair are mentioned in connection with gold, pearls, and the wearing of gold. Women are to adorn themselves "in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broided hair, or gold or pearls or costly array; but which becometh women professing godliness, with good works." The true adorning is to be the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, rather than the outward display "of plaiting the hair," and of wearing of gold or of putting on of apparel. The apostles would have expressed themselves even more fully and strongly had they lived in our times, and witnessed the amazing displays of the present day.

Something like what we see, however, must have provoked the apostolic strictures, and one of the ante-Nicene fathers, Tertullian by name, gives a strong blast against this phase of feminine folly. The Christian Union is responsible for the quotation.

"Why is no rest allowed to your hair, which must be now bound, now loosed, now cultivated, now thinned out? Some are anxious to force their hair into curls, some to let it hang loose and flying, not with good simplicity; besides which you affix I know not what enormities of subtle and textile pernkes; now, after the manner of a helmet of undressed hide, as it were a sheath for the head and a covering for the crown; now, a mass drawn backward toward the neck. The wonder is that there is no open contending against the Lord's precepts! It has been pronounced that no one can add to his own stature. You, however, do add to your weight some kind of rolls, or shield-bosses, to be piled upon your necks! If you feel no shame at the enormity of the gear, I feel some at the pollution, for fear you are fitting on a holy and Christian head the slough of some one else's head, unclean perchance, guilty perchance, and destined to hell—nay, rather banish quite away from your 'free' head this slavery of ornamentation."

The venerable father was not altogether orthodox on some points of doctrine, and had a strong way of putting things generally; but taking our modern afflictions as a guide to our judgment, we fear he does no more than justice to his theme.

And here is the matter in another point of view—an exceptional abuse, perhaps, but still such as occurs not seldom. It is the language of some good Episcopal rector, who, perhaps, believes in a tactual succession, that the water regenerates, and that the Bishop's hands impart the Holy Ghost; but still he makes a case to be seriously considered. Says the rector:

In my class of catechumens there were two young women who had not been baptized, and were to be received in the church through that holy sacrament. I had cautioned the entire class to make no display of dress on so solemn an occasion, and was gratified to find my counsel had been followed. When the time of confirmation arrived they all appeared in plain and neat attire. When I called forward to the front those to be baptized, I noticed with great satisfaction, especially, the modest and becoming dresses of the two young women referred to; but judge of my dismay when I observed on the head of each a chignon, of the modern and enormous pattern now in vogue, covering, with a two-inch thickness of false hair, the top and back of their heads, from forehead to neck! The consequence was, that when they bowed before the font there was not a part of their bodies that could be touched with the waters of baptism. It was too late then and there to require them to remove these obstacles to the proper administration of the sacrament, and so I proceeded with the service, and baptized, not those young women, but their chignons, for I do not believe a drop of the water touched their persons. I confess to a feeling of indignation which was out of place at so holy a time, but it was of a holy sort that so important an ordinance should be turned into a mockery, and turned aside by the unsightly customs and fashions of the day. But I have learned a lesson that hereafter I shall put into practical effect, and require henceforth of every applicant for baptism or confirmation that they come with heads uncovered by hats, bonnets or chignons, so that the waters of baptism may fall, or the hands of confirmation be laid directly upon their bodies, and not on something foreign to them.

PAPAL JUBILEE.

There are always some holy cardinals and aspirants to the chair of St. Peter base enough to wish the Pope would die. May be there are monarchs and politicians who would like to have a chance at making a new Pope. Generally, however, Protestants, in particular, are content for Pius to live, and the longer the better, if he keeps on, as he has done of late, multiplying absurd dogmas, and stirring up trouble and schism in the bosom of the holy Catholic Church. His present position may be trying, but in view of what might be, all benevolent souls can sincerely congratulate him on the extension of his mortal and infallible life. We were absent on Sunday, and did not see the grand procession and the illuminations. We had forgotten that such a thing was to be, and our first thought on seeing the yellow flags on Monday morning was that the smallpox had broken out. It proved, however, to be the Pope's jubilee instead. It is somewhat doubtful whether Peter was ever in Rome at all, and in any case Pius is ahead of him in the duration of his office, and in the quality of his infallibility. So much historical falsehood has rarely been aired in a day as found expression from the platforms and pulpits of the Romanists on Sunday. The old wives' fables of popery were brought out in force, and the temporal power fully indorsed—its loss lamented. We hope Pius the Ninth may live another quarter of a century, and that, spiritually and temporally, he may prosper after the fashion of the past few years. A contributor, who was in town, furnishes us with the following:

Scarce had the flood from Lake Pontchartrain receded when the streets of our poor Crescent City were again flooded on last Sunday by almost interminable processions of the Roman Catholics, in honor of Pio Nono's twenty-fifth anniversary. This anniversary gives the lie to the oft-repeated Roman tradition: "Annos Petri non videbis." It is asserted that Peter's pontifical reign in Rome lasted precisely twenty-five years; and now the reign of the present Pope exceeds that time. No wonder that he claims infallibility for himself. Of course nearly all the houses of Catholics were decorated with flags of the pontifical colors—yellow and white—the processions being headed with similar banners, inscribed with absurd and also revolutionary mottoes. Among the latter was this: "Vivat Pius IX., Papa et Rex!" A king without a kingdom! About six o'clock all the processions assembled in Jackson Square, facing the cathedral, immediately in front of which a platform had been built, forty-five feet high. On this were seated an archbishop and bishop, and one hundred and fifty priests; also various officers of the city and State administrations. Now speeches were made ad nauseam, and, I dare say, afterward whisky was drunk ad libitum.

Each day brings its duties in the morning and carries them away with it in the evening.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

Little Men: Life at Plumfield with Jo's Boys. By Louisa M. Alcott. Boston: Roberts Brothers, 1871.

This is one of the most entertaining, most instructive and most wholesome books for boys that has appeared for a long time. Grown people, especially parents, will read it with pleasure and profit, while to the young it will be a rare treat—a feast of fat things. Nothing better can be put into their hands during the summer vacation. The work is all about a school—abounding in incident and in charming delineations of character. Experienced teachers and conductors of schools will find it eminently suggestive.

Culture and Religion in Some of Their Relations. By J. C. Shairp. New York: Hurd & Houghton, 1871.

Gresham, of Camp street, places us under obligation for a copy. The work embraces five lectures delivered by Principal Shairp to the students of the United College of St. Salvator and St. Leonard, St. Andrews, Edinburg. The topics treated are: 1. The aim of culture—its relation to religion. 2. The scientific theory of culture. 3. The literary theory of culture. 4. Hinderances to spiritual growth. 5. Religion combining culture with itself. The lectures admirably set forth the mistakes and expose the errors of culture popular at the present day. Prof. Huxley is reviewed ably in connection with the scientific theory of culture. The work is adapted to the times, and calculated to correct many serious errors now advocated by literary and scientific men.

The Institutes of Medicine. By Martyn Paine, A. M., M. D., LL. D. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, 1871.

This volume is a large octavo of one thousand one hundred and fifty-one pages, and treats of physiology, pathology and therapeutics. The present is the ninth edition, and recently issued. Dr. Payne is a veteran in the profession of medicine, professor of the institutes of medicine and materia medica in the University of New York, and well known throughout America and Europe as an author, and the recipient of many academic honors. The volume is evidently for the use of medical students and physicians, and it is only necessary that we call their attention to this new and improved edition of an important standard work. For sale by George Ellis & Brother, New Orleans.

Light. By Jacob Abbott. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers.

This is another volume of the series, "Science for the Young." It is elegantly bound, handsomely illustrated, and the phenomena of light are explained in a popular and entertaining manner. Such works adapted to the young are of great value, and should have a wide circulation. For sale by George Ellis & Brother, New Orleans.

Bench and Bar: A Complete Digest of the Wit, Humor, Asperities and Amenities of the Law. By L. J. Bigelow. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, 1871.

This is a new edition of a most popular and entertaining book. About one hundred and sixty pages have been added to the present edition. The volume contains five hundred and thirty-one pages, and is supplied with a copious index. For sale by Ellis & Brother, Camp street, New Orleans.

Ellis & Brother send us Ralph, the Heir, a novel, by Anthony Trollope. Published by Harper & Brothers.

Points of Controversy is a small duodecimo by Rev. C. W. Miller, A. M. The author is a member of the Kentucky Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The mode of baptism is thoroughly and ably discussed. Published by the Southwestern Book and Publishing Company, St. Louis, Missouri, 1871.

The Sunday School Magazine for July is promptly to hand. It contains Bishop McTyeire's address delivered before the Sunday School Convention, and also the very able address of Dr. Haygood on the Uniform Lesson Plan. Notes for Teachers and Bible Students give what is best from many critics and authors. We like this feature of the Magazine very much.

Hearth and Home of June 17, and Appletons' Journal of the same date, are both richly embellished, and contain a large amount of entertaining reading matter. These publications belong to the useful rather than the sensational, and should have a place upon every well-furnished center table.

Every Saturday, of June 17, has a picture of Louis Napoleon, also likenesses of the most celebrated Communists, and numerous splendid engravings and illustrations. The serial story by Charles Reade is the great blemish upon this unrivaled illustrated weekly.

Scribner's Monthly is the first of the July periodicals to make its appearance on our table. Profusely illustrated, and filled with the freshest and most appetizing reading matter. Jaunts in Japan, The Gunpowder Plot, Back-Log Studies, and A Plea for Chinese Labor, are samples of the articles.

BURKE'S MAGAZINE FOR BOYS AND GIRLS, published by J. W. Burke & Co., Macon, Georgia. The June number is excellent, and would prove a treasure to every house and home.

WE ARE INDEBTED to the secretary, Rev. John G. Wilson, for a copy of the minutes of the North Alabama Conference. It is a handsome pamphlet, and contains a large amount of valuable information.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the American Stock Journal for June. It is published at Parkersburg, Pennsylvania, by N. P. Boyer & Co. Price, $1 per annum.

THE AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST for June is, as ever, abundantly illustrated and crammed with the useful and ornamental. A capital periodical.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the Sunday Magazine for June. The articles are, as usual, of the best quality, and the most of them religious.

GOOD HEALTH for June has reached us, accidentally or otherwise. It is a good poriodical. Alexander Moore, publisher, Boston.

REVIVAL AT OSCEOLA, ARK.

The Rev. W. R. Young, to whom we are indebted for an account, elsewhere inserted, of the Mississippi District Conference, writing from Osceola, Arkansas, May 23, says: "Bishop Keener preached five times to large, attentive and appreciative audiences. The Holy Ghost came down in demonstration and with power; the hearts of the obdurate were broken up; sinners were convicted and happily converted. Zion travailed and brought forth children. God hath indeed visited his people in mercy. The visit of our beloved Bishop has done great good. Here the Bishop met a family (at the last meeting he held with us,) the mother and a daughter of which were converted under his ministry sixteen years ago. Four children were present whom he baptized at the same time, one of whom bore the Bishop's name. They are now grown. The battle of sixteen years ago was fought over again amidst tears of joy at the remembrance of the past. The Bishop left us in the midst of a glorious revival, such as has not been felt for years at this place. He left us his prayers and his benediction. Ours will follow him wherever he goes. May his bow abide in strength. Many conversions are the result of this meeting, and there are many mourners at the altar crying for mercy. Fourteen have joined the church, and we know not when the meeting will close. The revival, we hope, will spread all over the country."

LATER.—The Rev. Benoni Harris, presiding elder of the Mississippi district, who was present and assisted throughout the District Conference, and until May 26, when he was obliged to leave, informs us that the good work of God at Osceola continues in power and increasing interest. There have been about fifty professions of religion, and the people generally feel the might of truth and grace. Bro. Young is zealous and faithful, and will push the battle to the gates of the enemy. Western Methodist.

EAST ALABAMA COLLEGE.

AUBURN, ALA., June 13, 1871.

Commencement sermon, June 25, 1871, by Rev. E. L. Loveless.

Monday, June 26, 1871—Address by Hon. John W. A. Sanford on the occasion of the dedication of the Wirt Hall, and public debate by members.

Tuesday, June 27—Prize declamation and prizes; address by Hon F. S. Ferguson.

Wednesday, June 28—Commencement exercises, and oration before the literary societies by Rev. A. T. Bledsoe, LL. D.; concert and levee at night.

There has been a series of religious meetings held nightly in the college for three weeks. As many as thirty have presented themselves for prayer at a time. Many of the students are earnestly seeking to know God's love. The meeting has produced a marked change among them. Many who professed to have been once converted, but who have grown careless and indifferent, have been reclaimed. The unfortunate affair that resulted in the death of Wiley H. Young has cast a deep gloom over the college, and the necessity of living a religious life has been deeply impressed upon the students. We earnestly desire to send every student home a converted young man. For this glorious end we are working and praying.

DEATH OF THE REV. DAVID SHOAFF. It is with heartfelt sorrow, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, that we announce the death of this excellent brother and successful minister. Bro. Shoaff had but recently entered upon his new field of labor in Woodstock, Virginia, where he expired at the post of duty, after a brief but severe illness. We have received as yet no particulars of his last sickness. At an early day, however, we shall publish an account of his valuable life and successful labors in the gospel ministry. He was for many years a member of the Baltimore Conference. His demise will be felt as a great loss to the church and the Christian public, while to his family the bereavement is irreparable. May our pitying God sustain them!

JESUS SOUGHT HIM.—A Chinaman, Yam Sing, on his examination for membership on experience before the Baptist church, San Francisco, in response to the question, "How he found Jesus?" answered: "I no find Jesus at all; he find me."

THE moment a man gives way to inordinate desires, disquietude and torment take possession of the heart. The proud and covetous are never at rest, but the humble and poor in spirit possess their souls in the plenitude of peace.

Married.

Obituaries.

Died, suddenly, of congestion, after a few hours' suffering, in Black Hawk, Mississippi, June 3, 1871, ANNA JAMES, daughter of Rev. K. A. and L. M. Jones. Anna was three years and seven days old—a precious little gem.

"Life is a span, a fleeting hour;
How soon the vapor flies!
Man is a tender, transient flower,
That e'en in blooming dies.

"Hope looks beyond the bounds of time,
When what we now deplore
Shall rise in full immortal prime,
And bloom to fade no more."

W. P. B.

DR. JOHN GIDGER MCKEMIE was born in the State of South Carolina, August 13, 1812.

Under the ministry of Mr. Cunningham, at West Point, Georgia, he united with the Presbyterian Church in 1844, in which church he lived a faithful and consistent member until his death, exemplifying the power of divine grace to sustain men amid the trials and conflicts of life. He was for nearly twenty years an elder in the church of his choice. He was severely afflicted for two years previous to his death, during which time he seemed to give himself more fully to the subject of religion. His reading and his conversation showed that his mind was constantly on heavenly things. Though the subject of protracted affliction, when his dissolution came it was sudden. He ate a hearty dinner, but before night was a lifeless corpse. The messenger of death did not come unexpectedly. He expressed himself, to a minister present, that he was "ready to depart and be with Christ." His last words were: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit."

Thus passed from earth's sorrows and tribulations, on the twenty-first of April, 1871, in the town of Haynesville, Louisiana, Dr. J. G. McKemie, surrounded by his children and friends, who did all for him that affection and kindness could suggest. He was a kind father, and a good citizen and physician. You weep not, children, as those who have no hope. Your loss is his eternal gain. May God bless you, and enable you so to live that you may meet again in your heavenly Father's kingdom above. J.

MRS. REBECCA OWENS, widow of Rev. Thomas Owens, late of the Mississippi Conference, was born October 12, 1796, and died at Rocky Spring, Mississippi, May 15, 1871, in the seventy-fifth year of her age.

Her maiden name was Bass, and when the writer first knew the family, about fifty years ago, they lived on the Mississippi river, in the vicinity of Rodney. Her parents were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and their house was a preaching place for the pioneer Methodist preachers. In early life Rebecca was deeply impressed with the unspeakable importance of securing her personal salvation on the terms prescribed in the holy Bible. From the time of her awakening she ceased not to seek the Lord in all the appointed means of grace, with earnest prayers and penitential tears, until she felt sweetly assured that her sins were all forgiven, and she was accepted in the Beloved. She now emerged into a new life, and became a happy, demonstrative Christian. She loved God and his people, and delighted in all the ordinances of his house. She prized very highly the spiritual communion of Christians, and loved to attend all the assemblies of the saints, from the class to the camp meeting, and on those occasions she generally got her blessing, and often gave vent to the overflowing rapture of her full heart in audible thanksgiving and praise to God.

On the twenty-sixth of October, 1815, she was married to James Calvit, a man of solid piety, who for many years was an acceptable and useful class-leader in the vicinity of Rocky Spring, Mississippi, where he died in the Lord in 1827. The following year Mrs. Calvit was married to Rev. Thomas Owens, of the Mississippi Conference; and perhaps two more congenial spirits were never united in holy wedlock. They never had any children, and lived together alone until they seemed to be as completely blended into one as two persons could possibly be. Their religious temperament was very similar. They were both very excitable and demonstrative in their spiritual emotions, and nothing was more congenial to their Christian experience than the highest grades of religious ecstasy. They had an ample fortune, and their plantation being in the neighborhood of Rocky Spring, they built a commodious residence there, where, being near the church and on a public highway, they dispensed their hospitality without grudging.

In 1868, after seeing her beloved husband laid in the grave, she erected a suitable monument to mark the place and perpetuate his name and office to coming generations, and then seemed to feel that her work on earth was done. She immediately set her house in order by arranging all her temporal and spiritual affairs in view of her own demise. She talked much and often of the consoling assurance she had that her two husbands were in heaven, and that she would soon be permitted to rejoin them there. She conversed with the writer at full length on the subject of perfect holiness, and expressed an earnest desire to be filled with all the fullness of God. Having with mature judgment arranged every business matter, even to that of having her coffin made and brought home, she prayerfully waited all the days of her appointed time until her change came. She had still been able to attend to her household affairs, though often in great feebleness, until the evening of her death, when the weary wheels of nature suddenly stood still, and in one hour she was cold in death. During the short struggle of dissolving nature she was asked how she felt in view of a death so sudden. She emphatically replied: "All is well!" Thus ended the long and successful Christian career of the once blooming and courtly Rebecca Bass—a happy death as the result of a well spent life. She sleeps beside her late husband, in the rear of their stately residence, and the hand of Christian affection will often bestrew their graves with the sweet flowers of spring.

ARGYLE BITTERS STILL AHEAD!

They cure Dyspepsia, Flatulence, Colic, Biliousness, Torpidity of the Liver, Nervous Disorders, Hypertrophy of the Spleen, Habitual Constipation, Intermittent Fever, Menstrual Suppression, Imbecility in the Aged, and Weakness in Children. They cure Inebriety, and remove the ungovernable thirst for strong drink that torments the poor, heart-broken drunkard. They will promote digestion, and eminently assist in the assimilation of food. They correct disorders of the liver, and cure headache and bad spirits. They invigorate the weak and cheer the down-hearted.

There are other preparations in the market known as bitters, but which are destitute of the elements that render the Argyle a monument of success as a gentle Stimulant, a safe Tonic, and a sure Alterative, for family use.

"Take more Argyle and less whisky," said an eminent temperance man, "and the vice of drunkenness would disappear from our midst." This is worth remembering, and its immense popularity and sale show that these words were fitly spoken.

Buy the Argyle always for a safe family medicine for summer use, to prevent Chills, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia and Nervous Debility. je8 1m

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our Instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our Instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE,

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous 30LO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our Instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

All Instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT.

Of a far Higher Class than any other proprietary medicine of the day stands

Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient.

And for this reason: It is an exact counterpart of one of the most valuable natural medicines in the world. We refer to the great Seltzer Spring of Germany, to which thousands of the dyspeptic, the bilious, the rheumatic and the victims of venal diseases resort annually, and return to their homes convalescent or cured. The Aperient is one of the first and by far the most successful of all the efforts made to reproduce, in a portable form, the popular mineral waters of Europe. See that you purchase only the genuine article.

RIWASSEE COLLEGE.

THE TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION of this school will begin on the FIRST MONDAY IN AUGUST, 1871. The entire expense for board and tuition, for forty weeks will be $150. The board is of the best description that the country affords, being furnished by the steward from his own farm and prepared by the hands of his own family. We had boys from five different States last year, and not a word of complaint was ever made on this point, which is often the subject of just complaint at boarding schools. The fare is peculiarly grateful to Southern boys, who require a more generous diet when they change their climate.

The manner of governing the school is paternal, as the entire exemption from temptations in the surrounding country renders the discipline easy. The institution is under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but under my own control. The young men attending the school last year were, without exception, moral and religious. Young men preparing for the ministry may receive tuition free, and in certain cases can obtain lower rates of board. Regular services are held in the College Chapel.

The location of the school is near Madisonville, Monroe county, East Tennessee, in the midst of a fruitful and beautiful country, and surrounded by a thrifty and intelligent population. No negroes live in the neighborhood, all the laborers in the fields and servants in the families being white. The citizens of Monroe county were true to the South in her late struggle, and have adhered to Southern churches.

Students arriving by the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad will get off at Sweetwater, forty miles south of Knoxville, whence they will find conveyance to the college, seven miles distant.

Our post office is Madisonville, Tennessee.

F. M. GRACE, President.

P. S.—1. Families from the South will find good board in the neighborhood, and a delightful summer retreat at White Cliff Springs, sixteen miles distant from Madisonville. For information on this point parties may address D. A. McKenzie, steward of the college. The health of the country is proverbial.

P. S.—2. Younger boys may be safely sent to this school, as all are under the immediate oversight of the principal, both when in school and when at the boarding house.

The Child's Corner.

A CHILD AND THE WORLD.

Great, wide, beautiful, wonderful world,
With the wonderful water round you curled,
And the wonderful grass upon your breast!
World, you are beautifully drest.

The wonderful air is over me,
And the wonderful wind is shaking the tree:
It walks on the water and whirls the mills,
And talks to itself on the tops of the hills.

You friendly earth! how far do you go
With the wheat fields that nod and the rivers that flow,
With cities and gardens, and cliffs and isles,
And people upon you sit for thousands of miles?

Ah, you are so great, and I am so small,
I tremble to think of you, world, at all;
And yet, when I said my prayers to-day,
A whisper inside me seemed to say:

"You are more than earth, though you are such a dot;
You can love and think, and the earth cannot!"

THE ANGELS WHO WRITE.

A STORY FOR CHILDREN.

"What are the angels doing in heaven?" asked little James of his mamma.

It was a snowy morning near Christmas time, and James had a holiday; but he was not inclined to play. Six weeks ago a little brother had been there to play with him; now he was alone; if you had asked him where Frank was, he would have lifted his hand toward the sky, and answered: "Gone to be an angel."

As he stood looking at the snow, and wishing Frank were back again, he began to wonder what was going on up above. This made him turn from the window and ask: "What are the angels doing?"

"Some of them are praising God in beautiful songs," replied his mamma, "and some of them are flying swiftly to this world, or some other, to do work for God."

"Does Frank work?" asked James. "He liked play best when he was here."

"Frank likes whatever he is told to do now. God makes the little ones quite happy in heaven."

James could not quite understand how he should ever be good enough always to like to do as he was told. But he did not say this; he only asked to hear more about the angels.

His mamma smiled at his serious, questioning face, and then she held him close and warm in her arms, with his head resting upon her shoulder, and talked to him.

"Listen, James," she said. "The angels do different things, as I have told you, but there are ever so many who write."

James lifted his head in surprise. "With pens and ink, mamma?" he asked.

"God has not told us how they write," she answered, "only that they do write. I am going to talk to you about the places they visit, and what they put down in the books they have to fill. One day, not many months ago, two little boys stood on a doorstep waiting for nurse to come and take them for a run with their hoops. On the lowest step, crouched into a corner, sat a little ragged girl, crying bitterly. The two children looked at her, but did not speak. Presently their nurse came out and asked the child what was the matter.

"'Father says he won't have me home until I've begged a shilling; and I'm so hungry, and its dinner time,' was the sobbing answer.

"'Why,' said nurse, 'it's Mary from the school.'

"Now, these little boys had each two bright shillings in their pockets, which had been given them as a present; and they waited a moment, when they heard what the child said, to think what they should do. There was an angel, James—one of the angels who write—standing by and watching, with a book open in his hand; but the children could not see him. Presently one little boy brought a new shilling out of his pocket and gave it to the child, and ran off gaily with his hoop. The other was thinking to himself that he could not spare a shilling, for he wanted a new whip for playing at horses. Then the angel wrote down in his book, against the name of one little boy, that he had been kind and generous, as Christ wished him to be; but against the name of the other he wrote that he had been selfish. When his work was done the angel flew back to heaven and showed the book to God; and the writing will always be there; and by and by the book will be opened, and all that has been written of those little boys will be read."

James' face was hidden now; he knew well who these children were. As his mamma paused he whispered: "Won't God let the angel rub it out if I ask him very much?"

His mamma shook her head. "No; but if you are sorry the angel will write that underneath, and that will please God."

"I am sorry," said James. "More, please, mamma."

"There was a bright summer day, when a party of children went to the river side for an honr on the water. They were told not to attempt to unloose the boats until the gentlemen who were to take care of them came down.

"'I know all about boats,' said one boy; 'I can undo this chain.'

"And he unfastened it, thinking himself very clever, and laughing when the others asked him to let it alone. Just at that moment the gentlemen came up, and disobedient Harry let the chain drop from his hand. Of course the boat began to drift away.

"'Who loosed that boat?' asked one of the gentlemen. No one answered. Then he asked each child separately; and when it came to Harry's turn, he said: 'No, it was not I.'

"Those gentlemen, James, never knew who had been disobedient, but one of the angels who write was there at the river side, and with a very solemn face he wrote in his book, against Harry's name, that he had told a lie."

"I remember," said James, with a little sigh; "I am glad it was not I."

"Then these angels who write watch all day by the children they have in charge. They look very sorrowful when they hear childish voices telling the nurse sometimes that they do not want to say their prayers. The angels write this down slowly, because they know it will grieve Jesus, who loves the little ones. They are sorrowful, too, when quarrels arise and angry words are said, and little faces flush crimson, and little hands are raised to strike; but if the hands drop without striking, and the angry passion passes away, then the angels smile and write happy words."

"Do they write everything, mamma?" asked James.

"Yes, everything."

"How busy they must be," said the child, thoughtfully; "I wonder they can keep up. But tell me, mamma, what do you think they are writing this very morning?"

"I think," said his mamma, "that the one who stands by poor Mabel's bed is writing that she is patient in all her pain, and that she loves Jesus, and is not afraid to die and go to him. I think another stands in that wretched cottage where old Peter lives, and is writing that he likes to read his Bible, and is always cheerful, although he is so very, very poor and old. I think another is next door, where your friends Eddie and Janie are busy hanging toys on a Christmas tree for the ragged children to-night, and is writing that they are little followers of their kind Savior; and I think, James, there is one here writing that my little son gave away nearly all his Christmas boxes to help buy toys for that tree."

James glanced up with a happy smile. "How nice," he said; "I wish the angel always wrote good things of me."

Not long afterward, as James went to school one bright frosty morning, he met a friend named Tom.

"Don't go to school this morning, James," he said; "I've got my skates, and I'm going to have a glorious time on the ice. Come with me, and I'll teach you to skate, and you can have such capital slides."

James looked longingly at the skates, but he did not answer.

"Come along! We'll get home at the proper time, and your mother will never know," said the boy, laying hold of James' hand.

But James pulled it from him. "No," he answered, turning quite away from looking at the skates. "mamma might not know, but the angels who write would;" and off he ran to school, leaving the truant wondering what he could mean about the angel.

When James' mamma came to kiss him that night, as he lay in his snug little bed, he told her what had happened in the morning.

"And I did so want to learn to skate, mamma," he said; "but I knew the angel was there, and I did not want anything bad to be written about me."

James grew up to be a man, but he never forgot the talk about the angels. Often, when he was tempted to do or say a wrong thing, he would whisper to himself: "The angels who write." He could fancy he saw one standing near, and this was quite enough to keep him strong against temptation.—English Magazine.

The Farm and Garden.

FORECAST OF THE SEASONS.

We take the following extract from an article contributed to the Southern Farm and Home by John G. Barnwell, of Athens Georgia:

The observations recorded from rain gauges in the United States run back in some localities more than thirty years, during which time the fall of water per annum varies but slightly one year with another. We have the right, then, to conclude that a certain known quantity of water is due the earth—that if it does not come at one season, in the autumn or winter, it will come in the spring and summer, and hence the forecast of the seasons.

It is a common expression with planters and farmers in referring to a particular year as the "dry or wet year." There is no such thing as a dry or wet year, though there are dry and wet seasons. The reason of the mistake is that farmers only observe weather closely during the growing crop, and after harvest they pay little or no attention to rains or drought.

In examining the extracts below it will be seen how the rain gauge at Athens, Georgia, coincides with the seasons generally throughout the Southern States—that with the dry summer of 1869 the winter before was wet—that with a little more rain than the quantity due in the fall of 1869 and winter of 1870, we had very little less than the rain due for the summer months of that year, yet in each year the same quantity of rain had fallen. Hence we conclude that, as the past autumn and winter were excessively dry, the spring and coming summer will be excessively wet. I had very little faith in rain charts at the beginning of these observations. I have now implicit faith, and as the old salt strips his ship to meet a gale while in a dead calm, I would, if farming, ditch the hill sides in a winter's drought.

EXTRACTS FROM THE UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA RAIN-GAUGE REGISTER.

Autumn, 1868	12.122
Winter, 1868-9	14.908
Spring, 1869	13.861
Summer, 1869	5.864
For the four seasons	46.755
Autumn, 1869	8.435
Winter, 1869-70	12.614
Spring, 1870	11.086
Summer, 1870	13.259
For the four seasons	45.394
Autumn, 1870	7.059
Winter, 1870-71	10.789
March, 1871	4.385
For above	22.233

If we take the mean of the years 1868-9, 1869-70, we find the quantity of 46.073. The charts give 47 inches. Deducting the fall of rain for the present series of observations, 22.233 inches from the mean fall, we have 23.840 inches yet to come. The fall due the spring months is ten inches, but 4.385 inches came in March; this, deducted from 10 inches, leaves 5.615 inches for April and May; this, added to the quantities due for summer, which are 15 inches by the chart, makes 20.615 inches; but 23.840 inches are actually due, hence the difference, 3.225 inches more than the mean quantity due for spring and summer, will come between this and September next.

The summer of 1869 was, as farmers and planters reported from every quarter, excessively dry; this rain gauge makes 5.080 inches, and over 46 inches for the year.

The summer of 1870 was said to be rather wet for the crops; this gauge gives 13.259 inches; the fall for that year 45.394 inches; two slight snow storms not accounted for, and one observation lost by the displacement of the apparatus by some thoughtless boy.

From the foregoing it follows that the coming summer must be excessively wet—not less than 15 inches, probably more, unless the 3 inches due shall fall in April and May.

Will it be thought presumptuous now to say that low lands planted in cotton this year will fail unless the ditching is thorough and complete?—that grain will pay better than cotton on all such lands?—that on high lands more mules and plows will be required to keep down the grass?—that it will be more expensive to keep fields in tilth this year than for the crops of 1869-70?

The area covered by the charts, for which the observations answer, extends through upper and middle Georgia, South Carolina, excepting the coast; North Carolina, middle and north Alabama; the same for Mississippi and Louisiana, northeast half of Texas, Tennessee, and southern part of Kentucky.

SALT FOR SWINE.—While all other domestic animals are regularly supplied with salt, the hog is generally neglected. He requires, however, to be as constantly supplied as the ox, the horse or the sheep, and suffers as much from privation as either of the above-named animals do. His food is almost invariably given to him in a fresh and unseasoned state, and to this fact we may doubtless attribute many of the violent and fatal diseases to which he is subject, and which stagger all remedies, however promptly and skillfully administered. If the food be not regularly seasoned there should be a trough or box in every sty, in which salt may be deposited regularly for the use of the animals. Seasoning the food judiciously would be much the best way; but let it be understood that salt only is alluded to.

CULTIVATING IMPLEMENTS.—Much ingenuity has been displayed in this department. We have sulky cultivators (riding plows) which will go over eight or nine acres per day, and are as good for cotton as corn. We have then another wheeled plow which is operated by a man on foot, which is somewhat cheaper, and is probably better adapted to rough land; and still another candidate has lately appeared, in the shape of a shift and frame cultivator, which is said to be unequaled in its work, and is the cheapest of all. But I think it promises rather too much when it proposes to cultivate an entire row with one horse. I am satisfied it will not do it, and therefore is no better than the double shovel, a one-horse cultivating implement, which is unequaled, and which should be bought by our farmers by thousands and tens of thousands in place of the lumbering ante-diluvian sweeps. The double shovel, in the hands of an active working man, and behind a prompt, good mule, will clean five acres a day superbly. For the first workings of cotton nothing has ever been invented which equals the Andrews' scraper, which combines the old scraper and side-harrow in one tool. For the first dirting of cotton commend me to the double shovel. After that plow with the two-horse cultivator, riding or walking, and then use the scarifying harrow to go shallow but frequently. And, by the way, but few know the immense importance of keeping in advance of the grass in the middles. Keep the middles; and the whole middles—from the plant on one side to the plant on the other—clean, and the amount of hoeing to be done will be nearly nothing. The scarifying harrow is the tool after the crops are advanced—when the corn has grown too tall for the wheel plow, and the cotton too much branched. It will be seen that I have not described a turning plow as a cultivating implement. It should never be used in a field after the breaking up is finished.—Practical Planter.

DRAINAGE FOR FRUIT GROWING.—The pressure from the low price of cotton, with the wretched principle of a reliance on that article for a support, has inflicted a greater calamity than the mere loss of a crop. We have seen a check to improvement in many things, especially in providing fruit for home and the million. This cannot continue, and we desire to give what we regard to be truths, and leave them to our readers to think on; and when ready to work they will have landmarks to guide. No fruit is so good on land not thoroughly prepared, at least to the depth the roots dip down, and we look as much to the surface drain as to the depth. The roots that support the tree in position, and feed it, are superficial, and the earth should be permeable to air and water, or moisture is the better word. If we had a ten or a hundred acre lot to put in fruits, we would want it plowed and subsoiled fully eighteen inches deep, cross-plowed and subsoiled, so that when the water would soak down to the hard earth it would not have hard earth to prevent its passing along the natural undulations of the earth. We would have hill-side drains sufficiently near to take off all superfluous water, gently, so as not to wash. We would then lay off our fruit tree rows as for cotton, and, if need be, subsoil again; then plant on this ridge, and no deeper than the trees grew in the nursery, keeping the guard drains intact, with the lower side well banked in the water furrows, to prevent breaking over, and deep enough in the ridge for water to pass. We hold, with such preparation, neither drought nor heavy rains would affect the tree. Just here we say, manure no tree until it has fruited. Be not enjoled into this. We know of what we speak. When the year's wood does not attain say six to twelve inches in a year, manure lightly and harrow in. "Trouble," "expense!" If it be worth doing do it well, and you will never regret it.—Southern Farmer.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered incomplete relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Donaldsonville, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Lindsey, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure instantly any first attack of Rheumatic Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. Full directions as to use and for further information address

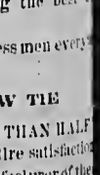
THE ARROW TIE.



FOR BALING COTTON THE ARROW Tie is the most popular, being the best Cotton Tie in use.

Planters and Cotton Press men everywhere prefer it to all others.

THE ARROW TIE

was used to cover MORE THAN HALF THE CROP OF 1869, giving entire satisfaction.

The patentee and manufacturer of the celebrated ARROW TIE, J. J. McComb, formerly of New Orleans, now residing in Liverpool, having control of the best and most extensive Rolling Mills in Europe, is constantly importing large stocks of this popular tie, manufactured of the very best quality of English iron, to meet the increasing demand for it throughout all the Cotton States.

Planters can buy or order the ARROW Tie of all dealers in Iron Ties, and of cotton merchants generally, at the lowest market price; and we respectfully solicit the patronage of Planters and Factors everywhere.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

THE MISSOURI MASTODON.—Attention is called by Dr. P. R. Hoy, in the Naturalist, to the history of the large mastodon in the British Museum, which came from Missouri. Dr. Kock was fortunate in obtaining the prize at the time of its discovery, but Dr. Hey subsequently visited the locality, an excavation about six feet deep and fifteen in diameter, and obtained some portions of the skeleton which had been left behind. He charges Dr. Kock with exercising "a lively imagination" in stating that "the bones were found in vegetable mold which was covered by twenty feet in thickness of alternate layers of sand, clay and gravel," and that under this extensive stratification he found the flint arrow-head that the mound-builders used in slaying the giant of animals. In fact the skeleton was discovered by a man who scooped out a hole for the purpose of obtaining drinking water. He struck upon the scapula at a depth of two feet. Dr. Hoy still further remarks: "Dr. Kock's report has been quoted in proof of the antiquity of man. The position and state of the bones rather go to shew that the mastodon lived in an age not so remote as usually supposed."

ABOUT JUPITER.—The planet Jupiter has been experiencing lately some changes of visage which are puzzling the astronomers. The surface of the disk is variegated with colored bands, the nature of which has been long a subject of study. The colors and forms are now changing in an unusual way, showing that there are some movements of a grand character, perhaps somewhat similar to those that have been attracting so much attention in the sun. This new phase of Jovial existence may help astronomers to solve the constitution of that great planet. In the Journal of Science, of New Haven, Miss Mitchell, of Vassar College, gives a record of some observations made by her in the winter of 1870–71, which are interesting in this connection. At that time, she says, the rosy tint of the equatorial belt was less marked than in the preceding year, the dark spots were less decided, and the white spots more numerous. She says that in watching the changes of Jupiter's bright, cloudy belts, or of its dark bands, one is continually reminded of the changes in the sun's photosphere. The variations are less, and yet an interval of half an hour shows differing relations. The first satellite she has never seen to enter upon or leave the disk of Jupiter other than as a white, circular object; yet in the center she has "either lost it or it has changed in shape or color, becoming elongated toward the polar regions and assuming a reddish-brown hue. The impression made on the observer is that of the interposition of some medium through which it is seen dim and distorted." In other words, this would seem to be some sort of atmosphere of the planet within which it passes, or some exterior envelope behind which it is obscured.

USE OF THE THERMOMETER.—The British Medical Journal trusts that it will not be long before every intelligent mother of a family is familiar with the use of the thermometer for the discovery of disease. In many respects it is far more reliable than the tongue or the pulse. As a means of ascertaining when it is desirable to consult a doctor, and when advice may be deferred with safety, it would be invaluable. By its aid the difference between insignificant skin rashes, which will disappear in a day or two, and those which imply a constitutional fever, may usually be satisfactorily determined. Under many circumstances, the early discovery that a child was sickening for scarlatina or measles might be of great importance. If a mother were in the habit of trying the temperature of her children whenever she thought them ailing, she would sometimes make unexpected discoveries as to their real state of health; and her observations would be of much value to her medical adviser. At the same time she would be acquiring familiarity with the mode of estimating a symptom to which, during acute illness, great attention is paid, and fitting herself for one of the duties of a skilled nurse. The clinical thermometer is not expensive, and its use may be easily learned by any one. We hope that before long a few brief rules adapted for home employment will be prepared; and that, aided by them, the mothers and nurses of our land will at once commence the acquisition of a kind of experience which will become every year of increased importance. In addition to its practical value in reference to the health of their households, we must also add that all who become familiar with the facts of human thermometry must learn some very interesting lessons in physiology.

Over two hundred girls have graduated from various American colleges this year. The majority of them are physicians.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

JELLY CAKE.—One cup of sugar, one cup of milk, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one egg, two cups of flour, one teaspoonful cream of tartar, and one-half teaspoonful of soda; flavor with nutmeg or lemon. This makes six layers.

MARBLE CAKE.—White Cake.—One-half cup of butter, one and one-half cups of white sugar, the whites of four eggs beaten to a froth, one-half cup of milk, two cups of flour, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, and one-half teaspoonful of soda.

SPICE CAKE.—One-half cup of butter, one-half cup of molasses, one cup of brown sugar, the yolks of four eggs, one-half cup of milk, two cups of flour, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful each of allspice, cinnamon and nutmeg, and one-half teaspoonful of cloves. First put a layer of dark cake, then of light, and so on, putting the dark on top. This makes two good sized loaves, and will keep a long time.

CODFISH BALLS.—Put the fish to soak in lukewarm water, and soak half an hour, then pour the water off and put in fresh, soak again and pour off the water a second time, add more fresh water, and let it set on the stove till it just comes to a scald. Pick the fish free from skin and bones, and chop it up fine. Boil and mash your potatoes, take one-third fish and two-thirds potato, and mix evenly together. If not salt enough to suit the taste, add a little, and a very little pepper. If too dry to make into balls, wet with a little milk till you can work it well. Make into small balls with the hands, roll in flour, and they are ready to fry. Have your fat very hot, using either pork fat or suet. Some dip the balls in the white of an egg or roll in bread crumbs, but they are good enough without if fried to a rich brown. I prefer that cakes, an inch thick, to the balls, as they fry nicer.

FRIED FRESH COD.—Cut the fish in slices about two inches thick, dip in egg, then in bread crumbs, and fry to a rich brown in plenty of fat, and you will find it to be very delicious.—The Household.

THE NEW METHODIST MISSION HOUSE IN ROME.—Recently we printed an interesting account of the erection and dedication of a Methodist preaching house in Rome, under the auspices of the British Wesleyan Missionary Society. The last London Watchman brings us an account of a diabolical attempt to destroy the new building. On Sunday, while a small company were quietly commemorating the Savior's death, a bomb, which had been placed in the portico, exploded. Though the portico was shivered to fragments, we are thankful to say no one was seriously hurt. Had the explosion happened five minutes later many lives would inevitably have been sacrificed. The authorities have taken active measures to discover the authors of this outrage, and the press of Rome and Italy has condemned it in the strongest possible terms. Signor Sciarelli and his little flock should be remembered in the prayers of God's people.—New York Christian Advocate.

COLD SERMONS.—The Religious Telescope having seen a blacksmith engaged in a fruitless attempt to forge a piece of cold iron, asks:

Who has not seen a minister in the pulpit "hammering away" in a manner strikingly suggestive of beating cold iron? There was no lack of vigor in the laying on. His voice was put to its very best. His gesticulations, with an occasional thump on the pulpit, would have done honor to a swinger of the sledge. He grew earnest, and gave every possible proof of anxiety to reach success. But with all his tugging and pounding it would not go. The iron on his anvil was cold. The sermon, unlike a bar drawn hot from the furnace, was cold and unmanageable, because it came not from a heart glowing with the heat of God's love.

A "MOVING" ADMONITION.—John Wesley says: "I dare no more fret than to curse and swear." This (comments the Intelligencer) is a high attainment in faith and in grace. If it were as general as Wesley's hymns are in their diffusion, the piety of the Christian world would be amazingly advanced. Dare not fret! Why, there are scores of ladies who dare do nothing else on rainy days, and scores of men who are fretful and foolish when things do not move as they want them to go, and yet both these women and men are members of the church, making loud professions of faith in Christ, eminent for zeal on public occasions, and esteemed to be all but saints already by those who profess to know them best, but who don't know them at all. "Dare not fret!"

SUNDAY WORK.—A petition, containing one hundred and sixty thousand signatures, has been sent to the English Parliament, praying that Sunday labor be abolished in her majesty's dominions.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have again to notice a very quiet market in nearly every branch of trade, and increasing dullness in most branches of the wholesale business. With trifling receipts, nothing of any moment has been done in sugar and molasses. Flour has been dull and ruled more in favor of buyers, but without any marked decline. Corn has been in fair request at about previous rates. We noticed in our last report that provisions had been quiet at the previous advance until toward the close, when the market was manifestly weaker, since which the tendency has been still more in favor of buyers, and pork has given way 75c. per barrel.

As yet there has been no such favorable change in the country as would warrant the conclusion that the cotton crop is recovering from the injuries it has received under the floods and rains which have prevailed for some time past. A favorite argument of long-crop men is that last year the accounts were equally gloomy and yet the crop subsequently recovered, and will probably exceed the early estimates 1,000,000 bales. No one doubts the favorable effects that would result from a protracted spell of auspicious weather.

On Saturday the movement commenced under the favorable influence of an advance of ¼c. at New York, which was followed by an improvement of ⅛d. at Liverpool, and led factors to raise their pretensions above the views of buyers, but still the sales summed up 2,400 bales, and the closing quotations showed an advance of ⅛c. in ordinary and ¼c. in other grades. On Monday buyers again came forward with a fair degree of spirit and took 2,450 bales at still higher rates, the quotations showing a further advance of ¼c. in good ordinary and the lower grades, ⅛c. in low middling, and ⅜ to 1c. in middling, the scarcity of which made quotations of it nearly nominal. On Tuesday the market opened firm at previous rates, but after the receipt of the dispatch reporting a falling off of ⅛c. at New York, factors evinced a disposition to meet the demand more freely, at least for the medium grades, and prices were accepted ⅛ to ¼c. under Monday's figures. Good middling sold at 17, 17⅛ and 17¼c., strict at 17⅜ and 17⅝c., and middling at 21c. The business embraced 2,450 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 7,700 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,378,640 bales, against 1,113,632 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,035,104 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 910,975 bales to Great Britain, 300,998 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 209,895 to France.

Ordinary.....	14½ to 15
Good ordinary.....	17 to 17½
Low middling.....	19½ to 19¾
Middling.....	20½ to 21

SUGAR.—The market continues dull. There have not been any sales worthy of note since our last review. Some receipts on Monday and Tuesday sold at 9¼c. for common, 10c. for fair, and 12⅛c. for yellow clarified. We quote 10¾c. for good fair, 11 to 11¼c. for fully fair, 11½ to 11¾c. for prime, 10 to 10½c. for seconds, 12 to 12½c. for yellow clarified, and 13 to 13½c. for white.

PORK.—The market has continued very dull since our last review, and prices have suffered a further material decline. There were sales on Saturday of 200 barrels over-weight mess, in two equal lots, at $16.25, 75 do. at $16.50, and 40 do. at $16.75 per barrel. On Tuesday 50 barrels summer-cured mess sold at $15.75 per barrel. Holders are asking $16.25 per barrel for winter-cured mess, with no buyers at that price.

BACON.—The movement has been only in a limited job way since our last review, and prices have ruled lower. On Tuesday the market was very dull. 3 casks shoulders sold at 7¼c., and 4 do. at 7½c.; 5 and 10 casks clear sides at 9½c., and 90 tierces sugar-cured hams at 15 to 15¼c. per pound. Shoulders are now held at 7¼ to 7½c., clear rib sides 9c., clear sides 9½c., sugar-cured hams 15 to 15½c.

MONETARY.—Gold, 112⅝ to 112⅞.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Dayton, June 21.—The funeral of Mr. Vallandigham, yesterday, was of a most imposing character. The funeral was two miles long, and was composed of persons of all political parties and professions. Business was suspended during the passage of the cortege, and the county, city, and many private buildings were draped. The pall-bearers were A. G. Thurman, S. S. Cox, George E. Pugh, General O. C. Maxwell, John Howard, Samuel Craighead, Elisha Thomson, D. R. Boyer, W. H. Gillespie and D. A. Hawk. Many distinguished gentlemen from all parts of the Union were present. The attendance of Chief Justice Chase was prevented by ill health.

Wheeling, June 21.—Trains are crossing the Ohio over Bellaire bridge.

Sioux City, June 21.—The Indians are troublesome in the neighborhood of Forts Buthold and Bufort. They attack herders, woodchoppers and soldiers. The Indians declare they will not permit the construction of the Northern Pacific railroad.

San Francisco, June 21.—The flood in the Columbia river and tributaries is increasing, and immense damage has been done. The lower part of Portland is under water. The loss to farmers in Clarke county is estimated at $100,000.

Portland elected a full Republican ticket on Monday.

The agents of a traveling menagerie have arrived from Santa Barbara with a female sea lion weighing twelve hundred pounds and suckling a whelp. A sea dog and fur seal animals will be sent overland soon.

Nashville, June 22.—Two passenger trains collided near McEvan's Station, on the Nashville and Northwestern railroad. R. M. Voss was killed. Neither train was damaged.

Philadelphia, June 22.—An explosion has just occurred in the southwest part of the city, caused by an immense fire in the Atlantic Coal Oil Refinery, which is now burning. The explosion was heard several miles.

Philadelphia, June 22.—The fire this evening was caused by the explosion of the city gas works, setting fire to the Atlanta Coal Oil Works, which are now burning terribly. It is said that there are one hundred and fifty thousand barrels of oil, all of which will be destroyed.

Wilkesbarre, June 22.—Some forty miners were temporarily imprisoned in the earth yesterday by the caving in of the Empire Mine, several miles from this place. All were rescued and are expected to recover.

Mobile, June 23.—Noted thieves entered the Southern Express car on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, at six o'clock on Sunday evening last, and threw the safe out, containing a large amount of money. The safe was subsequently found bursted open. The thieves were tracked and two captured here yesterday, and a portion of the money found on them. It is thought that the balance will be recovered. One of the prisoners is an escaped convict, and is a desperate character.

New York, June 24.—The Book Committee of the Methodist Book Concern finally suspended Mr. Lanahan by a vote of 11 to 4.

Washington, June 24.—There has been a serious clash between the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the latter disliking the former's revision of his decisions and the adverse action on his contracts.

San Francisco, June 25.—The consultation between Gov. Haight and the rioters in Amadas county was resultless. The miners are defiant, and determined to prevent work. Governor Haight telegraphed to Sacramento for troops. It is believed that the rioters will disperse on the approach of troops.

Montgomery, Ala., June 26.—The decision of the United States District Court, placing the Alabama and Chattanooga railroad in bankruptcy, was to-day reversed in the United States Circuit Court, at the cost of the petitioner. The road was ordered again into the possession of Stanton & Co.

New York, June 26.—The steamer Premosa, from Havana for Greenock, was wrecked and all on board lost.

San Francisco, June 26.—The troops, by a forced march, surprised the Amador rioters. No resistance offered. The rioters threaten, but have no chance for resistance.

The inhabitants of Amador county generally were delighted at being relieved from the terrorism of the miners, who are in league. The pumps will be started in the mines to-morrow morning, and the miners who may be willing to work will be protected. Adjutant General Cassenau is in command of the troops.

Louisville, June 26.—Last night a young man was shot near this city under circumstances which render it almost certain he was murdered by a jealous rival. During the evening Jacob Rein and Valentine Rabbit, rival suitors for the favor of Miss Lizzie Wirtz, who was engaged to marry Rein, met at the house of the young lady's mother, five miles from this city, and remained until ten o'clock, when Rabbit left.

A quarter of an hour after Rein also left. He had gone about two hundred yards when Miss Wirtz heard a pistol shot, and fearing some harm to her betrothed, ran out of the house and up the road, meeting Rein staggering back; he fell in the road, when she picked him up and carried him in the house, where he died at one o'clock this afternoon. The ball had entered the left side of the abdomen.

Before death Rein made a statement of the affair, declaring Rabbit sprang out from a fence corner and shot him with a pistol. Rabbit has been arrested, but denies having done the bloody deed.

Memphis, June 26.—Major Andrew Jackson Donelson died here at half-past eight o'clock to-night, of cholera morbus, after an illness of a few hours. Major Donelson graduated second in the class of 1822, at West Point; was private secretary to President Jackson during his entire administration; served as minister plenipotentiary to the Republic of Texas, Berlin and the German confederation. Returning home, he edited the Washington Union; then a candidate for Vice President on the Fillmore ticket. During the past ten years he lived quietly on his plantation near Anstralias, Mississippi, taking no part in politics.

Washington, June 27.—Messrs. Scott and Stephenson, Republicans, and Van Trump, Democrat, have been appointed a sub-committee to visit certain portions of North and South Carolina immediately, to inquire into the condition of affairs.

The minority of the Ku-Klux Committee are anxious that the Conservatives secure a full hearing before the sub-committee.

Louisville, June 27.—The steamboat Leonidas, from Cincinnati for New Orleans, on Sunday landed at New Albany, took on a small lot of freight and then rounded out.

When near midway the stream she struck a log, swung around, broke in two and sank. The boat, it is thought, will prove a total loss, but the greater portion of the freight will probably be saved.

The Leonidas was insured at Cincinnati for $11,000, which, the companies claim, will be reduced to about $8,000 on account of the depreciated value of the boat. She was valued last January at $16,000.

The Leonidas left Cincinnati on Saturday, for New Orleans, with a valuable cargo, a portion of which was on a barge.

Just after the accident a fire was discovered on board, which caused great alarm and confusion among the passengers, who were removed to the barge and towed to New Albany by the ferryboat. The sunken steamer lies careened in fifteen feet of water.

Hudson, June 27.—Two hundred members of a congregation excluded a Catholic priest of this city from his church. The priest applied for warrants to arrest the excluders. Serious trouble is apprehended.

FOREIGN.

City of Mexico, June 16, via Matamoras 17.—The United States consul at the City of Mexico says the military officers arbitrarily imprisoned the governor and prefect of Morelia, but the act was disapproved by the general government, and both were released.

Governor Bustamonte died suddenly, June 14. Alfredo Cheais is the new governor.

London, June 21.—The little ship City of Ragusa was spoken in latitude forty-eight, longitude thirty-two.

It is believed the steamer Collingwood, from Liverpool for Bombay, foundered. She had thirty persons aboard.

The steamer Shanghai and Mars, from Hong Kong for Amoy, has been wrecked.

The Agnes Banfield, from Manilla for New York, foundered. The crew were saved.

The population of England and Wales is twenty-two million seven hundred and fifty thousand; Ireland, five million five hundred thousand.

Count Beust stated in the Diet that the relations of Austria with the Western powers were excellent. There is no reason to apprehend a collision with Russia.

It is stated also that twenty-two Austrian bishops have petitioned the Emperor in favor of the re-establishment of the temporal power of the Pope. No answer has been returned.

Rome, June 21.—The Swiss consul asks nearly five million francs to complete armaments.

Berlin, June 21.—The German government complains to the Pope of the attitude of the Catholic party in the German Parliament. Cardinal Antonelli, replying, disavows the responsibility.

Bombay, June 21.—A hurricane has destroyed the cotton crop of the country around the town of Bunda, in the district of Surat. The loss is estimated at £500,000. It will take years for the planters to recover from the blow.

London, June 22.—The Morning Post says there is an understanding between the governments of Germany, Austria and Russia for the preservation of the peace of Europe.

Count of Paris will leave England on Friday, for Paris, and subsequently in company with Duke d'Aumale and Prince de Joinville, will pay a visit to Count de Chambord.

London, June 23.—In the House of Commons to-day two fruitless attacks were made on the royal privileges; one was a proposition to build a much-needed public road through the grounds and by the side of Buckingham palace.

The other was a proposal to sell the unoccupied palaces, such as St. James and Hampton Court, and to apply the proceeds to the reduction of the public debt. Both were rejected.

Gladstone and the Whig members were conspicuous in their devotion to the crown, and their antagonism to the measures proposed.

Kingston, Jamaica, June 23.—Baez troops, numbering one thousand five hundred, defeated an equal number of Cabral's forces at San Juan. Loss very heavy on both sides. Cabral's forces, while retreating, fired the magazine and destroyed nearly the whole town of St. Thomas. Governor St. Clair was killed.

Berlin, June 23.—An imperial demand has been made for the immediate payment of the first installment of the indemnity, which, it was agreed, should be paid in thirty days after the establishment of the authority of the Versaillists.

Serious complications have arisen between Germany and England. The subject is unknown, but severe dispatches are passing between Bismarck and Granville.

Madrid, June 24.—An address to the crown was adopted by 164 to 98, when the resignation of the whole ministry was announced. It is generally thought that Marshal Serrano will be president of the new ministry.

The King has summoned the presidents of the Senate and Chamber of Deputies to a consultation. His majesty has up to the present time refused to accept the resignation of the ministers.

Paris, June 24.—The people are constantly applying to the government for relief. It is estimated that there are two hundred thousand subjects for charity in the city. Labor is scarce, and there is uneasiness relative to the payment of overdue rents.

The returning prisoners all say the German people were friendly, but the authorities treated them harshly.

The Orleans princes will not return to their estates at Chantilly until the Prussians have evacuated the Department of the Oise.

Rio Janeiro, June 25.—The Brazilian chambers have voted for the emancipation of the slaves by a majority of twenty-eight.

London, June 25.—The annual banquet of the Cobden Club came off last evening. The prominent speech of the occasion was made by Earl Granville, secretary of foreign affairs. In the course of his remarks Earl Granville said if definitive proposals in reference to the French treaty of commerce were made to her majesty's government, they would be received with the most friendly consideration. Passing to the treaty of Washington, Earl Granville said Mr. Cobden always desired that America and England should be connected by ties of the warmest character.

The speaker then praised the labors of the Marquis of Ripon and Prof. Montague Bernard in the high commission, and spoke of the settlement of the old question as a great and good work, both in its relations to the past and future, showing how dissensions, which were perhaps the commencement of quarrels, should be settled, leaving behind only friendship and peace.

In continuation of his remarks he alluded to the United States as holding a striking protectionist opinion, but declared his belief that the people of that country were fast coming to the conclusion it is unprofitable to continue the collection of enormous tariffs.

The Earl also spoke in high praise of the efforts of the United States to pay off its debt; and, in conclusion, expressed the hope that the two countries would always be friends.

The Marquis of Ripon made a brief speech, in which he maintained that the treaty of Washington was an equal contract between free neighbors.

Paris, June 26.—The Figaro says the Orleans princes will proceed to Frasdorf, where they will await the decision of the country in silence.

The Constitutionnel urges an election to ratify the policy of M. Thiers without conditions or amendment.

Vertel, lately a member of the Communist Central Committee, has been arrested. Gambetta has arrived in Paris, but leaves to-morrow. He has accepted a candidacy to the Assembly from one of the districts of Paris.

Versailles, June 26.—The Verite says, fearing detection, the Communists and workmen appear to be about decided to refrain from voting.

Madrid, June 26.—The cabinet, which was in council until four o'clock this morning, decided to persist in its resignation, in consequence of the attitude of the majority of the Cortes. It is believed, however, that only Moret and Soroella will ultimately retire.

Berlin, June 27.—The Emperor has decreed a dissolution of the present army combinations in France, and the formation of all the German troops there into one army, to be called the army of occupation of France, Manteuffel commanding.

Versailles, June 27.—The Pope, in reply to an address of sympathy from French Catholics, praises the zeal they exhibit in the cause of the church and of himself, and denounces liberal Catholicism as an evil as formidable as a revolution or a commune.

London, June 27.—Subterranean fires are known to be raging at Sheffield, and fears are entertained it is an old colliery which extends to the very center of the town.

The miners striking in South Wales now number nine thousand. There is no prospect of a settlement.

The Prussian army corps system has been adopted by France.

The flower trade of New York, as we learn from the World, is as follows: The annual trade in cut flowers amounts to about $525,340. From $2 to $50 are charged for bouquets; baskets of flowers cost from $3 to $1,000. One firm received on one day orders to the amount of $300 for flowers for funerals; one cross cost $150, and a crown $125. At the funeral of Mr. Lawrence, which has recently taken place, the flowers cost over $1,000, and those at Mrs. Simons' $800; the funeral of Dr. Ellet was noted for having over $3,000 worth of flowers. Some persons expend about $100 per week for flowers to decorate their parlors. At a recent wedding the canopy over the bride and groom, and the baskets of flowers, cost over $1,000. To people of simple tastes, how wonderfully extravagant this appears; and yet this is one item of fashionable expenditure in New York.

Mind Your Own Business.—Every man has in his own life follies enough, in his own mind troubles enough, in the performance of his duties deficiencies enough, in his own fortune evils enough, without being curious after the affairs of others.

A man who buried a bag of gold dust in Denver, in 1862, valued at $12,000, returned from Idaho in search of it about a week ago, and found it intact.

Mariana District, Alabama Conference.

Mr. Editor: This district is one hundred and twenty-five miles in length and eighty in width, and is equally divided in Alabama and Florida, and embraces a territory whose population numbers about forty thousand persons, among whom there is a Methodist membership of nearly three thousand, or one Methodist to every thirteen inhabitants.

The district is divided into nine pastoral charges—six circuits, two missions and one station. The pastors of these several charges are laboring earnestly and patiently for the upbuilding of the Redeemer's cause, and signs of success are quite manifest, at some points, in the large and attentive congregations, the many who approach the altar for prayer, and the numbers who make application for membership in our church. In many places increased interest in the Sabbath school enterprise is evinced. Successful efforts are being made to introduce the uniform lesson system into some of the schools. Class meetings and prayer meetings still live in many of our churches, and are doing great good.

Upon this "large and difficult work" I have just closed my second round; and, notwithstanding much bad weather and many deep creeks and some ugly rivers, I have succeeded in meeting every Quarterly Conference but one; but then was in due time for the Quarterly Meeting. At every meeting, with two or three exceptions, we held love-feasts, which in many cases were truly refreshing and purifying to our souls. In like manner the Lord's Supper was administered. This is a means of grace which, when rightly used, imparts much strength to the Christian's faith and love to his heart, and should never be neglected nor slighted by the membership of the church.

As regards the finances of the church, I may simply say that we are not what we ought to be. However, there is hope that a better story can and will be told before the close of the year.

One feature worthy of special mention is that, in most parts and instances, the Discipline is calmly yet firmly administered. Thus the church is compacted and strengthened.

Upon the whole, we are looking for a mighty outpouring of the Holy Ghost before the close of the year; and for this grand and glorious result many earnest and true hearts are faithfully praying.

We are also looking to the time of the China Grove camp meeting with great and earnest desires that the Lord will be with us, as heretofore. Already we contemplate its coming with pleasing anticipation, and count upon a goodly number of ministers, who have promised to be with us, besides all the ministers in the district. What a glorious time we may expect when so many holy men are thus assembled.

Having thus briefly referred to some of the more important items of interest relating to the district, permit me to tell some of the trials to which I was subjected during the latter part of the second round. In the first place, I was misdirected, and traveled twenty mighty long miles before I saw a human being. In the second place, I was detained a part of two days at Douglas' ferry, on the Choctawhatchee river, as I then believed, by the negligence of the ferryman. (It was this that caused me to miss the conference above referred to.) When up, the river at this place is about two miles wide, and requires patience and skill in order to cross it. In the third place, I had to encounter drenching, soaking rains; so much so that my feet were wet, from first to last, for nearly four days. In the fourth place, I was detained two whole nights and one long day at Pea river, by reason of its fullness and the torn-up condition of the ferry. In the last place, my horse got so lame he scarce could travel.

Notwithstanding all the mishaps and drawbacks, I have traveled, on horseback and in buggy, more than one thousand miles, preached sixty-six sermons, baptized two adults and twenty-two infants, and received fifteen applicants for church membership.

In conclusion, I would ask an interest in the prayers of God's people.

Sermon-Manufacture in England appears to be on the increase. A writer in the St. Paul's Magazine says that there are now a dozen persons engaged in the trade. They furnish a half-guinea article when great flights of eloquence are desiderated, but the ordinary supply is on much lower terms, averaging 1s. 3d. to 1s. 6d. a sermon, postage paid. Two sermons a week at this rate would amount to £5 4s. a year. In other words, an annual sum of $26 gold would secure to a country parson all needful sermons, without any wear or tear of brain. The writer is of the opinion that this secret help is not put to much use in towns, as the chances of detection there are greater, and the number of sermons demanded of each clergyman, by reason of the numerical superiority of the whole class, is considerably less. It is in the country districts, where the same man has to hammer out two sermons on every Sunday, and on some feast-days in the year, that the sale is largest. Supposing that each broker has fifty clients—and a less number could scarcely pay expenses, and make a remunerative profit—there would be at least one thousand two hundred sermons per Sunday provided by this means. Incidental to this is an amusing note in the last number of the Pall Mall Budget upon the bad consequences of having but a small supply of sermons. It appears that in one of the country churches, where the incumbent has been thirteen years in office, there is a regular church-goer of an arithmetical turn of mind. From careful observation he estimates that "the general stock of sermons possessed by the vicar has been preached forty-eight times, or has made forty-eight revolutions, and that they are already far advanced in the forty-ninth cycle. He considers that he has accurately fixed the date of their composition, which he believes to be between the thirty-fifth and fortieth years of George the Third, or about seventy-five years ago. Two of them, which are known as the 'Astronomical Sermons,' he says, are taken from Derham's Astro Theology, published in 1786, and abound with the errors of that date. Another is supposed to have been written on the occasion of the earthquake at Lisbon, and is known as the 'Trembling Sermon,' being suited to occasions of public calamity. It has already done duty on the occasions of two revolutions in Spain, twice for commercial panics in England, once for the Crimean war, and recently for the Franco-German war, with a few other similar occasions."—Christian Union.

Insects on Orange Trees.—From actual experiment, Mr. G. L. Fusclier, of St. Mary, has found that simply rubbing with grease the bark of the orange trees, when troubled with insects, will effectually kill these troublesome pests, and restore the tree to a healthy condition. This remedy is so easily applied that all should try it, for we find it a general complaint this season that insects are hurting the trees.—Louisiana Sugar Planter.

Pew Rents in Vermont in 1797.—The first meeting house in Wheelock, Vermont, was built in 1797. A curious vote was taken by the town for the purpose of selling off the pews. The record of it reads as follows: "Voted, that the town be at the expense of rum for the vendue of the meeting house pews."—Middlebury (Vt.) Register.

The Methodist Quarterly Review remarks incidentally:

Our view of American High Churchism is that it is simply the pseudo-religious side of a lofty attempt to attract fashionable ladies and sentimental effeminates of the other sex to form a religio-social aristocracy.

ANSWERS TO PRAYER.

"Thy way is in the sea, and thy path in the great waters, and thy footsteps are not known."—PSALMS LXXVII. 19.

I asked for grace to lift me high
Above the world's distressing cares;
God sent me sorrows; with a sigh
I said: He has not heard my prayers.

I asked for light, that I might see
My path along life's thorny road;
But clouds and darkness shadowed me
When I expected light from God.

I asked for peace, that I might rest,
To think my sacred duties o'er;
When lo! such horrors filled my breast
As I had never felt before.

And O, I cried, can this be prayer
Whose plaints the steadfast mountains move?
Can this be heaven's prevailing care?
And, O my God, is this thy love?

But soon I found that sorrow, worn
As Duty's garment, strength supplies,
And out of darkness, meekly borne,
Unto the righteous light doth rise.

And soon I found that fears which stirr'd
My startled soul God's will to do,
On me more real peace conferr'd
Than in life's calm I ever knew.

Then, Lord, in thy mysterious ways
Lead my dependent spirit on,
And, whensoe'er it kneels and prays,
Teach it to say: "Thy will be done!"

Let its one thought, one hope, one prayer
Thine image seek—thy glory see;
Let every other wish and care
Be left confidingly to thee!

Sunday Magazine.

WITHOUT SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

MR. EDITOR: In a communication to the preachers of the Mississippi Conference, through your columns of April 18, Dr. Abbey says: "There were twenty-three circuits reported without Sunday schools," and goes on to name them. I suppose these are the same which are referred to by the committee in their report upon Sunday schools at our last Conference. The committee says: "It is believed they are entirely without schools," and "the lambs of the flock appear to be wholly neglected." Dr. Abbey says: "The Conference said the lambs of the flock appear to be wholly neglected." I suppose he means by adopting the report of the committee. I represented one of the circuits named, and feel it to be my duty to say a few things with reference to the statements as quoted above.

I do not suppose that either of the circuits named are without Sunday schools, but that they have schools, and some of them very flourishing ones. But they are not entirely Methodistic in their organization, but are union in their elements, using the union books, and therefore were not reported. When I received my appointment at the hands of Bishop McTyeire, in Jackson, I went to my work, hoping to find the church fully alive to all her interests, and especially to the Sunday school cause. But what was the fact in the case? When I got to my work I found Sunday schools, and prosperous ones too, organized in our churches, and yet they were not Methodist schools, but union ones. Now, I want to ask, who is to be censured for this state of things? Am I? These schools were organized when I took charge of the work, and in tracing their history I find that some of them were organized before the war, even before I was a preacher at all. Since they were organized many of the preachers of the Conference have been in charge of the circuit who have perpetuated these schools, and built them up and made them strong, and have so deeply engrafted them upon the minds and hearts of the people as to make it out of the question to root them up without sowing strife and discord, and make it impossible to have a school at all. Now is it just that the Conference should let its censures fall upon me for this state of things, with which I had nothing to do, and over which I had no control? I would ask particularly, Is it acting according to the religion which preaches progress for the men who organized and perpetuated these schools to vote for the adoption of a report that would place under censure any one because they had not torn down and scattered the building which they themselves had reared and preserved? I want to ask, Did not the church formerly recommend the organization of union schools when and where Methodist schools could not be organized, and does she not now? If so, why should the Conference or Dr. Abbey censure or speak in any way threateningly with regard to the preachers who had charge of those circuits which were supposed to be without Sunday schools?

I suppose the circuit that I represented was a fair specimen of almost every circuit which was reported deficient in the great cause of Sunday schools. I know one circuit, however, which did not have a Methodist church within its bounds, and the preacher was compelled to use houses belonging entirely to other parties, and had no opportunity or power to organize a Methodist school; but at every appointment, I believe, there was a union school. I do hope the Conference will, at its next session, require every preacher to make a verbal report with reference to the Sunday school interest within his bounds, so that the next committee may have material out of which to make a correct report.

The preachers upon the circuits last year are censured with wholly neglecting the lambs of the flock. The language is: "The lambs of the flock appear to be wholly uncared for." The committee seems to think that because these pastors reported no Methodist Sunday schools that they were not at all concerned about the children of their congregations. I know some of these preachers, who attend Sabbath school frequently, and talk to the children there, and when they go to their pulpits they always try to have something which will attract their young minds and impress their soft hearts, and thus win them to Christ by the declaration of simple yet powerful truth, which they perfectly understand.

The question asked of our preachers in the Book of Discipline, page 77, "Will you diligently instruct the children in every place?" clearly shows that the Sunday school is not the only place where the pastors are to meet and instruct the little ones. If this had been the intention the question would have been, Will you diligently instruct the children in the Sunday school? But this is not the question; but "will you in every place?"—showing that not only in the Sunday school, but everywhere else, we are to think to speak of Jesus to the little ones. It may be on the street, by the roadside, on the playground at home; yea, in all places, circumstances and conditions wherever we find them. "Will you visit from house to house?" is a question propounded to every Methodist preacher when he enters the Conference, and which he answers in the affirmative. But suppose the question was slightly altered, and propounded to those who answered but a few years ago, and you were to ask them, Have you visited from house to house, according to the intention of the question? Do you suppose they would answer in the affirmative? I wonder to what extent the preachers who composed the committee, who inflicted such a heavy censure upon those derelict in duty, as they supposed, upon the subject of Sunday schools, have done this great work? I know a man who falls under the strong language of that report, who visited last year as many as twenty families in one day, and one hundred and forty families in a quarter; and in these families, in all probability, he talked to more children than he did in all the Sunday schools on his work. Again, on pages 104 and 105 of the Discipline, in his (the pastor's) "visits let him pay special attention to the children, and speak to them personally and kindly on experimental and practical godliness, according to their capacity," and to pray earnestly for them and cause them to be faithfully instructed in the nature, design, privileges and obligations of their baptism. Yet when we do all of this, and attend Sabbath school also, it appears to the Committee on Sunday Schools that the lambs of the flock are wholly uncared for.

TRUTHFULNESS is a corner-stone in character, and if it be not firmly laid in youth, there will ever after be a weak spot in the foundation.

THE PRESENT STATE OF RELIGION

MR. EDITOR: I have recently arisen from a perusal of the very interesting and able sermon of Dr. Pierce on the death of our lamented Bishop Andrew. He portrays in truthful colors the fearful state of religion at the present day; and how can any one who loves souls, the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ and his word, sit unmoved when this alarming panorama is unfolded before him? Hear the Bishop:

"Fidelity to souls and to God compels me to say that, in these days, people get religion too easily—religion, so called. I am awfully afraid it is no religion at all; at least a religion outside a saving power, divine communion and Christ-likeness. Conversion never goes deeper than conviction for sin. The heart may be punctured, not broken. The spirit may relent and stop short of contrition. A shallow repentance will lead to a superficial experience, irregular and unreliable; and even church membership, under these circumstances, will be merely a sentimental association, sacred only by contrast, having no authority of law over the conscience, and no constraining sense of responsibility in view of its duties and services!"

The italics are the writer's. I emphasize his language, as no doubt he did when uttering it. Is not this portraiture of the present state of spirituality lamentably true, not only in the Methodist Church, but all? I most devoutly wish that all the members of Christ's kingdom everywhere could read this discourse, and lay it up in their hearts, as well as on their files—read it and re-read it, again and again, until its great truths alarm them, and cause them to seek for that repentance that needeth not to be repented of.

I am an old man and an old Methodist; was taught to work in the old harness—class meetings, prayer meetings, love-feasts, quarterly conferences and meetings; thought nothing of going long distances to quarterly meetings, to enjoy the soul-stirring experiences of brothers and sisters, as simply told in love-feasts, when and where God converted them, and filled their souls with joy and peace; the holy communion with the Savior at the sacramental board; to feast on the word of God, as delivered by his messengers on such occasions; to join in the labors of the altar in pointing heart-broken penitents to their resource, the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world. "But alas! alas!" says our beloved Bishop, "I tell you that our young people, and old people too, in many places, are getting away from the doctrines of the Bible and the experience of the fathers." "Methodism," meaning no doubt original, "is intended to be God's witness of a simple, hearty worship, a living, spiritual, felt experience, a holy, self-sacrificing, laborious activity." That's it, that's it, my brother. The truth, and the whole truth! Well, it may be asked, what's the matter? Why is this thus? The word of God will tell us. We have got out of the old paths, or, in other words, out of the old harness! "Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls."—Jeremiah vi, 16. God sees and explains the thing. We of the old school look back with pleasure on past experience, and are satisfied that the original plans of Methodistic labor were fully recognized by God. He delighted to dwell among them. They entertained neither doubt nor fear of success. They felt assured that the Lord of Sabaoth would be among them, and he was.

We must get back into the old paths, or Methodism, with its former power and vitality, is gone, gone, sir. I am not disposed to say that religion consists in the cut of the coat, the width of a hat-brim or the peculiar shape of a bonnet. But I will say that these things used to be good indices to a man's sincerity or height of resolve. When he or she was willing to throw off the fashions of the world, and to take upon them the peculiar garb by which a Methodist brother or sister was recognized, we had good reason to believe that they had forsaken all things for Jesus, and their future walk and conversation corroborated the belief. But how are you going to recognize a Methodist now? You cannot by their dress, nor hardly by their walk and conversation. A stranger cannot recognize one in the sanctuary, for, as old Bro. Griffin used to say, "they are mixed up among the squirrel-eaten corn." Young Methodist sisters, seated among the scornful, cannot be distinguished from them. This is the state of affairs, lamentable as it may be. I have no doubt, sir, but there was a shout in hell, as well as other places, when attendance on class meetings was no longer made a test of membership in our church. In old disciplinary days if a brother or sister neglected to attend at class meetings for three successive meetings, without a good excuse, they were dropped. Such should be the rule again. My dear brother, of what avail is a dead, inoperative, cold and indifferent member of the church, too many of which character we have among us? "Their unhallowed hands," continues Bishop Pierce, "should never be allowed to touch the ark of the covenant, either to take out or to put in." They are a clog to religious progress—dead flies in the ointment! I am fully in favor of re-establishing the old customs and landmarks; and if such members will not conform, let them slide. It were better for the church for such persons to die out of the pale of the church and be lost, if lost they must be, than to die in it unconverted and spiritually dead! Ten living members, who are full of the holy fire, are worth more to the church and the world than any host of mere dead hangers-on that you can number. There is more desire for numerical strength among us—as is notoriously the case among other denominations that could be mentioned—than for spiritual life and power. Is it not so? Then let us no longer have this enormous sin and responsibility attached to us. God save our beloved church from such a state of affairs. Amen.

HEAT FROM THE STARS.

A London paper remarks that it would scarcely be thought by most persons that the stars supply the earth with an appreciable amount of heat. Even on the darkest and clearest night, when the whole heavens seem lit up with a multitude of sparkling orbs, the idea of heat is not suggested by their splendor. It will, therefore, seem surprising to many that men of science should assign no inconsiderable portion of our terrestrial heat-supply to those distant twinkling lamps. It is not many years since Prof. Hopkins, of Cambridge, went even further, and expressed the belief that if the earth's atmosphere were but increased some thirteen thousand yards in height, so as to have increased power of retaining the warmth poured upon it from outer space, we might do without the sun altogether, so far as our heat-supply is concerned. As a glass house collects the sun's heat, and renders it available during the time that the sun is below the horizon, so he held that the additional layer of air would serve to garner the warmth of the stars in quantities sufficient for all our requirements.

But until lately all these views, however plausible they might have seemed, had not been founded upon facts actually observed. An English astronomer, Mr. Huggins, has recently published the results of a series of experiments with the galvanometer, which have reduced to a certainty what was only a probability before. The story of his experiments is very interesting, and too long for this column. The comparative amount of heat thrown off by Arcturus, Regulus, Pollux and other brilliant stars was definitely ascertained.

These inquiries are singularly interesting, the more so when we remember that the full moon, which outshines so manyfold the stellar glories of the heavens, gives us either no warmth whatever, or so little that no experiments have ever certified us that we received any from her. Mr. Huggins has tried the moon with his powerful galvanometer, with results which are not by any means satisfactory or accordant, but which are sufficient to show that we receive scarcely a trace of heat from the pale-faced orb.—Church Advocate.

Reminiscences of Rev. J. I. E. Byrd.

NUMBER FIVE.

There was much of heroic adventure and knight-errantry among the primitive Methodist preachers of this country, unknown to those of the present day, who are smothered up in little town stations, or sighing and groaning beneath the burden of a large four-weeks' circuit, made up of four little appointments only a few miles apart, which have to be filled on the Sabbath once a month. Ira Byrd's circuit in 1824 will illustrate our meaning. He had an uncle by the name of William S. Byrd, who seemed to be about his own age, and who was a prominent and useful layman in the church, and, being a man of means, was liberal in its support. He thought a great deal of "Cousin Ira," as he called him, and contributed in various ways to his support, that he might continue actively engaged in the work of the ministry. "Uncle William" determined to move to the New Purchase, and of course "Cousin Ira" must accompany him. They settled near each other in the neighborhood of Sweetwater, in Copiah county, in the winter of 1823–4. W. S. Byrd assisted Ira to put up his log houses, open a little farm, and make other necessary preparations to enter his circuit early in 1824. He was assigned that year to Claibourne circuit, with Lewellen Leggett as his colleague. It was a six-weeks' circuit, and had about thirty regular preaching places to be visited every round, with any number of bridgeless and ferryless streams to be crossed. The circuit embraced the whole of Warren, Claibourne and Jefferson counties, and portions of Adams, Franklin and Copiah counties, and extended from the vicinity of Natchez to the open woods near the lower bluffs on Yazoo river. A large circuit for a blind man to travel; yet he did it with great regularity, except a short break in mid-summer, occasioned by an attack of fever. It was in this circuit that the writer was born of the flesh and of the Spirit, and here he first entered upon the great work of the gospel ministry. My parents were in the grave; my sister and younger brothers had been scattered among our relations, and my guardian had reluctantly given me up, without pecuniary resources, to prepare, as best I could, for the great work to which I told him I believed God had called me. I retired to the house of my faithful friend and patron, Rev. Dr. B. W. M. Minter, to await the coming of Bro. Byrd, where I spent several weeks in constant study and prayer and in attending the various meetings of the church. I think it was in February, 1824, I met Bro. Byrd at Spring Hill church, in Jefferson county. Upon our introduction he asked me to walk with him into the pulpit, and immediately took me through a searching examination as to the soundness of my conversion, the genuineness of my call to the ministry, and my orthodoxy as a Methodist, both as to doctrine and discipline. Having answered his question satisfactorily, and he having legal information that I was a licensed exhorter, he said we might safely proceed. He proposed, as he had a strong and full voice and mine was of course that of an untrained youth, that I should lead in the exercises. Take your own course, said he, without restraint. Give a general exhortation, or expound and enforce any passage of Scripture you please. I had some liberty in going through with my part of the exercises, and my heart was warmed under the prayer and sermon of Bro. Byrd that followed. Here our personal acquaintance commenced, I trust, never to end. We at once bleuded like two kindred drops. He became my theological preceptor and counselor in all things, and I became his armor-bearer: did his public and private reading, hunted up the texts he wished to preach on and repeated them—giving the book, chapter and verse—until he memorized them. He gently led me into the practical discharge of all the duties of a traveling Methodist preacher. I traveled with him round his big circuit several months, and many were the precious and profitable times we had together, both in public and private.

What the writer may say about himself in this number is only intended to exhibit the tenderness and care and wisdom with which Bro. Byrd nursed into the itinerancy a very unpromising case. As I was not a regular employe on the circuit and had to depend on my own pecuniary resources, I would occasionally take a job of work for the purpose of earning a little money to replenish my wardrobe. In the crop-making season I engaged very laboriously in farm work about two months. Having completed my engagement and the summer being well advanced, I determined to retire until the cotton-picking season came on, and give myself exclusively to my preliminary studies for the ministry. The change from a very active to a sedentary life in midsummer was too sudden. My physical nature became torpid. Sixteen hours devoted to close study in every twenty-four over-strained my undisciplined brain, and my spirits drooped. A deep gloom settled down upon me. After having admitted a divine call to the ministry, I felt that I had none of the implied talents for the work either natural or acquired. My gloom increased to absolute melancholy. As a Christian I still felt that I was in the favor of God, and would not be lost in case of death, and I earnestly desired to die, that I might escape forever from this trouble about preaching. When I would lay down my books and visit and pray with the sick, or fill an appointment for public exhortation I was temporarily relieved; but as soon as I became sedentary and resumed my studies, my excessive depression of spirits returned. There was more of a physical than moral cause for this unhappy state of mind, but neither myself nor any one else took this view of it. The impression was that it was wholly mental and spiritual conflict. My faithful preceptor, Ira Byrd, in sweeping around his large circuit came to my place of retirement and proposed that I should resume my place as his traveling companion to which I readily consented. Colonel P. B. Griffin, who was then preparing to enter the local ministry, said "an impenetrable gloom has settled down on the mind of the youth, as indicated by his countenance." As Bro. Inglis held my wrist in his fingers he said: "His pulse indicates not only great depression of spirits, but also great lassitude of body." Our next appointment was at Rocky Spring. We crossed Big Bayou Pierre near the plantation of Jonathan McCaleb, and as we were threading our way along a narrow path, which led into the old Natchez Trace, I purposely rode far in the rear, as solitude was most congenial to my state of mind. As we emerged into the main road, where two could ride abreast, Bro. Byrd reined up his horse and called aloud: "John, ride up here by my side." I obeyed instantly, when he resumed: "John, you profess to be a child of God and an heir of heaven, and yet you let the devil make sole-leather of you (Bro. Byrd was a shoemaker), and ride rough-shod over you at his will. Come, wake up from this despondency and assert your rights as a child of God. Resist the devil and he will flee from you. I want you to preach at Rocky Spring today, and I apprise you of it that you may be adjusting your subject." The conversation ceased and I fell in the rear again, but with a new train of thoughts and feelings. "Yes, I am a child of God, and as such I will assert my heaven-descended privileges. Get thee behind me, Satan." By God's immediate help, in response to a recovered faith, I at once emerged from the midnight gloom. After private prayer we entered the pulpit at Rocky Spring, and I took a text, and for three-quarters of an hour preached with a fluency and power unknown to me before. That dark night was ended, and glorious heavenly day was my rich inheritance. In after life Bro. Byrd and myself often recurred with exhilarating pleasure to the "sole-leather case," as we termed it.

FAILURE.

The Lord, who fashioned my hands for working,
Set me a task, and it is not done;
Tried and tried since the early morning,
And now to westward sinketh the sun!

Idle the task that was kindly given
To one so little and weak as I—
Somehow my strength could never grasp it,
Never, as days and years went by.

Hours around me cheerfully tolling,
Showed me their work as they passed away;
Filled were their hands to overflowing,
Proud were their hearts, and glad and gay.

Laden with harvest spoils they entered
In at the golden gate of their rest;
All their sheaves at the feet of the Master,
Found their places among the blest.

Happy be they who strove to help me,
Failing ever in spite of their aid!
Ah, would their love have borne me with them,
But I was unready and sore afraid.

Now I know my task will never be finished,
And when the Master calleth my name,
The Voice will find me still at my labor,
Weeping beside it in weary shame.

With empty hands I shall rise to meet him,
And, when he looks for the fruits of the years,
Nothing have I to lay before him
But broken efforts and bitter tears.

Now when he calls I fain would hasten—
Mine eyes are dim and their light is gone;
Oh I am as weary as though I carried
The burden of beautiful work well done.

Still fold my empty hands on my bosom,
Meekly thus in the shape of his cross;
And the Lord, who made them so frail and feeble,
Maybe will pity their strife and loss.

AN EDUCATED MINISTRY.

Mr. Editor: I noticed some time ago a controversy on this subject between two writers in the Advocate. It struck me that the difference of opinion was more apparent than real. They both favored an educated ministry, and doubtless either would have taken the ground, in view of the triumphs of Methodism in all the past, that no one but a well educated man should enter the ministry of our church. From the very first Methodism has employed the unlearned as well as the learned in her ministry. The great founder of Methodism was early taught a most impressive lesson of that extraordinarily sagacious and practical woman—his mother. When Mr. Wesley, with his great educational attainments and high notions of church order, was horrified by hearing of the preaching of one of his uneducated laymen, and was about to silence him summarily, she, being advised of the wonderful results of his ministry, said to him: "Let Thomas Maxfield was as evidently called of God to preach as he was." And thus Mr. Wesley, through his mother, was divinely directed to employ, in the great revival of primitive Christianity, those men of tremendous power, though unlearned, that shook the gates of hell—Thomas Maxfield, John Nelson and others.

But the recognition of the divine guidance, as suggested by his brother, he was only acting upon the plan of the Divine Master, who, while he called the learned Paul, who was able to stand before kings and on Mars' hill, and electrify by his eloquence and learning the great and learned, called also the unlearned Peter, that son of thunder who, whilst the vast multitude assembled from every nation under heaven, preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, and three thousand souls were converted under one sermon. So in all the periods of Christianity and of Methodism God has honored in an extraordinary manner the ministrations of unlearned men, but wonderfully endowed with the gifts of the Spirit, and mighty in the Scriptures; and it would be well for the church, while reaching after the higher developments of the highest intellectual training, never to lose sight of this great fact, so patent in the history of Christianity, and so wonderfully manifested in the history of Methodism. Let our church see to it that she does not, by ecclesiastical tampering in the manufacture of Ministers, interfere with her time-honored and God-honored plan of saving souls from death. God has blessed her with the most effective ministry in the world since apostolic times. Let her continue to use the personnel that the Master places at her disposal, both the learned and unlearned.

While educated men, endowed with the Holy Ghost, occupy a most commanding position in the church of God, and wield a tremendous power for good, we have all seen the greatest imbeciles in the ministry whose intellectual training was complete. So, on the other hand, the most useful and successful ministers among us have been like some of the apostles, "ignorant and unlearned men" in the estimation of the world; but eminently practical, close observers, well versed in the knowledge of men, and, above all, richly endowed from on high. I suppose it was in this sense that the revered Dr. Winans spoke of the effectiveness of ignorant ministers—uneducated in the popular sense, but taught of God, and mighty in the pulling down of the strongholds of sin. I know that this view was entertained by this venerated and powerful and self-educated minister, as also by his life-long friend, Dr. Drake, both educated in the primitive Methodist and apostolic theological institute—the itinerancy — and both fine specimens of the effectiveness of this the best theological school on earth—names dear to the Mississippi Conference, and never to be forgotten.

Strossmayer in the Ecumenical.

The deeper I go, my venerable brethren, in my examination, the more I am convinced that in the Holy Scriptures there is no appearance of the primacy of the son of Jonas. While we teach that the church is built on St. Peter, St. Paul, whose authority cannot be questioned, tells us in his Epistle to the Ephesians (ii, 20) that it is "built upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." The same apostle is so far from believing in the supremacy of Peter that he openly rebukes those who say: "I am of Paul and I of Apollos" (First Corinth., i, 12) in the same terms as those who would say: "I am of Peter." If, then, the latter apostle was vicar of Jesus Christ, St. Paul would have taken good care not to censure so violently those who held to his colleague.

The same Apostle Paul, enumerating the offices of the church, mentions apostles, prophets, evangelists, teachers, pastors. Is it credible, venerable brethren, that St. Paul, the great teacher of the Gentiles, would have left out the greatest of all the offices—the papacy—if the papacy had been founded by divine institution? It seems to me that this omission would have been no more possible than a history of this council that should make no mention whatever of his holiness, Pius the Ninth. (Voices in the assembly: Silence, heretic! silence!)

The Apostle Paul in not one of his letters addressed to the various churches, makes any mention of the primacy of Peter. If this primacy had existed, if in short the church had had a supreme head, infallible in teaching, would the great teacher of the Gentiles have omitted all mention of it? Nay! He would have written a long epistle on this important, this vital subject. When, therefore, he is rearing the edifice of Christian doctrine, is it possible that he leaves out the foundation and the key-stone? Now, unless the apostolic church is to be reckoned heretical, which we neither wish nor dare to say, we are constrained to acknowledge that the church has never been more fair, more pure, nor more holy than in the days when it had no Pope. (Voices: It is false! It is false!)

Not in the writings of St. Paul, nor in those of St. John or St. James, have I found any trace or germ of the papal power. St. Luke, the historian of the missionary labors of the apostles, is silent on this vital point. The silence of these holy men, whose writings are part of the canon of the inspired Scriptures, is as inexplicable, if Peter had been Pope, as that of Thiers would have been if he had omitted the title of emperor in the history of Napoleon Bonaparte.

But the thing which astounds me beyond all expression is the silence of Peter himself. If he had been what we say—the vicar of Christ upon earth—he must have known it. If he knew it, how does it happen that he never once—not one solitary time—acted as Pope? He might have done it on the day of Pentecost, when he pronounced his first discourse; but he did not. He might have done it at the Council of Jerusalem; but he did not. He might have done it at Antioch; but he did not. He might have done it in his two epistles to the churches; but he did not. Imagine such a Pope as this, O my venerable brethren!

If, then, we would maintain that Peter was Pope, it necessarily follows that we must maintain that he was not aware of it at the time. I put it to any man with a head to think and a mind to reflect, whether these two suppositions are credible.

Revelations from the Catacombs.

ANTIQUITY OF INFANT BAPTISM.

In looking over the many interesting inscriptions which have been copied from the tombstones of the buried Christians in the catacombs of Rome, I was struck with one which reads thus: "Flavia Iovina, who lived three years and thirty days. A Neophyte—in peace." And what is there remarkable in this inscription? this epitaph of a child three years old? Much every way, but chiefly because the word "Neophyte" is to be examined in the light of history. A "Neophyte," according to the united testimony of the earliest church fathers, was a convert from heathenism—i. e., one that was "born again." Now we all know that (as Dr. Neander says in his Church History, vol. 1, page 198) the church fathers, especially Irenæus, use the words born again or born of God, to denote baptism. Baptism and the new birth are used synonymously. So, then, this simple word "Neophyte," as applied to a three-year old child, speaks in thunder tones in favor of the antiquity of infant baptism. The fact is, it rises to the dignity of a demonstration that infants were baptized in the second century. Neander says: "In Irenæus the new birth and baptism are intimately connected, and it would be difficult for one to imagine anything else than baptism as meant by the new birth." That the baptism of infants was practiced in the Christian church within fifty years, or even less, of the year A. D. 96 (the year of St. John's death) there can be no reasonable doubt. We all know that before the middle of the third century, Cyprian, the famous Bishop of Carthage, who was born A. D. 190, was the first who objected to infant baptism, and we all know the grounds on which he opposed it. His views of baptism were wrong; he did not want persons baptized young for fear they might relapse into sin, and as he knew no other way to procure remission of sins than baptism, the relapsed sinner would be lost!

But however important the corroborative testimony of the epitaph of a child buried in the second century may be in favor of infant baptism, we have other and even more direct testimony to the fact in the writings of Irenæus. This good man, with Ignatius, was a catechumen of Polycarp, who was a disciple of St. John. The probability is that he was baptized in his infancy, for there is no information of his baptism in adult age. Let us see what he says on the subject of infant baptism. Speaking of Christ, he says: "He came to redeem all; all, I say, who are born again into God through him (i. e., through baptism,) infants, children, boys, youths and the aged. Wherefore he passed through every age; he became an infant to infants, sanctifying infants; he became a child among children, to sanctify those of his age, giving them at the same time an example of piety, of justice, of obedience; and for young men he became a young man, to set them an example, and to sanctify them to the Lord." Here we have the clearest evidence that not only children (Parvuli) but infants (infantes) were baptized early in the second century, and that by those who had received their theological instructions from the inspired apostles of our Lord. What stronger historical proof do we need? The single inscription we have referred to alone is taken from "The Catacombs of Rome," a book published by the American Sunday School Union. Bishop Kipp has published an account of a visit he paid to the catacombs, in which he gives a number of inscriptions of baptized infants, some under a year old.

As our Baptist brethren are constantly declaring that we have no antiquity for infant baptism, I thought it my duty to direct attention to these inscriptions in the catacombs.—R. W. in. Lutheran Observer.

King James was a great swearer, as well as hunter. One Sunday, driven from sport by a tempest, he took refuge in a church, where his muddy attire secured him a poor place. The parson read his text, pushed on the sermon, and then made a discursive launch against swearing. The King invited him to dinner, and asked an explanation. "If it pleases your majestie," says he, "when you took the paines to come so far out of your way to heare me, I thought it very good manner for me to steppe a little out of my text to meete with your majestie." "By my saul, mon," says the King, "and thou hast mette with me so as never mon did."

SCHOOLS IN TURKEY.

From a report just presented to government (says an article in the School Board Chronicle) we glean some interesting information as to the existing state of school education in various parts of Turkey, which will be interesting to our readers. At Calymnos, an island of the Sporades, there have been hitherto four schools for boys and two for girls, the first being attended by seven hundred and fifty and the second by two hundred and fifty scholars. In the course of last year, however, and in consequence, as the Calymniotes say, of the administrative reforms which have curtailed their revenues, they have been obliged to close two of the schools for boys and one for girls, reducing to one-half the number of scholars. It is interesting to read that the Calymniotes have sent to Europe several of their children to learn medicine, and one of them has returned to his native place, and is now the flourishing doctor of the community. At Castle Rosso, another island of the Sporades, there have just been established two schools, which are attended by two hundred children, and are purely devoted to the aims of education. At Cassos, a similar island, however, there are no communal schools, as in the case of the other Sporades, but there are three private schools which are conducted on a thoroughly monetary principle, no scholars being admitted except those who are able to pay the full terms existing in the various establishments. It is somewhat singular, however, that despite their educational obstructions, the inhabitants of Cassos have generally more knowledge than the inhabitants of the other islands, which fact is to be attributed to their constant voyages and intercourse with foreigners. In the town of Cos and the adjacent villages there are as many as six schools for boys and one for girls. The number of boys who usually attend these schools amounts to six or seven hundred; but the girls, on the contrary, do not appear to have so earnest a desire to benefit by the acquisition of education, and the schools devoted to their advantage are attended by only about sixty scholars. The island of Halki, which has a population of three thousand souls, possesses two schools for boys and one for girls; and there are one hundred and fifty scholars in the first, and fifty in the second. The island of Leros—a place where there are still negro servants, the inhabitants purchasing slaves in Egypt—possesses two schools for boys, with two hundred and sixty scholars, and one for girls, with one hundred scholars. A school has also been recently established at Nikaria, but the number of children who attend it is very small. The Nikariotes say that to make charcoal—one of their most important occupations—no reading or writing is required. At the island of Nissiros, too, education does not appear to be much valued. They have there only one school, and the number of scholars is about one hundred and forty, a few of whom are girls. At Patmos there is one school which is attended by about one hundred children. Scarpantos has no school; it cannot support one. The inhabitants assert that they have not the means to keep a schoolmaster; but notwithstanding their poverty, they have a bishop who exacts from them annually a sum of about sixteen thousand five hundred piastres, which equals in our money about £150.

A Prayerless Father.—"There was one little circumstance," says a gentleman in relating his religious feelings on his admission to a Christian church, "that more deeply impressed me with the importance of being a Christian than any other. It was asked by my little son Henry, a little boy of four years old. My wife and myself had taken great pains to teach little Henry verses of Scripture and hymns, and he never went to bed without saying his little prayer: 'Now I lay me down to sleep.' One night, tired and fretful, he refused to do it, and while I was insisting upon it, telling him how wrong it was not to pray, he looked up in my face and said in childish simplicity: 'Why do you want me to pray, pa? I never see you pray.'

"No sermon I had ever heard, no book or tract I had ever read, so impressed me as this rebuke from my child. I determined then, by the help of God, to lead a different life, and henceforth teach my children by example as well as precept."

That father is now a follower of the Lord Jesus, an active member of the church, and his happy family gather around the domestic altar.—Presbyterian.

A London correspondent of the Boston Advertiser writes that in the Strangers' Gallery of the House of Commons he has met at various times an East Indian prince, two Japanese, a Turk and Mexican of Indian blood, a Caffre chief and a Hottentot, all but the last two in their national dress.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The work among the Ojibways, where are 4 missionaries and 8 churches, with several teachers and helpers, reports the addition of 98 new converts to the churches during the past year.

Of the 369 collegiate institutes in the United States 18 are in New England and 139 in the Northwest; 60 are Methodist, 47 Roman Catholic, 28 Presbyterian, 19 Congregational, and 16 Episcopal.

Collection for the Pope.—In all of the Roman Catholic churches of New York and Brooklyn the annual collection for the Pope was taken on the fourth instant. At St. Peter's church, in Barclay street, about $1,000 was received.

The "Sabbath question" is a serious one to converts—e. g., in China. To leave work that day in many cases causes dismissal from employment, and the loss, to human view, of all chance for even a livelihood. Industrial laws and habits in China are not adjusted to the Sabbath, as here. This question, Mr. Blodget writes, is one of great difficulty.

The following are the religious statistics of Germany: Protestants, 24,253,018; of whom 20,473,000 belong to the old North German Confederation, 1,233,990 to Bavaria, 1,200,300 to Wurtemburg, 558,560 to Hesse, 472,258 to Baden. Catholics, 14,551,651; of whom 7,880,000 are in Prussia, 3,176,400 in Bavaria, 933,476 in Baden, 533,695 in Wurtemburg. Jews and others, 1,327,330.

As will be remembered, Japan was first opened to Christian missions and foreign trade by Commodore Perry's expedition. Another of similar kind is soon to leave China for Corea, commanded by Admiral Rogers, of the United States Navy. Corea alone along that coast remains closed to foreign commerce. A letter has been sent to its king, through the Chinese authorities, announcing the projected expedition and its thoroughly pacific character. Of that nation our churches must soon make a new mission field. If governments and natives open the way, can they safely delay to enter?

The alarm for our missions in China, growing out of the recent proclamation forbidding everything contrary to Confucius, forbidding the presence of female missionaries, etc., has been gradually subsiding under subsequent information from those at work there. They seem to apprehend no serious interruption. We get word, too, from Hon. Mr. Low, American minister, of his confidence that the government can be held firmly to all treaty stipulations. But we must do as we would be done by. If Chinamen are refused redress in the courts of California, and stoned to death in the streets of San Francisco, without restraint or apology by our government, we must expect similar handling for Americans, whether traders or missionaries, in China.

Rev. Henry Boehm, the oldest itinerant minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, reached his ninety-seventh birthday on Thursday, June 8. Though for two or three days previous he had been temporarily prostrated, he was able to be up and receive on that day the hearty congratulations and remembrances of his friends. He is stopping at present with a niece on Staten Island. On Thursday his faithful daughter, Elizabeth, with her excellent husband, Mr. S. C. Emory, visited him, and during the interview read to him from the Christian Advocate the lengthy account of the decease and funeral of the late Bishop Clark. The venerable father was deeply interested and greatly rejoiced in the blessed Christian experience there narrated. Father Boehm preached his first sermon seventy-two years ago. He is enjoying a most delightful old age. New York Christian Advocate.

In a very remarkable article in L'Eglise Libre on "Religion under the Commune," Eugene Bersier says: "France owes her ruin to the same causes which have produced that of Italy, of Spain, of Mexico, and of the South American States." And after pointing out the baneful influence of the priesthood, he says: "Enter a communal school kept by the Sisters or the Brothers of Christian Doctrine. Certain studies—drawing, arithmetic or needle-work, for example—are taught exceedingly well; but look through the books of history, see the images of saints on the walls, take an account of the education by which men and women of this age are to be formed, and you will comprehend what is the gulf between the church and democratic modern society. This is so true that, when party orators wish to cite to the people models of great and liberal citizens, they are forced to name the Washingtons, Wilberforces and Lincolns."

The thirteenth General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church met at Xenia, Ohio, May 24. The Rev. R. A. McAyeal was chosen moderator. The Board of Home Missions reported $26,379.03 receipts; $27,374.32 disbursements; 154 stations aided. They ask for $35,000 for the coming year. The Board of Foreign Missions reported $48,344.65 received; $43,787.34 expended; 4 missions; 22 stations; 37 missionaries in active service; 71 native helpers; 19 churches, with 351 communicants; 21 schools, with 2,113 scholars; $2,170.50 contributed in the missions. The Board of Education have received $6,967.35, and have aided 37 young men. The Board of Publication have procured lots in Pittsburg, on which it is proposed to erect suitable buildings, the whole to cost $45,000. The Committee on the Metrical Version of the Psalms reported progress. The report of the Committee on Sunday Schools brought out some interesting facts, among which is that one-fourth of the additions to the church have been from these schools.

Another grief has befallen the sovereign pontiff. It has been discovered that he had covered up by pardon, and, as he had hoped, the destruction of the papers in the case, a process in the court of the vicar-general, in 1868 and 1869, of some of the inferior clergy who were engaged in the manufacture of relics out of the bones of animals, and in forging the papers necessary to authenticate them. Unfortunately for him and the peace of the holy church, the papers were not destroyed, and have been published by the permission of the excommunicated Victor Emanuel. His holiness was greatly agitated on finding that this little speculation had received a scandalous publicity, which would go far to discredit all the other relics in the whole world. He expressed his great regret that he had pardoned the guilty parties, and wished he had let the law take its course. We fear, however, that his sorrow was not of a godly sort, and rather partook of that of Prior's thief at the Greve:

"My repentance will scarce save my bacon;
It was not that I murdered, but that I was taken!"

Religious freedom in France is still increasing, and will probably grow into a custom which will not be much changed by any coming legislation. A letter to Evangelical Christendom, of London, says: "For a long series of years religious liberty was attacked and in some cases suppressed in the French empire. Now, thank God, for several months past—that is to say, since the fall of Napoleon the Third and the proclamation of the republic—the exercise of religious liberty is much more easy and free from restrictions. It no longer depends upon the tyrannical requirements of a prefect, or the arrogant opposition of a mayor, acting in obedience to the persecuting advice of a popish priest. The Bible colporteurs are free to go from place to place to offer for sale copies of the Holy Scriptures. Protestants may print, publish and everywhere circulate religious books and tracts. Pastors and evangelists have the right to convene religious meetings, to open places of worship, to teach and preach wherever they think proper, without meeting with any obstacles on the part of public functionaries. The vexations devices which used to be resorted to under the imperial regime, under the tyrannical influence of the Romish clergy, are now put a stop to. The bishops and monks, the cures and priests, can no longer exercise the same despotism."

The Southern Baptist Convention met at St. Louis on May 11. The Rev. P. H. Mell, D. D., was elected president, E. C. Williams and Truman Sumner, secretaries. The Board of Foreign Missions (headquarters, Richmond, Virginia,) reported three mission stations in China, one in Africa, one in France and one in Rome, all prospering. Expenditures, $24,295.84; receipts, $27,254.51. The Domestic Mission Board (headquarters, Marion, Alabama,) reported 134 missionaries, 6,085 Sunday school teachers and scholars, 882 baptisms, and $27,000 expended. Besides these, there were reported, as results of the work of the boards of the different State conventions, 150 missionaries employed and 3,588 baptisms. Expenditures, $41,744.35. Further, 17 missionaries are supported by district associations, who baptized 117 people. Successful labors were reported among the Chinamen on the Mobile and Chattanooga railroad. The Sunday School Board (headquarters, Memphis, Tennessee,) publish a semi-monthly and a monthly paper. Receipts, $19,186.98. Much attention was given by the convention to the subjects of the education of the freedmen and of the Chinese laborers. Many Northern Baptists were present as visitors. Excellent feeling prevailed. The editor of the Standard, of Chicago, says of the body, "If allowed to pass a criticism, we should say the sectional spirit is stronger than is wholesome," but hopes that the Northern and Southern boards may co-operate, though formal union between them may not be for the best.

HANDSOMELY DONE.—The Rev. Dr. Palmer's congregation—the First Presbyterian church of this city—have granted him a vacation of four months, and placed a special fund of $3,000 to his credit—the voluntary contribution of members of his congregation. The recipient of these testimonials of considerate affection is one of the most faithful and laborious of preachers and pastors, and richly merits the high appreciation of his people.

THE CATALOGUE of the Mansfield Female College, for 1870-1, exhibits this institution as in a prosperous and growing condition. We shall probably soon have a full account of the examination and commencement exercises, which were to begin on the twenty-second instant. There were one hundred and seventeen matriculates this year, and we doubt not the approaching fall session will open with a much larger number. This institution is the property of the Louisiana Annual Conference, and President Stuart is one of our most able, experienced and successful educators.

A WORD ABOUT REMITTING.

State explicitly whether the money which you send is for the Book Agency or for the ADVOCATE. The two are separate and distinct concerns. Though they are conducted by the same agent, we must not mix their business. If convenient, write to each on separate sheet or half sheet, but be sure to state for which office the money sent is intended; and if for both, then state how much for each. This will save trouble and prevent mistakes.

SEND US CURRENCY.

We cannot use State money. We have to lose by discount here, or by the expense of sending into the State where it is issued to have it exchanged for currency. Procure the currency and save us the trouble and loss.

DISEASE OR SIN?

There is danger in regarding drunkenness as a disease. Such it doubtless is in some respects, creating a morbid condition of the brain and nervous system, and landing its victim at last where self-control becomes almost, if not altogether, impossible. In some degree the appetite may be inherited—a fearful legacy entailed by intemperate parents upon their offspring. But we may safely assume that the uppermost element is that of sin. The Scriptures speak of it as criminal, and the drunkard is as certainly excluded from the kingdom of God as any class of willful and impenitent sinners. It is no more a disease now than it was in the times of Isaiah and Paul. In whatever sense it is a disease, God holds the drunkard responsible for it as a crime. His accountability is such that persistent intemperance shuts him out from heaven, and consigns him to the perdition of the ungodly. All sinners should be pitied, even as God pities them, and compassionately calls them to repentance. All sin may have some of the aspects of disease, both physical and moral; but it is sin to be punished unless there is timely reformation. We see not why drunkards should be singled out from other classes of sinners, to be treated with more leniency than other evil-doers, and to be made the pets of a special benevolence. They are really the greatest of sinners, not only against God and themselves, but against society. The misery which they bring upon their families, the suffering, poverty, disease and crime which they engender in the world, are such as to give them rank with the very chief of transgressors.

The tendency of the times is unmistakably to lose sight of the crime in the disease, and to remove the inebriate from the sphere of accountability. Associations for the cure of inebriates, and asylums for the same purpose, are most worthy in their objects, and have accomplished some good. But the very word cure, as used by many of these philanthropists, indicates the removal of the subject from the domain of morals to that of medical therapeutics. We doubt the efficacy of any treatment which ignores the character of drunkenness as a crime, and leaves out the religious element as a means of recovery. Even in these useful organizations, which have the pledge as the grand obligation, we should like to see the sanctions of religion always distinctly recognized, and made prominent in the principles by which they are governed. Intemperance, to be most effectively combatted, must be kept to its real character as a sin, most flagrant and always inexcusable. A disease it may become; a calamity it is to the social and material interests of the world—a drain upon the resources and wealth of the nations, the prolific parent of physical suffering, and of mental imbecility and mania; but it is above all a sin which sinks the soul into hell. The very efforts made to save the drunkard are in danger of giving a certain respectability to his vice, and to place him in better company than other great sinners. This is a liability which must be guarded against by putting it down as a crime, and by keeping it where the Scriptures have placed it—among the most disreputable and flagrant transgressions of the law of God.

The pulpit has an important work to do in this direction. It must emphasize the religious aspects of the temperance question, and treat drunkenness upon the truest and highest grounds as a sin of the gravest turpitude, and dark enough to overwhelm the soul with eternal death. It must be treated as other great sins are treated—exposed, denounced and branded in such terms as the Holy Ghost has chosen. It is a subject that no faithful preacher can go around or leave in the hands of outside associations. It is a theme for the sermon on the Sabbath, and not to be surrendered as a specialty to the handling of the lecturer alone. Whatever it may be as a question of pathology, of chemistry and of methods of reform, it is above all a matter which lies chiefly within the province of the preacher as a subject of religious teaching. The drunkard needs such mercy as liars, adulterers, extortioners and other great sinners need; and to be saved he requires the power of the gospel and the grace of the Holy Spirit. Everything which tends to blunt the public conscience, or the conscience of the drunkard, upon the subject, is doing untold harm. In this cause we cannot afford to lose the weighty sanctions of inspired authority, nor to abate the estimate which God has put upon one of the most calamitous forms of iniquity. The drunkard may find mercy, and there is help in God to deliver him from the bondage of a terrible and deadly habit. It is a sin of deepest dye of which he is guilty. God only can forgive, and God only can save him from death. It is one of many manifestations of human depravity, and one of several forms of sensuality—a filthiness of the flesh from which men are to cleanse themselves, while they perfect holiness in the fear of God. It is something to be antagonized by the fear of God, and to be met and overcome by the divine power which makes men new creatures in Christ Jesus. The light which statistics, science and medicine have thrown upon the subject should be gratefully accepted, and the efforts of social and benevolent institutions to abate the widespread evil should be encouraged; but the disposition to make it a disease, and nothing more, is a perversion of the gravest significance.

Remove drunkenness from the domain of accountability, take it out of the hands of religious authority, and class it among the misfortunes rather than the sins of men, and we have done more harm than good. We have overthrown the firmest barrier and taken away the strongest and most effectual restraint. If it is to be treated as lunacy, smallpox, leprosy and other maladies, the evil will be increased. This is the danger just now; and, that we may not be thought to be sounding a groundless alarm, we here produce a declaration of principles adopted by the American Association for the Cure of Inebriates:

"1. Intemperance is a disease.

"2. It is curable in the same sense that other diseases are.

"3. Its primary cause is a constitutional susceptibility to the alcoholic impression.

"4. This constitutional tendency may be inherited or acquired.

"5. Alcohol has its true place in the arts and sciences. It is valuable as a remedy, and, like other remedies, may be abused. In excessive quantity it is a poison, and always acts as such when it produces inebriety.

"6. All methods hitherto employed having proved insufficient for the cure of inebriates, the establishment of asylums for the purpose is the great demand of the age.

"7. Every large city should have its local or temporary home for inebriates, and every State one or more asylums for the care and treatment of such persons.

"8. The law should recognize intemperance as a disease, and provide other means for its management than fines, station houses and jails."

There is much truth in these several articles, but not the whole truth. Many valuable and humane suggestions, but no intimation that drunkenness is a high crime against society, and a sin specially mentioned and denounced in the word of God. It is a disease, and we might infer that it is no more a sin than blindness or lunacy. Intemperance, as expounded by the American Association, is a disease only, having its cause primarily in "a constitutional susceptibility to the alcoholic impression." Fines, station houses and jails are to give way to other means of management more respectable, and more in accordance with the discovery that intemperance is a disease divested of all moral obliquity.

Under the old Jewish law the disobedient son who was "a glutton and a drunkard" was adjudged worthy of death by stoning. Isaiah denounces: "Woe to the crown of pride, to the drunkards of Ephraim;" Joel exclaims: "Awake, ye drunkards, and weep and howl, all ye drinkers of wine, because of the new wine." Paul put this disease in such company as follows: "Neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God." And again, says the same inspired authority: "But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such a one no not to eat." Intemperance was as much a disease in the days of Moses and the prophets as it is now; but it was far more than this—it was a crime to be punished and to be denounced. Paul understood well what he was about when he deliberately and repeatedly classed it with the most abominable vices, and as a prominent member of a horrible family and breed of sins. In his estimate it was one of the works of the flesh manifest—"adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditious heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings and such like." If drunkenness is a mere disease, there is no telling where this refinement is to stop; every other vice may be put in the same category, and there will be no such thing as sin in the world. We must have a new departure for religious teachings, and surrender the whole field of morals to this materialistic spirit.

MICROSCOPE FAITH.

The discoveries of the microscope are wonderful. As with the telescope the macrocosm of the universe is open for investigation, and no limit is set to the glorious task, so with the microscope the microcosm of the world is disclosed in detail, and all the minutiæ of earth, air and water is understood and made tributary to useful knowledge. The naturalist is enthused at the disclosures thus made. The whole realm of nature is spread out in detail, and its every object, however minute, is invested with new interest, and exhibits such marks of design and usefulness that the great Creator is magnified in his works.

Many, many of the voices of nature would be dumb to us, which are now vocal with high praise to God, were it not that science has arranged that by these optical instruments there is opened to our view rich treasures, and fields of wealth and beauty.

The medical scientist, with the use of this instrument, can analyze and disintegrate the blood and juices of the animal economy, detecting the incipient stages of disease, and calculate with greatest precision the time required for the poison to reach and arrest the action of the vital functions. Any discrepancy in the elemental principles of animal life is ascertained with sufficient exactness for chemical science to apply the required remedy. The naturalist marks in a drop of water myriads of living creatures, each performing the functions of life, and dwelling in a crystal palace composed of his fellows. In the forest leaf he discovers such a delicacy of workmanship in its fibrous structure as to qualify it for the absorption and reflection of rays of light and moisture necessary for its color and nutrition, and making it the airy and lofty abode of multitudes of insects and living animals, who find there a most elegant and delightful residence.

The thought is beautiful that all objects in the physical world have their counterpart in the spiritual—that all we see with the visual organs are but types of the invisible and the unseen. The grand orchestra, composed of the deep bass voice of the physical world, which resounds in the leaping cataract and the sighs of the storm, is in consonance with a full choir of tenor, treble and soprano voices coming up from the microscopic world, harmonizing and swelling into an anthem which fills earth and sky with its strains of symphony.

The profound and sublime truth is announced by the great apostle in the outset of his ministry: "The invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and God-head." Faith only apprehends this truth—it discovers and discloses truth and beauty which lie beyond the arcana of human reason and the circling light of mortal vision.

"Faith lends its realizing light,
The clouds disperse, the shadows fly;
Th' invisible appears in sight,
And God is seen by mortal eye."

The earnest, devout prayer of the Psalmist, "Open thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law," is but a recognition that the eye of faith has a power of discernment peculiar to itself, and that, being opened by divine influence, it "beholds wondrous things out of his law."

To the eye of faith the harmonies of the world appear as a well-conceived and executed plot—evincing a super-controlling power that is divine. A path of truth is discovered that is radiant with light. Footprints are seen that indicate the way of the ancient seers, martyrs and prophets. A goal is beheld that sparkles as a diadem forever.

Faith justifies the ways of God with man. Faith reconciles conflicting elements in the providences of God. Faith realizes in temptation a "present help" to deliver, and a strength imparted in resistance that nerves the soul for higher attainments. Faith realizes that "these light afflictions, which are but for a moment, will work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Faith sees in every conflict a greater victory. Faith looks forward to the last conflict as the ultimate victory and triumphant entry of the victor to a crown and dominion that endures.

Faith magnifies every Christian duty, and invests it with paramount importance. Faith magnifies every Christian work and obligation, and confers the highest honor upon the obligated. Faith magnifies every Christian enjoyment, and makes every joy the father of a greater. Faith discerns in trifles a magnitude and import that inspires to sedulous effort. Faith is the present and satisfying knowledge of things unseen, and the full assurance of hope indulged. Christian faith, as the scientist's microscope, peers into the hidden things of the invisible, and opens up the labyrinth of life.

T. B. WHITE.

BISHOP KEENER'S SERMON.

The following notice of the sermon preached by Bishop Keener at the dedication of the new Centenary church in St. Louis is reported in the St. Louis Advocate:

The text, John xx, 21, 22, 23, was then announced:

"Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me even so send I you. And when he had said this he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost. Whosoever sins ye remit they are remitted unto them; and whosoever sins ye retain they are retained."

The Bishop set out with an account of the resurrection of Christ, dwelling especially upon the power by which he had been raised up from the dead. He showed from the Scriptures that this is the power by which God works in his people. Especially is it the power by which he prepares those whom he calls to the work of the ministry. After his resurrection he sent his disciples as the Father had sent him, breathing on them—communicating thus that life which was in himself, now that he was raised from the dead. This constitutes the true power of the ministry. Without the presence of the Holy Ghost, vitalizing his own life and giving effect to his words, no man is prepared for the work of a preacher. The gospel becomes reproductive through this agency. By men who have realized this God has always wrought. Destitute of it, no man is qualified for the work of God. He cannot transmit the life that is not in him. We do not pretend to give the exact words of the preacher, nor to follow with any accuracy or fullness his line of thought. We only state in the most general way the main points, in our own language.

He dwelt long on these two facts: 1. The resurrection of the Lord by the power of the Holy Ghost; and 2. The resurrection power in the ministry. Even if we had space we could not reproduce the remarkable amplification of the theme which he gave.

There was one exegesis, however, too striking and important to be omitted. The keys of the kingdom of heaven were committed to the apostles. This is the same prerogative which is given in other terms in the last verse of the text: "Whosoever sins ye remit they are remitted; and whosoever sins ye retain they are retained."

He who holds the keys stands at the door to admit men into the kingdom of Christ. He performs an important, indeed a vital, part in introducing men into a saving knowledge of the Master. The arrogant pretensions of some who claim possession of the keys must be put to the test. How shall we know that a man has the keys? "By their fruits ye shall know them." Our Lord spoke this of ministers expressly. The fruits of a genuine ministry will appear in the conversion of sinners, and in the godly lives of converts. The ministry that fails to approve itself by these tests is spurious. The church, whose members are carnal, unregenerate, profane, however proud its boast of historic prestige, is wholly discredited by our Lord's own test.

If you have the keys, show us those whom you have actually introduced into the kingdom. Where are the men soundly converted under your ministry? Where are the men who, through your means, actually know God as a sin-pardoning God? Let us see those whom you have brought to know the resurrection power, and in whose daily life that power shows itself. Until you vindicate your claim by these proofs your boast is empty and vain, and you stand convicted of blasphemous assumption.

The keys are found where the gospel is "preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven." This is the power that touches the sinner with true awakening energy—that opens blind eyes to see "the sinfulness of sin"—that quickens dead souls. He whose ministry is vital with this presence will bring men to God. This is the resurrection power by which the Master works in his servants, and through them upon the world that lieth in wickedness. "He breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost; whosoever sins ye remit they are remitted unto them; and whosoever sins ye retain they are retained." This power of the keys is an actual indwelling of the Holy Spirit. It is not a corporate official function, but a personal grace, an inwrought divine power.

He only is a true minister of Christ who is born of God, and is, by the actual descent of the Holy Spirit upon himself, "endowed with power from on high." It is not transmitted by episcopal functions, but communicated by the Holy Ghost. The resurrection power is in the preacher, and through him reaches the unconverted. In this way is he instrumental in introducing men into the kingdom. He has the keys. Nor do those who resist this resurrection power gain access by other means. Their sins are retained. Where the gospel is preached with the power, it is the "savor of life unto life, or of death unto death." Thus the minister of Christ performs an important function, not only in the remission, but also in the retention of sins.

The wholesale laudation of preachers is offensive, both to piety and good taste. But we cannot forbear to say that this sermon was worthy in every respect of the great occasion on which it was delivered. It was deeply evangelical in doctrine and spirit, with a philosophical sweep of thought which was every here and there iridescent with flashes of poetic conception and feeling.

Bishop Keener's sermons are sui generis. He calls no man master in analysis, style or manner. He has read much and thought profoundly. Among his friends he talks much upon the great themes of religion, and talks earnestly, in this way constantly evolving thought and gaining deeper insight. He is a profoundly earnest as well as able minister of the New Testament.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the catalogue and circular of the State Female College, Memphis, Tennessee. It is a handsome pamphlet, and is embellished with a fine engraving of the imposing buildings and beautiful grounds of the institution. Two hundred and twenty-nine students were in attendance during the term just closed.

THE Christian Standard says that "a case has recently been decided by the Supreme Court of Ohio involving the validity of subscriptions for church purposes. The general principle established is, that after a church has incurred any liability on the strength of subscriptions, these subscriptions are legally binding. In the case decided the subscription was for the payment of a church debt, and the court held that the 'subscriber' was bound to pay. A subscription may be withdrawn before there is an indebtedness, but not afterward."

TUSKALOOSA FEMALE COLLEGE.

The Committee on Education beg leave respectfully to report, that within the bounds of this district there is but one school that sustains any direct relation to our church, and that is the Tuskaloosa Female College, under the presidency and proprietorship of the Rev. B. F. Larrabee.

Of this institution we are happy to be able to submit the most encouraging report. The growth and prosperity of the college, since the arrangement entered into with the present administration, by the Conference, at Gadsden, has been almost without a parallel. At the adjournment of that Conference there was not a single boarder in the institution. Now there are fifteen. The session began with eleven scholars, and it has gradually but steadily increased, until it now numbers fifty. A month or two ago the faculty was strengthened by the addition of an accomplished lady from Mississippi ; and such is the prospect of a large increase in the ensuing session, that it has been determined to add a professor and two or three experienced lady teachers to the force already engaged.

Valuable repairs have been made upon the buildings, and during the vacation the entire boarding department will be furnished and carpeted anew, and the school halls refitted and supplied with desks and seats of the most approved pattern, and rendered in every way attractive and comfortable. New pianos are to be purchased for the music department, and new apparatus for the department of chemistry and natural philosophy.

A children's department is to be organized in a separate building, and supplied with everything to encourage and aid both teacher and pupils.

It is also in contemplation to make large additions to the present buildings during the next year.

On the whole, your committee are highly gratified at the condition and prospects of this institution, and heartily recommend to the District Conference to pass the following resolutions :

Resolved, That we are rejoiced to know that the Tuskaloosa Female College is now upon a basis which invites our confidence in its permanent success.

Baptism of Unconscious Adults.

Dr. Dabney presented the following :

The Committee on Bills and Overtures report Overture No. 8 :

Is it right to baptize a person whose recovery from the delirium of fever is despaired of, but who, immediately before he lapsed into the delirium, professed faith in Christ and asked to be baptized? In other words, is it right ever to baptize an unconscious adult person? T. L. DE VEAUX.

Your committee would respectfully move the Assembly to adopt the following reply :

The sacraments are rational and spiritual means of grace, and cannot change the spiritual state of any soul ex opere operato.

The Shorter Catechism, question 94, defines baptism as signifying and sealing our ingrafting into Christ, and partaking of the benefits of the covenant of grace, and our engagement to be the Lord's. The Scriptures hold out sundry instances of believers in a state of salvation without water baptism ; thereby showing that it is not in every case necessary to redemption. Experience has also taught us the propriety of caution in judging professions of faith and repentance made in sickness, either favorable or adversely. For all which reasons this Assembly decides that an unconscious adult, in the condition described in the above overture, is not a suitable subject for baptism.

The report was adopted.

A HIT.—A clergyman in the country had a stranger preaching for him one day ; and meeting his beadle, he said to him : "Well, Saunders, how did you like the sermon to-day?"

"I watna, sir, it was rather o'er plain and simple for me," replied the beadle. "I like the sermons that bejumble the judgment and confound the sense ; oh, sir, I never saw one that could up to yourse'f at that."

Southern University, Greensboro, Ala.

The annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Southern University will begin on Monday, the third of July. Every member of the board is earnestly requested to be present.

Bishop McTyeire will preach the commencement sermon, and Prof. Harrison will deliver the address before the literary societies.

ALABAMA IRON.—Says the Montgomery Advertiser :

By the completion of the Alabama and Chattanooga railroad vast beds of Alabama iron ore have been made accessible at a low cost, of a quality, it is asserted, that is better suited to the manufacture of steel than any other native or foreign ore. It is to be hoped that this will tend to the development and utilization of these inexhaustible supplies, that can be made to be of more real value to this State than are the White Pine silver mines to Nevada. Pig iron is now made in Alabama, it is said, thirty-three per cent. cheaper than in the most favored regions of Pennsylvania, and the experiments recently made by Messrs. Holly, Winslow & Griswold, at Troy, New York, on iron manufactured in Shelby county, Alabama, were entirely satisfactory, and conclusively proved the great value of the product. The Alabama ores are free from sulphur, and by care in manufacturing them into pig iron the phosphorus they contain can be reduced to five one-hundredths parts of one per cent. in the pig metal.

THE SUEZ CANAL.—Four hundred and ninety-one vessels, together of 443,212 tons, and carrying 26,592 passengers, passed the Suez canal during the year 1870. Of these vessels 292, together of 251,929 tons, sailed in the direction from Port Said to Suez, and 199 vessels, together of 191,283 tons, in the direction from Suez to Port Said. The total receipts from the canal last year were $946,586 gold.

Obituaries.

MRS. JANE STOWERS was born in Union district, South Carolina, January 14, 1800 ; joined the Presbyterian Church in early life ; moved to Montgomery county, Alabama, in 1831, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which she lived consistently, and died triumphantly April 11, 1871, being over fifty years a devout worshiper of the living God. May our end be as hers! M. M. G.

THE following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted by the second Quarterly Meeting Conference of Carthage circuit, Jackson district, Mississippi Conference, held at Mount Zion, June 17, A. D. 1871, H. H. Montgomery, presiding elder, in the chair :

WHEREAS, This Quarterly Conference has been deprived of one of its most efficient members (Bro. JAMES HANNA, who departed this life January 19, A. D. 1871, aged fifty-six years, eleven months and twenty-nine days ;) therefore, be it

Resolved, 1. That while we deeply deplore his loss, we meekly bow to that inscrutable Providence which doeth all things well.

2. That in his death this Quarterly Conference has lost an able counselor, the church an active member, his family an affectionate husband and father, and his neighborhood an estimable citizen.

3. That we tender the relatives of the deceased our heartfelt condolence, and pray that his Christian influence may lead them to a chaste and upright demeanor before God.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family of the deceased, a copy be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and that the same be spread on the journal of this Quarterly Conference.

BRO. JOHN RILEY, son of William and Sibina Riley, was born in the State of Georgia, December 8, 1811 ; emigrated to the State of Mississippi in 1842 ; professed faith in Christ and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1844 ; and was married to Miss Nancy Jane Howell, of Rankin county, in December, 1849.

Brother and Sister Riley were blessed with six children. Two are dead and four are living—all members of the church. Bro. Riley filled with acceptability and usefulness the offices of class-leader, steward and Sabbath school superintendent. He lived a consistent and holy Christian. I know of no man in the section of country in which he lived who stood higher as a Christian and a gentleman. His house was always a welcome home for the preacher, in the support of whom he stood with those at the head of the list.

After an illness of some two weeks (of pneumonia) Bro. Riley fell asleep in Christ, at his residence, on Monday, May 15, 1871. But he fell as he had lived. I was with him on Saturday and Sunday before he died. I said to him : "Bro. Riley, have you the comforts of the sustaining grace of God in your afflictions, and at this most trying moment." He replied : "Yes ; I have no fear of death ! I am perfectly resigned to the will of God."

We sorrow not as those who have no hope. We shall meet again. Glory to God ! May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be upon and abide in the hearts of those bereaved and loved ones, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

ANDREW DAY, P. C.
SPRING RIDGE, Hinds Co., Miss., June 5.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT TO THE MEMORY OF REV. L. M. BOYD.

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted by the second Quarterly Meeting of Marion circuit, Meridian district, Mississippi Conference, held at Lauderdale Station, May 27, A. D. 1871 :

WHEREAS, In the wisdom of a just God, in fulfillment of a decree long since passed by the King of heaven, that "dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return," man born of woman is of few days and full of trouble : our worthy and esteemed brother, Rev. L. M. Boyd, for one year a member of our Quarterly Conference, and for many years a local elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, an able minister of the New Testament, was called from our midst, from his labors in the church on earth to his reward in the church in heaven, on the twelfth day of December, 1870 ; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That while we bow in submission to the will of God in all his providential visitations, yet we regret the loss of one whose counsels, prayers, exhortations and godly admonitions were so valuable in our Quarterly Meetings, and elsewhere in our churches, where his loud, shrill voice was so often heard.

2. That we sorrow not as those having no hope. Bro. Boyd died as he lived. Ever since we knew him his sermons, exhortations, prayers and conversation were heavenward ; consequently his end was peace. He said to a brother minister that the gospel he preached and recommended to the whole world was able to save, yea, console and strengthen, him in the hour of death ; not a cloud was there to darken his way to the sunny plains of deliverance.

3. That we deeply sympathize with the bereaved family of our deceased brother, hoping and praying that the Father of mercies may throw around them his protecting care, and shield them from the temptations that are so prevalent in this wicked world ; that they remember a kind husband and father's blessing, and follow his godly example and teaching, so that they may be prepared to meet him in heaven, where parting will be no more.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of this Quarterly Conference, and one sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and one furnished to the family of our deceased brother.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. E. PLATT,
G. B. GRACE.
H. ARMSTRONG,
Committee.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. SARAH ANN NEWSOM, wife of Rev. Joseph D. Newsom, of the North Mississippi Conference, died near Lexington, Mississippi, June 3, 1871, in the thirty sixth year of her age.

"Lo! the prisoner is released,
Lightened of her fleshly load ;
Where the weary are at rest,
She is gathered unto God!"

The deceased was the daughter of Rev. William James, of precious memory. She was born in Wilkinson county, Mississippi, October 12, A. D. 1835. Her early training was of the best kind to fit her for the life unto which, in God's providence, she was called. In her childhood's home she had the influence and example of the shining life of her father. Around her father's hearth, and in the pulpit at old Bethel, such illustrious men as Drs. Winans, Drake and their co-laborers gave her exalted ideas of our holy religion and the piety of the Christian ministry. She was, under such influences, early the subject of awakening grace, and in the beginning of the year 1854 was converted. She made an everlasting covenant with God and faithfully kept it to her death.

On the sixteenth of November, 1854, she was married to her now sorrowing husband, who had before given himself to the service of the church in the itinerancy. Sarah, young, beautiful and bright, did not take the responsible and delicate duties of an itinerant's wife (most delicate, most responsible, and therefore the most difficult position a woman ever fills,) unadvisedly, but reverently, discreetly, advisedly, and in the fear of God.

She was an helpmeet to her husband in his holy calling, for which her early training well fitted her. She not only filled the measure of a good wife's duty in her domestic circle, but cared for the flock of her husband, especially the lambs of the flock. Her generous sympathy found the way to the hearts of all, particularly the young, to whom she was of great service. Her husband attributes much of his success in this department to her help.

She fully proved her devotion to the itinerancy by nearly seventeen years of toil and sacrifice, ten years of which were more or less years of suffering ; five of them, last preceding her death, chiefly confined to her room, and much of the time to her bed. Still to her husband she said : "Don't locate." When sympathizing friends proposed to take care of her, and let her husband take an appointment some distance from her, she said : "No, no. The church will be neglected for me ; it must not be." The last three moves she made on a bed, unable to sit up. Her labor is past. Her sun is set gloriously, amidst tender, sympathizing friends, who gathered with unselfish love around the couch of the dying saint.

Three of her six children survive her ; the others preceded her to our Father's house, where she has now joined them.

We saw her a beautiful bride, a joyful Christian, wife and mother, a dying saint, and committed her body to the grave in sure and certain hope of a blessed immortality. W. P. B.

ARGYLE BITTERS STILL AHEAD!

They cure Dyspepsia, Flatulence, Colic, Biliousness, Torpidity of the Liver, Nervous Disorders, Hypertrophy of the Spleen, Habitual Constipation, Intermittent Fever, Menstrual Suppression, Imbecility in the Aged, and Weakness in Children. They cure Inebriety, and remove the ungovernable thirst for strong drink that torments the poor, heart-broken drunkard. They will promote digestion, and eminently assist in the assimilation of food. They correct disorders of the liver, and cure headache and bad spirits. They invigorate the weak and cheer the down-hearted.

There are other preparations in the market known as bitters, but which are destitute of the elements that render the Argyle a monument of success as a gentle Stimulant, a safe Tonic, and a sure Alterative, for family use.

"Take more Argyle and less whisky," said an eminent temperance man, "and the vice of drunkenness would disappear from our midst." This is worth remembering, and its immense popularity and sale show that these words were fitly spoken.

Buy the Argyle always for a safe family medicine for summer use, to prevent Chills, Fever Complaint, Dyspepsia and Nervous Debility. je8 1m

VIRGINIA SPRINGS.

RAWLEY SPRINGS, VIRGINIA,

WAS REGULARLY OPENED FOR THE reception of visitors on the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, 1871. Situated, as it is, in the Mountains of the Valley, it is not only one of the most delightful Summer Resorts in the State, but its curative properties are becoming widely celebrated.

The analysis of the water by Prof. Mallet, of the University of Virginia, together with the experience of many eminent physicians, prove that it is the Springs for suffering females. But besides its wonderful tonic properties as a remedy in general debility, anemia and diseases peculiar to females, it is unsurpassed in the treatment of the various forms of Dyspepsia, and particularly for those suffering from torpid and inactive liver, its action upon the liver as well as kidneys being prompt and decided. Very many remarkable cures could be cited of this class of troublesome diseases.

RAWLEY is now easy of access, situated only twelve miles from Harrisonburg, the present terminus of the Orange, Alexandria and Manassas Gap Railroad, from which point there will be two daily lines of Stages, morning and evening.

Since last summer the buildings have been greatly improved, as well as the road from Harrisonburg to the Springs.

There is also now a Telegraph Office at Harrisonburg.

The accommodations will be strictly first-class, under the management of JOSEPH N. WOODWARD, widely and well known as a Hotel Manager.

Resident Physicians, GORTON & WILLIAMS, one or the other of whom will be in attendance during the entire season.

The Child's Corner.

WAITING FOR PAPA.

I.

We have put away the playthings,
Cleaned the trinkets from the floor,
Mamie's doll is in its cradle,
My old horse behind the door;
With our tidy hands and faces
All impatiently we wait
For the sound of papa's coming,
And his footstep at the gate.

II.

Little ones, when all the luster
Of your locks shall change to snow,
When the light shall all be faded
From those eyes that sparkle so,
May you lay your every idol,
All earth's playthings, gladly by,
And as fondly greet our Father,
When he cometh in the sky."

PUNCTUALITY OF THE MOON.

Suppose you are going to make a journey to the Falls of Ningara. A family party is to be made up, and your father says you can go any time in the month of June. You all consult together to find out which will be the best week in June to go in. Your father says: "By all means let us go so as to be there at the time of the full moon. Then we shall get a view of the Falls by moonlight, and perhaps we shall see a lunar rainbow." Then you get out your almanac and find out when there will be a full moon in the month of June. And, if the almanac says that the moon will be full on the twenty-third of June, then you arrange your plans for your journey so as to be at Niagara about that time. And in the evening of that day your party all leave the table where you are staying, and go down to look at the Falls. You get out on the top of the tower on the Terrapin Rocks, where you can look right down into the Horseshoe Falls. But would it ever enter into your mind to think that perhaps the moon will be a day or two behind time? Perhaps something may have delayed it for two or three days. Would you be likely to think anything of this kind? No. Such a thought never enters into anybody's mind. And what is the reason? The reason is that such a thing has never happened. The moon has been going through all the changes that we see in it now, every month, for nearly six thousand years; and in all that long time it has never once been a single day, or hour or minute behind time or before time. The new moon comes punctually at the time appointed for it; and so does the full moon. An astronomer can calculate for a hundred or five hundred years ahead, and tell you just the day and hour in any month when there will be a new moon or a full moon. And if you and I were to be alive at that time, we should find the moon up to time—punctual to a moment. It has been so for thousands of years past; it will be so for thousands of years to come.

When the time comes for you to take such a journey to Niagara as was spoken of just now, you may perhaps oversleep yourself in the morning, and so miss the train. Or you may be sick, and not able to go. Or you may get fairly started, and some accident may happen to the train, and you may be delayed in getting to the end of your journey. But whoever may be at Niagara at the time appointed for the full moon, in June, may be just as sure that the moon will really be full then as they are that two and two make four. The moon always has been punctual, and always will be punctual. And the moon praises God by its punctuality. It is God's power and wisdom that make the moon so punctual.

The best watchmaker in the world will not make a clock or watch that will go on from year to year without getting either too fast or too slow. But the moon is God's timepiece. It keeps the most exact time. It is never too fast, and never too slow, and never needs winding up. And every month, when we see the new moon appear at the very time that God has appointed for it, we may well think that it is singing a silent song of praise to God by its punctuality.

And this is a very important lesson that we may learn from the moon. The habit of punctuality is one of the best habits for us to form while we are young. To be always in the right place at the right time; to be in school before the opening exercises begin; to be in church before the minister enters on the service; to be in the place where we have a business engagement in plenty of time to meet it is a most excellent habit to form. Many a man has failed in business just for the want of punctuality, and even where actual failure does not follow from it, it always occasions a great deal of harm and loss.

One day a gentleman was stopped in the street by a shabby-looking man, who asked him if he did not remember his old schoolmate, Harry Brown; and then begged him to lend him $5.

The gentleman remembered Harry Brown very well. His father was a rich man; and when he was at school, Harry's business prospects were better than those of any other boy of his class. He looked with surprise on this man's dirty, threadbare clothes, and asked: "Can it be possible that you are my old friend, Harry Brown?"

"It is just so," said he.

"Do tell me what has brought you to this condition of poverty and want?"

Now mark what this poor man said.

"Time enough yet has brought me here. I got into the way of saying this all the time. I used always to put off doing things at the right time. This has ruined me. If I had only formed the habit of punctuality when I was young, I might have been a rich man to-day. But now the habit of putting everything off has become so strong that it seems impossible to overcome it. For the sake of old times lend me $5, or else I must go either to the almshouse or starve."

If any of you are getting into the habit of putting things off by saying, "Time enough yet," resolve to break it up at once. And every month, as you see the new moon, think what a habit of punctuality the moon has, and try to imitate its example in this respect.

Some of the best and greatest men of whom we read in history were remarkable for their punctuality. Melanchthon, the friend and companion of Martin Luther, the great reformer, was so punctual in his habits that if he made a business engagement he was accustomed to fix not only the hour, but the very minute when the business should be attended to.

Our great and good Gen. Washington was a pattern of punctuality. When he engaged to meet Congress at noon, he never failed to be at the door of the hall just as the clock was striking twelve. He always dined at four o'clock; and if his guests whom he had invited were not present the dinner went on punctually at the appointed hour, without waiting for them. Sometimes, when new members of Congress were invited to dine with the President, not knowing what his habit was in this respect, they would come late, perhaps when dinner was half over. Washington would make no apology, but simply remark: "Gentlemen, we are punctual here." When those gentlemen got another invitation to dine with the President they would be sure to be in time.

On one occasion a person had a pair of beautiful horses which he wanted to sell, and which the President wanted to buy. Five o'clock in the morning of a certain day was appointed as the time when the horses were to be brought for Washington to see them. But the horses were not brought until a quarter past five. When the man came with them he was told that the President had been there at the hour appointed, but finding he was not there had gone to some other engagement; he could not then be seen. The man lost a good chance to sell his horses by delaying a quarter of an hour. Let us learn this lesson from the moon—always to be up to time.—Dr. Newton.

LITTLE ALICE was one of my Sabbath school scholars, a fair-haired, blue-eyed girl, whose beautiful face and sweet winning ways made her a favorite with all. Methinks I can now see the soft, tender look of her mild eyes fixed so earnestly upon me as I endeavored to impress upon her opening mind the gospel plan of salvation. One day I said to her:

"Alice, what will you do when you die and are called upon to stand before the judgment seat of God to answer for all the sins done here upon earth?"

Her face glowed with emotion as she answered:

"Christ died for sinners; I will hide behind him. God will not look at me. He will look at Christ."

Beautiful thought, to hide behind Christ, to lose ourselves in him, and casting aside our own impure works, to rest solely and entirely upon his finished work for salvation!—Good Words.

A HINT TO HOUSEKEEPERS.—The amount of injury done to the tender stomachs of young children, invalids and sedentary persons, by eating bad bread day after day, from one year's end to another, must be enormous. A cook who cannot make good bread of every description ought not to be allowed house-room for an hour; and that mother is criminally negligent, whatever may be her position, who does not teach her daughter to know what good bread is, and how to make it. Alum is used to give whiteness, softness and capacity for retaining moisture. Lime could be employed with equal effect, having the advantage of correcting any sourness in the bread or stomach, besides affording an important ingredient for making the bone strong. Every housekeeper should know how to make two or three kinds of bread.

IF OTHERS neglect their duty to you, do not you neglect your duty to God, yourself, nor to them.

The Farm and Garden.

THE CAROLINA PHOSPHATES.

There have been discovered in the vicinity of Charleston, South Carolina, extensive deposits of fossil remains of sea monsters of a former age. These fossils are composed principally of phosphate of lime, a valuable and important ingredient of plant food. But we are not inclined to place so high an estimate upon these deposits as do some of our cotemporaries. Four years ago we gathered together two or three tons of bones, with the hope of getting them crushed; not succeeding in that, we made a heap of them and set fire to the mass. The amount of grease and animal matter they contained caused rapid combustion, and so in a few hours we had a very excellent lot of phosphate of lime. We pounded it up fine, and, in order to outdo anything ever heard of before in gardening, we put the whole of our treasure—filling thirteen barrels after it had been burned—upon about one eighth of an acre of land. The ground was beautifully and thoroughly prepared, but the inert bone made no more impression than if we had put on that much sand, nor has it benefited the land or increased its yield to this day. Now the practical question is this: How much better are these fossil remains than that we used? We think there is very little difference. It is true, probably, that they have some process in those capacious establishments we see so elegantly illustrated for livening up fossil materials. In other words, a little "doctoring" is done, which rejuvenates the old bones—causes the monsters to cavort and spout. This "doctor's stuff" is wonderful, but we think it would be just as efficacious if mixed with Charleston beach sand. We send this as a "tracer" of this deposit, which may be considered the first gun at Sumpter. Will the Georgia and Carolina press pass this around? Practical Planter.

TIME TO CUT TIMBER.

A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun says:

In your "Notes of the Day" you publish as follows: "It is said that timber cut in February will last three times longer than that cut in the summer months." In an old German almanac of the year 1802 is the following: "Good building timber is fallen in the wane of the moon, when it is under the earth, in the sign of the bull, virgin or goat, but when the sap is out of the wood—that is, in December."

These assertions are grave errors, calculated to produce much loss.

In the July number of the Albany Cultivator for the year 1854 is an article headed "What time shall we cut timber? Never in winter, but always in summer."

In the article (which is long) the experience is given of Isaac Hathaway, of Farmington, Ontario county, New York, an old and enterprising settler, a close and extensive observor, and who has had much experience in connection with sawmills and timber erections. All his observations tend to show the great difference between winter and summer-cut timber, and induce him to think that, cut at the best period, it will last, under the average of circumstances, three times as long as when felled in winter.

My own experience is in accordance with Mr. Hathaway's. There are now two gate-posts of white oak on a farm I lately sold, said to have been cut in summer, of some forty years' standing; they appear much as they did twenty-three years ago, when I bought the place.

THE VINEYARD.—A few hints in this department to those of the readers of Our Home Journal who are cultivating the grape on a large or small scale. If your grapes seem to be any way affected by cold or wet weather spread about a half a gallon of air-slacked lime around each vine; mix it in with the soil with an iron-tooth rake; this will not injure the roots; and in a few days the vines will assume their natural appearance. This will bring the sap into a free circulation, and kill out the fungus that is so injurious to the grape. The reason that I assign for this is that any heated dry matter, put in contact with the chilled soil that plants or vines are growing in, instantly expels the fungi. This is a lesson that I have learned from experience. In the forcing of plants in hot houses, when too much damp air was admitted in cool, cloudy weather, it created a fungus, which has to be driven out of the house by hot air. This is a very simple way in regulating the temperature of the soil. It checks mildew, and the growth of the vine is steady. I have treated grape vines, that were badly affected with mildew, on this plan, and proved successful. Now it will be well to look over the vines and see that there are not too many bunches on; it is better to thin out the bunches than to leave them on the vines and not mature. If this simple plan is followed, and the vines kept well tied in, I will warrant that your crop of grapes will be fine.—Correspondent of Our Home Journal.

A NEW KIND OF FERTILIZER.—It is the general opinion, we believe, that the announcement to our first parents, when they were turned out of the Garden of Eden, that in the sweat of their brow should they eat their bread, was a curse pronounced upon them. We are not much in theology, and do not intend to run the risk of a controversy with orthodoxdom, by asserting that it was really a blessing, or by giving a more favorable interpretation than the generally received one, of the assertion that the ground was cursed for their sakes. Sweat is a good fertilizer, and a very cheap one, especially when the thermometer stands at ninety. Brains are equally as good when properly applied. But the two, when mixed in proper proportions, make an admirable compound for all kinds of crops on every variety of soil, that may be applied in season and out of season. The trouble has been that the ingredients have not been mixed in the right proportion. The ingredients should be mixed not in the chemist's laboratory, but in the field, between the hours of sunrise and sunset. Thus mixed, the compound may be applied to all kinds of crops, in every possible way; but it must in all cases be thoroughly "rubbed in."—American Rural Home.

FRENCH METHOD OF RAISING TOMATOES.—As soon as a cluster of flowers is visible the stem is topped down to the cluster, so that the flowers terminate the stem. The effect is that the sap is immediately impelled into the two buds next below the cluster, which soon push strongly and produce another cluster of flowers each. When these are visible the branch to which they belong is also topped down to their level, and this is done successively. By this means the plants become stout dwarf bushes, not above eighteen inches high. In order to prevent their falling over sticks or strings are stretched horizontally along the rows, so as to keep the plants erect. In addition to this, all the laterals that have no flowers, and after the fifth topping all laterals whatsoever, are nipped off. In this way the ripe sap is directed to the fruit, which acquires a beauty, size and excellence unattained by other means.

BEES AND HONEY.—Great and increasing attention to bees and the production of honey is one of the "signs of the times" at the North and West, but our people do not seem to have awakened to the importance of the subject yet. The cash value of the honey made in the United States every year amounts to several millions of dollars, and the cost of producing it is a mere trifle. If the people of the South and Southwest would devote a little time and attention to this matter they would be agreeably surprised at the great results from light labor and care. With the Italian queens, new and improved hives, etc., the business is reduced to perfect simplicity, and the profits are untailing and sure. We earnestly advise our readers to give bee-keeping a reasonable and proper share of attention at once.—Our Home Journal.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
VIRGINIA.

THIS INSTITUTION, located on the great railroad line from New Orleans to Baltimore, among the mountains of Virginia, is offering peculiar advantages to those who are seeking a thorough collegiate or business education. Two Hundred and Thirty Dollars will cover the expenses for an entire collegiate year of ten months, for Tuition, Board, Fuel, Room-rent, Washing and Contingent Fees. For the character of the school, please consult our own Alumni, or any of the Bishops or of the leading men of the Southern Methodist Church, or the Professors of the University of Virginia, who have authorized this reference. HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

THE TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION of this school will begin on the FIRST MONDAY IN AUGUST, 1871. The entire expense for board and tuition, for forty weeks, will be $150. The board is of the best description that the country affords, being furnished by the steward from his own farm and prepared by the hands of his own family. We had boys from five different States last year, and not a word of complaint was ever made on this point, which is often the subject of just complaint at boarding schools. The fare is peculiarly grateful to Southern boys, who require a more generous diet when they change their climate.

The manner of governing the school is paternal, as the entire exemption from temptations in the surrounding country renders the discipline easy. The institution is under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but under my own control. The young men attending the school last year were, without exception, moral and religious. Young men preparing for the ministry may receive tuition free, and in certain cases can obtain lower rates of board. Regular services are held in the College Chapel.

The location of the school is near Madisonville, Monroe county, East Tennessee. In the midst of a fruitful and beautiful country, and surrounded by a thrifty and intelligent population. No negroes live in the neighborhood, all the laborers in the fields and servants in the families being white. The citizens of Monroe county were true to the South in her late struggle, and have adhered to Southern churches.

Students arriving by the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad will get off at Sweetwater, forty miles south of Knoxville, whence they will find conveyance to the college, seven miles distant.

Our post office is Madisonville, Tennessee.

F. M. GRACE, President.

P. S.—1. Families from the South will find good board in the neighborhood, and a delightful summer retreat at White Cliff Springs, sixteen miles distant from Madisonville. For information on this point parties may address D. A. McKenzie, steward of the college. The health of the country is proverbial.

P. S. 2. Younger boys may be safely sent to this school, as all are under the immediate oversight of the principal, both when in school and when at the boarding house.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR,
A Purely Vegetable Compound
FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF
RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections, but experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to durat on of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

THESE are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. For sale by Scientific.

NO ONE DOUBTS, remarks Prof. Newton, that comets are chiefly composed of very light vapors; though some of the larger ones may have a solid nucleus. "If, as intimated, certain observed cometary phenomena indicate that these vapors, like the solar vapors, are arranged, for a certain depth, at least, in envelopes, which are liable to be greatly expanded, or even wholly expelled, by the increasing amount of heat received from the sun, we have in the probable physical structure of comets another indication that these bodies were originally detached from the sun's photosphere, in addition to that furnished by certain features of the cometary motions."

THE American Naturalist for June contains two important articles of use to farmers. In the first Dr. Le Barm, the State entomologist of Illinois, gives an account of a new leaf-roller caterpillar, extremely destructive to young nursery apple trees, which look, after the caterpillar has been at work, as if they had been scorched by fire. It is quite new to professional entomologists, and promises to do much mischief in the future. No insect enemy has heretofore been known to prey on the striped squash beetle, that scourge of gardeners. In the second article referred to Dr. Shimer describes a small parasite, the maggot of a fly resembling a miniature housefly, which during the last summer seems to have killed off large numbers of these beetles.

BIGGER STILL.—A new Wellingtonia gigantea, or "big tree," forty feet and four inches in diameter, has been discovered lately near Visalia, in southern California. This is thicker by seven feet than any other that has yet been found. A section of one of the "big trees" is now exhibited in Cincinnati, which is seventy-six feet in circumference and fourteen feet high; and, standing on the floor of the hall, it gives one a perfectly clear idea of the enormous size of the tree from which it was taken. The section was cut last year in the Mariposa grove, about two hundred and fifty miles southeast of San Francisco, and far up the western slope of the Sierra Nevada mountains. It was divided and hauled a hundred and forty miles to Stockton, on three wagons, by seventeen yoke of cattle.

SECRETS FOR LADIES.—Let the ladies observe the following rules: In the morning use pure water as a preparatory ablution; after which abstain from all sudden gusts of passion, particularly envy, as that gives the skin a sallow paleness. Temperance must be attended to, both in eating and drinking, if you would avoid pimples. Instead of rouge use moderate exercise, which will raise a natural bloom in your cheeks, unmatable of art. Candor and good humor will give an openness to your countenance that will make you universally agreeable. A desire of pleasing will add fire to your eyes, and breathing the morning air at sunrise will give your lips a vermillion hue. That amiable vivacity which you now possess may be happily heightened and preserved if you avoid late hours, but not otherwise; for the first gives the face a drowsy, disagreeable aspect; the second is the mother of wrinkles, and the third is a fruitful source of weak eyes and a sallow complexion.

A MUD VOLCANO.—While returning by a new route to our camp, dull, thundering sounds, which General Washburn likened to frequent discharges of a distant mortar, broke upon our ears. We followed their direction, and found them to proceed from a mud volcano, which occupied the slope of a small hill, embowered in a grove of pines. Dense volumes of steam shot into the air with each report, through a crater thirty feet in diameter. The reports, though irregular, occurred as often as every five seconds, and could be distinctly heard half a mile. Each alternate report shook the ground a distance of two hundred yards or more, and the massive jets of vapor which accompanied them burst forth like the smoke of burning gunpowder. It was impossible to stand on the edge of that side of the crater opposite the wind, and one of our party, Mr. Hedges, was rewarded for his temerity in venturing too near the rim, by being thrown by the force of the volume of steam violently down the outer side of the crater. From lusty views, afforded by occasional gusts of wind, we could see at a depth of sixty feet the regurgitating contents.—Scribner's for May.

POLITENESS is, in business, what stratagem is in war. It gives power to weakness; it supplies great deficiencies. It is invincible either in the attack or defense.

IN THE intoxicating cup discontent seeks for comfort; cowardice for courage; bashfulness for confidence; sadness for joy; and they all find ruin.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no improvement to notice in the general market since our last report, and from nearly every branch of trade we hear complaints of increasing dullness. With trifling receipts, nothing of any moment has been done in sugar and molasses, but the few sales reported have been at about previous rates. On Tuesday, however, the sales of the former were to a fair extent. There has been rather better demand for flour, but without any improvement in prices. Corn has been in good request, at about previous rates. Provisions have continued quiet but firm.

The accounts from the interior are quite as discouraging as before, but are mostly anterior to the present dry, warm spell, up to which the indications pointed not only to a material decrease in acreage, but to a serious falling off in the yield of the area planted. In fact, the prospect was quite as unpromising as the report of the Agricultural Bureau. In a short time we shall have reports of the effects of the change in the weather, which we hope will prove more satisfactory.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-third instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	2,578
Lake	6
Mobile	90
Texas	343
Total	3,017

On Saturday the demand was confined to a few buyers who came forward with lower offers, and in order to effect sales factors were compelled to make additional concessions of fully ¼c., while the sales were confined to barely 450 bales. On Monday the business embraced 650 bales, but at still easier rates, indicating a further decline of ¼c. On Tuesday the market opened with a better inquiry, and as buyers operated with more spirit the sales embraced 850 bales, but, in agreement with a further decline of ⅛c. at New York, prices continued to rule in favor of buyers, the sales of good ordinary showing a falling off of nearly or quite ¼c. Low middling ruled at about Monday's figures, and there were some limited operations in middling and strict middling for the first time in several days. The latter have maintained their positions much better than the medium grades, our quotations for middling showing a falling off of only ⅛c. from last Tuesday evening, while those for good ordinary and low middling present a decline of 1¼c.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 1,950 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,385,859 bales, against 1,118,434 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,047,397 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 202,520 bales to Great Britain, 301,481 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 208,745 to France.

Ordinary	13¾ to 14¾
Good ordinary	15¾ to 16¼
Low middling	18 to 18⅝
Middling	20 to 20½
Strict middling	to 21

LARD.—We note a dull market. Kegs are quoted at 11⅛ to 11¾c. per pound; tierces 10¼ to 10½c. for packers', and 10½c. for refined.

BREAKFAST BACON.—On Saturday 15 boxes Western sold at 11c. On Monday 50 boxes sold at 10¾c., and 25 boxes at 11c. per pound.

In bonds we notice sales of $10,000 new City seven per cents on Monday at 66½; and $10,000 Mobile and Texas Railroad first mortgage eight per cents on Tuesday at 85½.

The sales of warrants include $1,700 State on Saturday at 64½; $35,000 do. on Monday, of which $15,000 sold at 60½ and 60¾; and $[illegible],500, in several lots, on Tuesday at 60¼, 60⅜ and 60½.

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in the most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention in what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.

PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.

Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.

IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.

THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having no chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $—, will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Those parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Memphis, June 28.—The decision declaring county warrants void creates much excitement. They amount to $1,200,000, whereof $300,000 were issued to the Mississippi Central railroad, now held by McComb & Co.

A large number of citizens of Mississippi are on trial at Oxford, charged with being Ku-Klux.

The Avalanche (Oxford, Mississippi) special says: The first trial of importance under the Ku-Klux bill began there to-day before Judge Hill, United States District Court, against twenty-eight persons charged with Ku-Kluxing a negro named Alexander Page, in Monroe county, last March.

The prisoners rely chiefly on alibies and previous good character. They are guarded by a detachment of the sixth infantry.

The trial excites great interest, and will probably last several days.

The Little Rock (Arkansas) Gazette, in its crop report, has cheering news from the counties of Pulaski, Hempstead, Woodruff, Sebastian, Cross, Ouachita and Conway, as to cotton and corn, and estimates the acreage at but a third less than last year.

Richmond, Va., June 29.—The third trial of ex-Mayor Cahoon, for complicity in the Hannstein forgery, which has been in progress for one week, concluded this evening, the jury finding him guilty, the penalty being a term of two years in the penitentiary, with a recommendation for executive clemency. The jury will call on the Governor to-morrow in his behalf. He had been previously convicted for five years, but a new trial was granted on law points.

Memphis, June 29.—A western-bound freight train on the Memphis and Charleston railroad was thrown from the track near Lafayette, this afternoon, by an axle breaking. Samuel Blacksheer and William Turner, brakesmen, were instantly killed.

Tom Boyle, a newsboy, fell from a passenger train near the same place to-day, and was killed.

Washington, June 30.—The war indemnity claim of Kentucky, amounting to over $500,000, was paid to-day. The claims of other States want appropriation of Congress. Kentucky's agent beat the expiration law thirty-five minutes.

Prof. Frederick Watts, of Pennsylvania, has been appointed Commissioner of Agriculture.

New York, June 30.—At an exciting secret meeting of the Protestant Episcopal General Theological Seminary, last evening, charges were made against the efficiency, learning and general conduct of Dean Forbes, whereupon he resigned and took leave. During the discussion ex-Judge Bell, a trustee, fell dead of heart disease, while speaking.

New York, July 1.—A bronze bust of Washington Irving will be unveiled in Prospect Park to-day with appropriate ceremonies.

Washington, July 1.—The debt statement shows a decrease of over $7,000,000.

New York, July 2.—The Herald says: Grant has pardoned Bowen, the bigamist, ex-Congressman. The document was signed at Long Branch yesterday.

The results of the surveys of the Darien expedition are said to be so far satisfactory. The Napipi route is considered a success. Commodore Selfridge was awaiting the arrival of the surveying party that ascended the Atrato, and for the storeship guard, when all will return home.

Three hundred Mormons from Europe left for Salt Lake on Friday in charge of one of Brigham Young's sons, and four hundred more are at quarantine.

Augusta, Ga., July 3.—On Saturday last twenty-five armed negroes went to the plantation of Angus Red, in Barnwell county, South Carolina, about twelve miles below Augusta, on the Savannah river. Arriving at Red's residence, the party fired a volley into it, killing Thomas A. Lowe, and seriously wounding Red and his wife and mother. After disarming Red, the negroes returned to Paul F. Hammond's plantation, where a deputy sheriff tried to arrest them, but without success, as they refused to disarm. The negroes, however, promised to go to Aiken and stand an investigation. One of the parties implicated was arrested here this evening. His version is that Red and Lowe attempted to chastise a negro for stealing from the premises of the former. The negro escaped from them and returned with an armed band, who did the shooting by way of retaliation. The affair causes uneasiness and alarm. The party arrested in this city represents himself as a school teacher, and says he was on his way to Aiken to deliver himself up to the authorities.

FOREIGN.

Florence, June 28.—The Bank of Romo has been founded with a capital of thirty millions of livres.

King Victor Emanuel set out to-day on his journey to Naples and Rome. The chief authorities of the kingdom and the city took leave of him at the depot.

Washington, June 28.—The Secretary of the Navy has received the following dispatch:

Corea, June 23.—To the Secretary of the Navy: The Coreans, not apologizing for their treacherous attack on the tenth instant, landed on Kargnoe, took and destroyed one of the lower forts and ammunition; on the eleventh took the fort, then stormed and captured the strongholds. Five forts were taken. The troops are reported at eleven thousand. There was desperate hand-to-hand fighting in the citadel. The ordnance destroyed amounted to four hundred and eighty-one pieces, principally small brass pieces, and small arms very many. Fifty flags were taken. Counted two hundred and forty-three dead Coreans around the citadel. We lost three killed. The gallant Lieutenant McKee, who was the first man inside the citadel, killed by a bullet and spear; marine Dennis Hanchan, and landsman Seth Allen. Our nine wounded are all out of danger and doing well.

John Rodgers.

London, June 28.—Dispatches from Shanghai announce a victory of the American fleet over the Coreans.

London, June 28.—The Gazette announces that ratifications of the treaty of Washington were exchanged on the seventeenth, and that the commissioners under it will soon be named.

British subjects are notified to present their claims within six months after the first meeting of the commissioners.

The smallpox deaths in London average two hundred and forty weekly.

Paris, June 29, evening.—The review of the army at Longchamps to-day was a grand success. Nothing occurred to mar its effect. The troops showed much enthusiasm, and repeatedly cheered President Thiers. Military medals were conferred on Vinoy and L'Admirault, and a large number of promotions in the Legion of Honor were announced.

La Patrie denies the rumor of a triple alliance between Russia, Prussia and Austria.

M. Gambetta, in a speech at Bordeaux, protested his loyalty to the present government.

Berlin, June 30.—The Emperor has presented the estate of Schwarzendeck to Bismarck.

Paris, June 30.—The dinner given by Thiers after the review yesterday was a brilliant affair, and was attended by nearly all the generals and colonels of the army in and near Paris, and by the members of the ministry and many prominent deputies of the Assembly. The utmost cordiality prevailed.

London, June 30.—Correspondents of the London papers all agree that the review at Longchamps and the French loan are both successful. One writer says: The thought of revenge upon Germany is uppermost in the minds of the Parisians, who still hope for an opportunity to readjust the frontier.

Reports say that the difficulty between Greece and Turkey, arising from the appointment of Tricoupis as Greek embassador to Constantinople, whom the Porte refused to receive, has been amicably arranged, and that the two countries are now on good terms.

Paris, July 1.—Marshal McMahon and General De Cissey are going to Bareges, in the Pyrenees mountains, to seek renewed health.

Vienna, July 1.—The Austrian delegation passed the budget. Count Von Benst made a speech in the Reichtsrath to-day, to the effect that the relations of the empire with all foreign powers were friendly.

Rome, July 1.—All the Italian ministers have arrived in Rome, and have been installed in their ministories.

The representatives of Portugal, Greece, Brazil, Switzerland and Bavaria have arrived. Other embassadors are expected to-morrow.

London, July 1.—The attempt made by Germany to excite dissatisfaction with the British government among the inhabitants of Heligoland has proved a failure.

Mr. Howard, secretary of the British legation at Washington, has been appointed agent in the United States to receive the claims of British subjects coming within articles twelve to seventeen of the treaty of Washington.

The morning journals issued here to-day discuss the French elections which take place to-morrow. They generally believe the result will be favorable to the government of M. Thiers and the republic.

A dispatch from Paris says monarchists will probably be returned from many of the departments.

The imperialists are making an active canvass, but really have no chance of securing any considerable number of members of the Assembly.

Paris, July 2.—A placard was publicly posted this morning proposing candidature for the Assembly on the platform of a continuance of the republic, with Thiers and Gambetta as leaders.

By order of the War Department the army of Vinoy is dissolved.

The troops commenced leaving Paris yesterday, in conformity with the treaty.

Orders have been issued from German headquarters forbidding the army of occupation from entering Paris.

Rome, July 2.—The Official Gazette of the Italian government has been transferred to this city, and the first number, with the date of publication at Rome, appeared to-day.

Paris, July 2, noon.—The elections are proceeding quietly. Many persons whose names are on the polling lists abstain from voting.

Rome, July 3.—Ministers from Germany, Sweden, Turkey, Holland, Russia, Spain and the United States, to King Victor Emanuel, have arrived.

Paris, July 3.—The following approximates the result of the elections in thirty-four departments, excepting the Seine: 56 Republicans and 12 Conservatives are now considered certain; 80 or 90 of 114 deputies chosen are moderate Republicans, and will support the Thiers government.

The workmen all cast their votes for M. Gambetta and Victor Hugo, who are the candidates elected for the first section of the seventh arrondissement.

The returns from Seaux are favorable to the government candidates.

The election of Gambetta, Walewski, Lovinet, Pernolet, Presseure, Cissey and Andre is certain.

In some districts only a two-thirds vote was polled.

A long interview was held between President Thiers and General Fabrice, the German administrator of civil affairs in France.

Paris, July 3.—A dispatch from Bordeaux announces that four Republicans have been chosen from the department of Gironde to the Assembly. The Republicans cast 65,000 votes, the Imporialists 18,000 and the Royalists 12,000.

Faidherbe and Testelin, Republicans, have been elected from the department of the Nord by a two-thirds vote.

The departments of Pas de Calais and Soueme have also chosen General Faidherbe.

The department of Aisne elects Republicans, and the department of the Seine Inferieure elects moderate Republicans.

Only two Monarchists are chosen from Paris.

Gambetta has been returned to the Assembly from Marseilles.

Liberals were chosen to the Assembly from the departments of the Seine and Oise. Duvergie and Magne are among the successful candidates. Rouher is defeated in the department of Clarente Inferieure.

A good anecdote is related of Dr. Rice, which enforces its own lesson. When he was at the head of the Theological Seminary in Prince Edward, one of the out parishes of Virginia sent to him for a minister. They, as usual in such cases, wanted a scholar, a gentleman, an orator, a pastor, a fine writer, in short a perfect minister. They "had formerly given $350 per annum; but now, if they could get such a man as they wanted, they could raise it to $400." The doctor answered by telling them to send to heaven for Dr. Dwight. He was the only such man he knew; and as he had been living a good while on spiritual food, he might possibly live on four hundred dollars!"

It is a great joy of the gospel—indeed, it is that which makes it gospel—that it is for any and every poor sinner who will believe.

N. O., O. AND G. W. RAILROAD.

Judge Boyce is in the city attending to the city interests of the railroad to be built between Berwick's Bay and Washington—a distance of one hundred miles. The judge will stir up as much interest as possible in the city to forward the enterprise, and then see what can be done in the parishes. He simply requests the police jury of each parish to order an election, that the tax-payers of the parish may vote for or against the papers; if for it, the appropriation stands good; if against it, the measure fails. This relieves the police jurors of all personal responsibility in the matter, since, if the tax is sustained, it is by the vote of those who pay the taxes.

The parish bonds are to be payable in twenty years, and the parish will be benefited by the railroad twenty times the amount of the bonds in that time.

A railroad that will enable the people of Washington and Opelousas to reach New Orleans in eight hours will add many thousands to the population of these parishes in a few years, and millions to the value of the real estate.

Mr. Morgan has liberally subscribed as stock the road-bed, which cost the old company $450,000 to build it, and he put this and all the franchises of the road west of Berwick's Bay in as stock at $270,000.

As soon as the cross-ties are laid down, and the bridges and culverts built, money can be obtained to complete the road and put it in running order by first mortgage bonds laid upon the road.

This great work once completed would justify the parishes in donating to the road what is merely asked as a loan for twenty years.

We trust the police jurors will permit the tax-payers to vote on the proposition of Judge Boyce, the president of the company.—New Iberia Planters' Banner.

The Overflow in Calcasieu and Cameron Parishes.—The New Iberia Planters' Banner says:

The Lake Charles Echo, of the twenty-fourth ultimo, describes the effects of the late storm to be fearful in that section of the State. It says that the cotton and corn crop is entirely destroyed, and that it is possible that there will not be an ear of corn or pound of cotton made in Calcasieu parish the present season. This seems almost incredible, though the storm was much more disastrous in that locality than it was here, or even between here and there. The Echo represents its effects in the new parish of Cameron as much more disastrous in general than it really was, as we, the junior of this paper, can testify from personal observation, having been there the next day after the storm. It is highly gratifying to know that casualties of human life so far reported are astonishingly small, having heard of none but the two little children who were drowned on Prairie Gregg.

In the Green Vaults at Dresden they used to show—in ancient days, when I was there—the armor of famous old warriors. But I doubt if I should have seemed to you a very graceful or a very dangerous warrior, except to myself, if I had put on the heaviest suit of mail in the museum. Only he who had strength to manage the weight readily, and to move easily in iron clothes, could have been efficient in those cuirasses and greaves and helmets. And if a man merely heeds the letter and not the spirit of the best rules, his life may be correct, but it will not be lovely.—G. W. Curtis.

A London correspondent writes to one of our papers that the English Catholics appear to cling to their chains. They are the antipodes of their ancestors. They almost reproach the holy father for giving them so much liberty. The newspapers and reviews vie in extravagant servility and adulation. They pine for something superlatively ridiculous that shall prove their credulity, and if the Pope declared to-morrow that Rome was in Australia they would ecstatically prostrate themselves and bless him for saying so.

Take Care.—The devil and a pious monk had a dispute. The monk charged the devil with stealing one of his members. The devil replied: "I found him on my premises (the theater) and took him."

Internal divisions among the members of Christ have more wounded his cause than all the external attacks of earth and hell.

Organization of a Colored Conference.

Bishop Pierce met Bishop Miles, of the Colored Methodist Church, at Enfield, North Carolina, last week, and they organized a colored Conference for Virginia and North Carolina.

The following account of the meeting is given by the Weldon News:

"There was a meeting of the colored ministers belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church of Virginia and North Carolina, at Enfield, last week, for the purpose of organizing a Conference in the two States, under the General Colored Conference of America, organized last December. This is an independent work that has been set apart by the Methodist Episcopal Conference South, with a view of giving the blacks a church of their own, with their own State and General Conferences, and with their own Bishops, in order that they may regulate their own government. The two Bishops have adopted the workings of the Methodist Episcopal Conference South as their guidance, and they are going forward earnestly in their work. The church government has nothing pertaining to politics in it.

"Bishop Miles (colored) met Bishop Pierce and the Rev. Mr. Burton at Enfield, and, under his management, with the assistance of these gentlemen, all necessary primary steps were taken for the organization of the Conference for these two States. All the membership of the two, consisting of some one thousand nine hundred persons, together with all the church property belonging to them, were formally transferred to Bishop Miles, and the Conference adjourned to meet in Petersburg, Virginia, on the thirteenth of December next, for the purpose of thorough organization."

We trust that all our ministers will heartily join in advancing the interests of this new Conference. It begins well, and we have no doubt its numbers will be more than doubled before the meeting at Petersburg next December. Bishop Miles is devoting himself with great industry to the work of organizing this new church, and his success has been most encouraging.

We hope he will soon be able to visit Virginia. The field here is large and inviting.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

Blowing up a Congregation.—A Methodist preacher in Rome—Francesco Sciarelli—opened very recently a new place of worship in Rome, under the Pope's nose. He reports in the Capitale, a paper of that city, under date of May 8:

An event took place in this locality yesterday evening which might have produced the most deplorable consequences. The hall was crowded with people, among whom were many ladies, and women with little children in their arms. We were about to conclude our worship, which had been most edifying on account of the administration of the Holy Supper to about fifteen evangelical communicants of old date from the Methodist churches of Naples and Vincensa, when all in a moment, between the outer door and the inner glass door, a tremendous detonation took place, which at once extinguished all the lights in the hall. Imagine the alarm of everybody, the cries, the weeping of the women; the glass was all in fragments, and the people, not knowing what to do in the dark, crowded alternately toward the door and back into the room. The benches were upset, and many persons had their hands lacerated by the broken glass. At last we succeeded in getting lights, and so the alarm was rather abated. We thought that it had only been one of the usual paper bombs which the clericals so often use when they wish to produce confusion; but to our surprise we found that it was a true and real bomb, all full of fragments of iron. Evidently the intention of our enemies was to kill us. We were saved only by the bomb not being tied tight enough, and because our time had not yet come. We have only to be grateful, and say: "Lord, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Mary!—Byron had a "passion for the name of Mary," and that sweet name, as it appears from a recent English special report, is the most popular Christian name, William ranking next. Of 100,000 children, half boys and half girls, 6,819 bore the name of Mary, 6,590 William, 6,230 John, 4,617 Elizabeth, 3,876 Thomas, etc. There were only 1,237 Arthurs, 1,232 Alfreds and 1,170 Edwards in the lot.

At a late ordination in New Hampshire the Rev. Baron Slow, D. D., of Boston, preached the sermon from Acts xx, 19. After stating some six or seven reasons for the cultivation of ministerial humility, his eighth was a seasonable admonition to some who make themselves injudiciously prominent, and boast, almost without knowing it, of how much they have accomplished in their fields of labor. He said a humble spirit would not lead a minister to report a revival thus: "I came to this place and found things in a bad state; but I rallied the church, established prayer-meetings, reorganized the Sunday school; the congregation has greatly increased, the church is enlarged and become efficient; my labors have become very successful; I have baptized fifty, among whom are some of the most prominent citizens." The language of humility would be something like this: "I was permitted to enter the field, as successor of a pious minister, and gather in some of the fruits of his labors. The Lord has been pleased to revive his work; the prayers of his people have been answered. I have baptized fifty, many of whom spake of impressions received from the faithful counsels of my predecessor. To God be all the praise!"

Those Northern Methodists who say we slander their church when we say that it claims and would appropriate all the church property which fell to us by the Plan of Separation, had better read the following from the Central Christian Advocate, a Northern paper published in St. Louis. After reiterating the usual slander about our secession, etc., and alluding to the decision of the Supreme Court in our favor, it says: "While our church yielded to that decision, and, wisely or not, suffered it to apply to all the church property in the Southern States which was claimed and since held, with few exceptions, by the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and the absorption of that property by that church, have not lessened the right of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in the premises, to be the legitimate holder in fee of these properties. The Methodist Episcopal Church South is tenant by sufferance only. Our right to this whole church property is indisputable; and though a quarter of a century has passed without possession, that right is still intact and indefeasible, and no competent, honest judge ever did or could render any other decision." Yet these are the men who talk about organic union!—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Death of the Rev. Dr. Gibbons.—Our beloved brother and fellow-laborer, Dr. John L. Gibbons, has entered into rest. He closed his long and useful career on Friday, the twenty-third of June, in the seventy-first year of his age, at the residence of John L. Turner, Esq., near Pikesville, Baltimore county, Maryland.

Dr. Gibbons was a native of Jefferson county, Virginia. He was converted to God, and became a Methodist preacher when quite a young man. He was received into the Baltimore Conference, and appointed to South Branch circuit in the spring of 1822, and from that time remained a member of the Conference in the effective ranks for about twenty years. He then commenced the practice of medicine in Baltimore county, and subsequently in the cities of Washington and Baltimore, until stricken down by paralysis, from the effects of which, after several years of prostration, he peacefully closed his earthly pilgrimage.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

The late Father Taylor, of Boston, was occasionally as quaint in his sayings as he was eloquent and practical. On one occasion, after a speaker in prayer meeting had told his hearers that repentance was never too late, for a sinner blown up in a powder mill could make his peace with heaven before he fell to the earth, Father Taylor said: "Do not trust to such a chance, brethren; don't wait for your dying hour before you repent. Perhaps you never will be blown up in a powder mill!"

"Oh, how sweet to have a foretaste of the joys above—a smile from Jesus, and whisper of his grace! How insignificant, then, is the world, with its pleasures and honors!"—G. W. Curtis.

HOPE FOR THE HOPELESS.

BY CARL SPENCER.

If a hand hath such a stain
It will ne'er come white again—
(Though its cleansing hath sufficed,
It should touch the hand of Christ,
There be shames the world thinks loss,
Past the helping of the Cross)—
Let it not drop idly, then;
It may serve God's race of men;
It may work with Him below,
Where the white hands fear to go.
Looking up, and reaching down,
There is neither scorn nor frown.
In that service, day by day,
Evil marks shall wear away.
She that washed Christ's feet is known
In heaven by that act alone.

If a heart hath such a pain
It will ne'er be gay again—
(There are hurts whose cure is grown
On the heavenly hills alone;
Some most bitter tears will stay
Last, for God to wipe away)—
Think on whose High-priestly head
Grief's full chrism once was shed.
Not without some rites of pain
Doth God his comforters ordain.
And O, that feeble lives like ours
Should taste the great hereafter's powers!
The heart this shifting world hath left,
Like waters sunken in a cleft,
Learns quiet from the Eternal Eye,
And mirrors nothing but the sky.

Christian Union.

How Two Preachers Were Made.

A STORY OF FACTS.

Edward Mills and Henry Clifton were warm friends—Mills a young man, Clifton much older. Mills is a Christian only in theory; Clifton is an unbeliever, intellectual, logical, educated, a very champion of infidelity; withal apparently sincere and very candid. They are dining together at Clifton's. Near by a Methodist religious meeting is in progress—a little noisy, perhaps a little too noisy. Mills expressed himself favorably toward the meeting.

"Surely," said Clifton, "you do not believe in such things?"

"Yes, I do," said Mills.

"What! a man of your sense tolerate such bedlamism! I can hardly respect a man that favors it. Do you believe in getting religion, as these Methodists say (and they are not alone in it, either?) Can you believe it?"

"Yes, I believe in the pardon of sin, and that a man may know it too."

"Well, have you got it?"

"No," said Mills modestly.

"Are you trying to get it?"

"No, I can't say I am."

"Well, you are the biggest fool I ever saw!"

The words went like an arrow through the heart of Mills—a "two-edged sword," indeed. He resolved to seek pardon, and soon found it. With heaven in his soul, he immediately seeks Clifton. They meet cordially. Clifton fixes his eyes upon the joyful face of his young friend. "Why, Ned," said he, "what has happened? What good luck now?"

Mills could restrain his feelings no longer. He threw himself upon Clifton's neck. His soul seemed riven with an agony of joy, mingled with anxiety for his friend.

"Oh!" said he, "it is true, and I have got it."

Clifton's countenance changed instantly. Another nail had been driven in a sure place—another winged messenger fixed far past the barb.

"Well, something good has happened you," said he in a calmer tone.

They talk freely together, and Mills returns home.

Clifton's unbelief is stunned. He cannot tell why, but his heart pains him. It was not logic, nor philosophy, it was a fact, that had seized him.

"I must look further into this matter," said he.

He seeks the house of God. The people wonder at this second Saul in their midst. Some charge him with sinister motives. "An ax to grind," thought one. "I wonder what Clifton wants," said another. "We must pray for him," said a third.

In the meantime, and all through the sermon, Clifton's eyes are fixed on the preacher, resolute in his purpose to "look further," and apparently regardless of everything else.

"I know it's so, and I have got it," was ringing in his ears.

"Mills says it is so. It must be so. I must examine into it," he repeated to himself.

Near the close of the services an invitation was given to unite with the church. After the solemn and affectionate voice of the minister had ceased, there was almost perfect silence. At this juncture, Clifton rose from his seat, and in a calm, deliberate voice said:

"I know but little of this matter. Indeed I have been doubting the whole thing. I desire to know more. I do not know there is a God. I do not know that Christ is a Savior; but my neighbor Mills says it is so, and I must believe him. I came to seek light. I am honest in my purpose, and, if you will take me, I will join you in search of the truth."

All eyes at first turned to Clifton. As he proceeded deliberately to state his case some heads dropped as if in doubt, some leaned forward as if to pray. Some eyes seemed riveted upon him in surprise, while others filled with tears.

"It is a part of our policy to take seekers," said a strong voice in a firm, affectionate tone. "We will take you," said the minister. "Come along; we will help you all we can."

Clifton came forward with deliberate step, and with a serious mien he extended his hand, and was recognized as a seeker of God. He took his seat near the altar. Day after day he was found in the same place. A spirit of earnest inquiry had possessed him, but no intimations of progress could be had from him. The affectionate attention of the brethren pleased him, but the old arguments would come back with double force; his thoughts, in spite of himself, would take the old channels, and he would find himself in stark rebellion against God, while surrounded by his people. To the brethren he became one of those hard cases not unfrequently met with on such occasions. Prayer was made for him by the whole church. Clifton would always kneel, but otherwise was quite in a state of non-committal. The leader of the meeting resolved at last, with God's help, to storm the citadel if possible. All are kneeling—the whole church in their hearts—before the throne. The minister, in a mild, firm manner, requested Clifton to lead the church in prayer. A sort of "unutterable groan" ran through the house. "Will he do it?" thought every one. But Clifton had come to seek the truth. He was honest. "Why should I not ask for it?" thought he. He raised his voice to God, scarcely "believing that he is." He stated his case, his unbelief, his opposition to Christianity, his mental difficulties, his desire to know more, his purpose to learn. He asked for light, for guidance, for help, if they were for him in the universe. All through his prayer, to the amen, the church, in an agony of spirit, held up the hands of the man as he seemed to be feeling in the darkness for his God.

Clifton rose from his knees. For the first time he really believed that Christianity was the truth. Hope had dawned, but amidst what clouds! Light had fallen in his soul only to reveal how far, O how far! he was from God. He vowed to pursue his search. He left the church "wounded, indeed, by the arrows." He sought his home, took down his Bible, no more to argue, to cavil, to sneer, but to seek him "of whom Moses, in the law and the prophets, did write." The spirit of truth had settled his metaphysics, and his philosophy had ceased "to dream." While reading the fourteenth chapter of John's gospel, beginning, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me," the message seemed specially for him. All through the chapter a loving Savior seemed to be talking to him. "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." It was the oil upon the troubled waters. He could say: "I know it is so, and I have found it." When he met the brethren "a new song was in his mouth," even praise to God.

Joy filled every bosom in the church then, and long years after. It is a bright spot in memory's waste, the time and place when and where Henry Clifton was brought to God. He became a minister of the gospel, and dedicated his talents to God, and infidelity of every kind found in him a relentless foe. He whom we have called Mills is still preaching, but Clifton has gone to his reward. "He that doeth his will shall know of the doctrine that it is of God." T. W. BROWN.

SHARON FEMALE COLLEGE.

MR. EDITOR: The annual examination and commencement exercises of this old and useful institution came off June 19–22.

The examinations were as thorough as the time allotted would allow, and gave evidence that pupils and teachers had been diligent. Five young ladies graduated and received the degree of mistress of English literature, viz: Misses Mollie Holliday, Dora Cameron, Fannie Holliday, Lou. Holliday and Bettie Kearney.

There was a large audience attending commencement exercises, which shows that the college has a large place in the affections of the people. But for more than thirty years the people of this country have been attending these annual festivals here. They are looked to with great interest; and if anything were to occur to destroy the old college, one bright day in every year would be blotted from the enjoyment of this people, and of many in the surrounding country. Long may this old college flourish. May many be induced to rally to its support. H. H. MONTGOMERY.

GOD'S LOVE.

God's love is either his natural delight on what is good, or his special inclination wherewith he embraced the whole human family. God loves, who himself is love. To love is his nature. We love too, but only out of the capability from God. All love in creatures is only a spark, enkindled on the infinite fire of God's love. According to the nature of man his love may be compared, and, however great, yet it can be measured; but who can measure or describe the boundless ocean of God's love? Happy are the souls whom the arm of God's love has clasped, and whose Father-hand leads them as children, and heirs of eternal life. The love of God is incomprehensible—so great that no one can utter it; infinite as God himself is. What is human intellect to embrace it? Who is God and who are we? He is the great and almighty Creator; we are the workmanship of his hands—dust and ashes. He is the most holy God; we are poor sinners by nature. He is all; we are nothing. And yet God has loved us to such a degree that he gave us his Son to die for us that we may live and enjoy what Jesus purchased for us with his own blood. The love of God is eternal; before the foundation of the world was laid God resolved and bound himself to send Christ into the world, expressly to bring salvation to all that believe. The salvation of man is founded upon this immutable principle.

God's love is also voluntary. He had no need of loving us, neither was he under any obligation to do so; for "who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again," nor that any one besought him; for who can beseech God before he is? No; God, constrained through his great goodness and mercy, did it. Nothing existed that should persuade him to be gracious toward poor sinners but his own loving heart only. "I have seen his ways," namely, how contrary to everything good, and yet, says he, "will heal him; I will heal him also, restore comfort unto him, and to his mourners." Did God love us so affectionately when we were yet sinners! How much more since we became reconciled through the death of his Son, and claim friendship with God! In Christ we are the more assured of his love. God, who manifested his love toward enemies, will certainly not forsake nor forget his friends in eternity. God's love is universal. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life." To the believing the love and mercy of God will be a loadstone to attract the soul into eternal glory; otherwise it will be a millstone, at last to sink it down into eternal perdition.—Ev. Messenger.

Our happiness and misery are trusted to our conduct, and made to depend upon it.

Reminiscences of Rev. J. J. E. Byrd.

NUMBER SIX.

Ira Byrd was deservedly popular on Claibourne circuit. He was a prompt disciplinarian, and attended to all the interests of his pastoral charge. Class and prayer meetings and love-feasts were then fixtures of the church, and were still kept up in their primitive simplicity and spiritual power, and Bro. Byrd was their unyielding advocate and promoter. He had two or three camp meetings on the circuit, which were a great blessing to the church. Bro. Byrd was emphatically a camp meeting man, and his labors on such occasions shone with more brilliancy and success than anywhere else. But he was destined to have another extra nursing spell with his protege. Why I was subjected to such sore conflicts the year I entered the ministry I could not then conjecture. Now, I think, I know more about it. God saw that I had a long journey before me, during which I would have to assist in the training of scores of young men for the ministry, and he bore me through all the phases of experience on this subject that I might be more perfectly prepared to instruct, comfort and encourage others in similar circumstances. I trust the design of God, to some extent, has been accomplished in this matter.

Soon after the cotton-picking season set in Bro. John A. Barnes, in the vicinity of Port Gibson, employed me at good wages to pick cotton and superintend the weighing of the cotton picked by his hands. As he was mostly away from home, I was the only white person on the plantation, except a harmless, crazy old gentleman, who lived in an outhouse, so that I had unbroken quietness, and the privilege of uninterrupted study when not engaged in out-door business. It was to me an earthly paradise, and Satan soon made use of it to throw his last powerful temptation between me and the itinerancy. It was doing the greatest violence to my natural feelings and former habits to make me a traveling preacher. My beau ideal of earthly bliss was to have a little home of my own, where in peaceful quietness I might till the soil and tend the herd, and serve God all my days as a layman in the church, and then go home to heaven; and the unbroken enjoyment I had at the pleasant home of Bro. Barnes only made me feel more like I wanted one of my own. The vision was often before my mind, adorned with the most inviting colors. I was almost ready to hope that something might occur as a plausible excuse for declining the itinerancy. The last Quarterly Conference for the current year was held at Center camp meeting, and we were on the ground. I had to be examined and recommended there to the District Conference for license to preach, and a recommendation to the Annual Conference, or the matter would have to be deferred at least one year. Bro. Byrd was disappointed and grieved at my evident hesitancy, and urged me to go before the Conference for examination and recommendation. I knew my duty, but there was a fearful shrinking of the flesh. Had it not been for my faithful guardian the result might have been fatal to me. My mind was agitated and oppressed, and my eyes were trailing in the dust when Bro. Byrd came out of the Conference to urge me for the last time to yield to what I had long acknowledged to be my duty. I made the effort, and succeeded in saying: "I will go if the Conference will have me." The dreadful incubus was broken and dispersed. The struggle was over, the crisis was passed, the world faded from my vision, and my consecration to the work of the ministry was soon complete and perpetual. In a few brief days I was licensed to preach, and immediately employed by the presiding elder to fill a vacancy on Amite circuit. If, in the forty-seven years of my connection with the Mississippi Conference, I have been worth anything to the church and the world, Ira Byrd will largely share the recompense of the reward. He literally nursed me into the itinerancy, and to the end of life called me his boy with more than an earthly father's love.

I could write almost indefinitely about this good man and faithful minister, but I think it is time to close this serial. After subtracting six years of his itinerancy appropriated elsewhere, during the remaining portion of his effective labors he traveled almost over the entire territory between the Mississippi and Pearl rivers, bounded on the south by Lake Pontchartrain and on the north by the waters of the Yallobusha. He is known in every community. His praise is in all the churches where he has gone preaching the gospel of the grace of God. He was one of the most lovely human beings we have ever known—made so by the abounding grace of God. He possessed great natural bravery, and his moral courage was of the highest order, and yet he was as teachable as a child and as tractable as a lamb. In a conversation with Dr. Winans many years ago, on this predominant trait in Bro. Byrd's Christian character, he remarked: "Ira Byrd is an embodiment of love." Some old ministers, under the disappointments of life and the irritating influence of domestic trouble, and the infirmities of advanced age, seem to become very censorious and fault-finding, and manifest a sourness of spirit incompatible with the meekness, gentleness and patience of a mature Christian ripe for heaven. Such, however, was not the case with Ira Byrd. He did not think all the good times had passed away with the morning and noon of his life. He was a sweet spirited, happy old man. He had good times to the end of life. When no longer able to be a leader in Israel, and to fight in the fore-front of the sacramental host, he gracefully retired to the rear, and, resting upon his laurels legitimately won, rejoiced to the last at the zeal and success of his younger brethren. He was often very happy during his last protracted and painful affliction; and after having taught us by his life how to live, he taught us by his death how to die.

In regard even to some talented ministers of the gospel, there is a sort of indefinable fear lest they should do something to injure the church and wound the cause of religion, of which we seldom speak. We do not know that they will ever do anything really damaging to the interests of the church, or set out of character as ministers of the gospel, but somehow we cannot rid ourselves of these painful misgivings. We fear they are not fully reliable, and our forebodings have so often been realized that we scarcely know how to avoid them in the future. But we presume not one of his co-laborers ever had any misgivings about Ira Byrd. We had the utmost confidence in his Christian and ministerial fidelity. We felt that all the interests of the church were safe in his keeping. In peace and in war, amidst political convulsions and the wreck of fortunes we always knew just where to find this firm and faithful man. As "every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor," how vast is the reward of Ira Byrd after his sixty years of Christian pilgrimage and ministerial labor! May we follow him as he followed Christ! J. G. JONES.

TURNER.—Prout once told me a story of Turner that may be worth preserving: Turner, Prout and Varley were on a sketching tour in Devonshire; they had to cross a ferry, the passage charge for which was sixpence. Varley did not happen to have any change and borrowed the money from Turner—advanced reluctantly. Next morning Varley and Prout took the Exeter coach for London, leaving Turner behind. But to their surprised gratification, although the hour was daybreak, and the morning bleak and dark, they saw Turner at the coach office, waiting to see them off. Varley acknowledged the compliment, and thanked him. "No," said Turner, "it isn't that; but you forgot to give me back the sixpence I lent you yesterday.—S. C. Hall.

"THERE!" exclaimed a Frenchman the other morning, "I have slept sixteen hours. I went to bed at eight and got up at eight."

WHENCE COME THE ROSES?

There is an old legend that there were in the Garden of Eden roses but white ones until Eve tasted of the forbidden fruit. When the roses saw her do this they blushed for shame, in every shade from the faintest damask to burning red; and ever since there have been all the lively tints that we see.

A different story, however, is told which denies that there were ever any roses at all in the world until on a certain time, at Bethlehem there was a beautiful young girl who was charged with a crime, and sentenced to be burned to death. They led her into a field, and piled fagots around her, and set them on fire. But she being innocent, prayed while they were burning, that some wonderful thing might take place to show that she was innocent. And this is what happened: all the fagots which were already on fire were changed into bushes full of beautiful roses, and those which had not kindled turned to white ones, also full of flowers. "And these," says an ancient writer, "were the first rose-trees and roses, both red and white, that man ever saw." And the country where this was done abounds with them to this day.

Another story accounts for the variegated kinds. Once there were thirty years of miserable civil war in England, growing out of a quarrel between the two families of York and Lancaster about the right to the throne. It was a fierce and cruel contest, during which some of the best blood in the country was shed and noble families became extinct. The whole nation was divided, taking part with one or the other. Each party had a symbol to be known by. The house of Lancaster chose a red rose, which was worn by all its adherents; upon which, the house of York took a white one. So famous did these emblems become that the war was known all over Europe as the "War of the Roses." The long strife ended at last by a marriage between a son and a daughter of the rival families. And then comes the marvelous part of the story; which is, that after that red and white roses appeared growing on the same bush. Sometimes they were almost pure white or unmixed red, but usually striped, mottled or speckled in various and beautiful ways. And a rose, quite common in old-fashioned gardens, has been called, to this day, the "York and Lancaster rose."

If we choose to believe the story we can account for all the varieties of roses known—because gardeners have the art to change great deep shades of a single color—all red or yellow ones. Can anybody tell us where these come from? If so we shall know also the origin of the salmon and pale-buff tints.

Somebody—who is a very convenient authority—boldly asserts that they owe their golden hue to no mystery, no miracle, but to experiment. No legend tracing the unfolding of the first yellow rose, but an ingenious gardener grafting a white rose upon a barberry. This does not sound so grand as the old tradition; but my readers may find out if it is true. They are certainly late by hundreds of years for the first stories, but not for the last. The barberry has clusters of small yellow rose-shaped flowers, and its root and wood are dyed so deeply with yellow that they could easily infuse a stream of golden sap into the scion. Is it true? Who knows? Merry's Museum.

CONTINUITY OF LIFE.—When the child of promise, the prince of the house, perishes suddenly, as it were, take up your life from that point, dull, unfinished work, bereft of motive—when the life which was itself a failure comes to an end when the man of thought is cut off with life at sunset, and genius at the zenith, what does it mean? What? To be Continued—that the whole story of this thrilling drama is to be taken up in another world. In the beautiful eloquence of Wilkinson, "Death is the introduction to the mineral, vegetable and animal worlds, to the moon and the sun, is a friendship and union to be dissolved. Stone and tree, wood and animal, are acquaintances which we meet with in the spiritual sphere, in our latest manhood and angelhood, equally as in the first days of the senses, before the world was gained." The child is a child still, and his education progresses.

THANKS.—I know that every critical truth is assaulted on every side by Rationalism, Ritualism and Romanism, though not in league to oppose the simple faith of the gospel which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. For one, I shall not be grieved if we are driven from the outposts, built and manned for the defense of the truth in other days. We ought to be in the citadel. We are on the Rock of Ages, and the gates of hell cannot prevail. Let the standard of the cross be our rallying point; and, as for creeds and catechisms, let us attend only for Christ and his glory. "One is your Master, even Christ."—Rev. Charles Williams.

TRUST.

The child leans on its parent's breast,
Leaves there its cares, and is at rest;
The bird sits singing by his nest,
And tells aloud
His trust in God, and so is blest
'Neath every cloud.

He hath no store, he sows no seed,
Yet sings aloud and doth not heed;
By flowing streams of grassy mead,
He sings to shame
Men who forget, in fear of need,
A Father's home.

The heart that trusts, forever sings,
And feels as light as it had wings;
A well of peace within it springs.
Come good or ill,
Whate'er to-day, to-morrow brings,
It is His will.

EVIDENCE OF CHRISTIANITY.

I remember once being fog-bound on the Sault Ste. Marie. For a while we kept on, though very slowly. A man stationed at the bow threw out the sounding-line every few moments, and reported the depth of water to the pilot. But the water grew shallower and the fog thicker, and finally we dropped anchor, and, like Paul's fellow-voyagers of old, "wished for day." Your sounding-line, my dear Thomas, may keep you off the shore, but it will never give you clear skies and a plain course. Your light must come from above, not from below.

All intellectual methods for the solution of religious doubts and difficulties are necessarily exceedingly slow, and rarely satisfactory. I have had a good deal to do with unbelievers and skeptics, and I have never known one, outside the books, convinced by pure reason. We laugh at the folly of the idiot boy who borrowed a yard-stick of a neighbor to measure the length of half an hour; but the world is full of would-be wise men, who are repeating a similar operation in endeavoring to test spiritual truths, not by spiritual, but by mathematical and scientific measurements. What should you think of a man who should undertake to determine the value of one of Raphael's paintings by a chemical analysis of the canvas and the pigments?

The best evidence of Christianity is Christianity—what it is, what it has done, what it is doing for others; and better by far, what it is doing and will do if you give it a trial for yourself. Christ's is the true way for the solution of your doubts.

Take that which is clear in the Bible, that which Renan and Theodore Parker recommend; follow that unquestioningly and unhesitatingly, and a light will come. I do not say that you will be led to my creed; but you will be led to substantial truth, to all that is needful for a useful Christian life.

You remember, I am sure, our mutual friend, Deacon Downs, and I do believe you would guess that he was ever troubled by skepticism, unless you happen to have heard him tell the story of its cure.

"When I was a young man," said he, telling the story to me, "I was, or thought I was, a great skeptic. I was thoroughly posted in skeptical literature, and thought I could tackle any divine on theology; did tackle them, too, pretty often, and was always pretty well satisfied with the result. One day I went to hear Dr. B. preach. There was an inquiry meeting after church. I staid; I was not altogether easy or comfortable, and I flattered myself that I really wanted to be a Christian, but that the creed was in my way. Dr. B. came to me with the inquiry: 'Well, young man, what can I do for you?' I stated my difficulty at once.

"'I would like to be a Christian, doctor,' said I, 'but I can't accept your doctrine of the atonement. I can't see how one man can suffer for another, or how there is either justice or mercy in punishing the innocent for the guilty.'

"'There is something a great deal more important for you, young man, than to understand the atonement,' said the doctor.

"'How is that?' said I; 'I thought the atonement was the fundamental doctrine of the church.'

"'So it is,' said the doctor, 'but life is more important than any doctrine. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and soul and strength." Do you do that?'

"'N-no,' said I.

"'"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself"—as thyself,' repeated the doctor, with emphasis. 'Do you do that?'

"'N-no,' said I.

"'Very well,' said the doctor, 'begin—stop living for yourself; live for God and humanity.'

"'But the Christians don't do that,' said I.

"'Never you mind the Christians,' said the doctor. 'Take care of yourself. My word for it, you won't give the experiment a fair trial for a week without coming to the conclusion that you need an atoning Savior, an inspired Bible, and a divine, living power working in your heart and life, revolutionizing the one and remodeling the other.'"

"It was the first argument," said the deacon, when he told me this story, "that I ever met for which I had no answer. I did try the experiment, and I have never had any difficulty about the atonement since.

OUR NATIONAL RUM BILL.

We have frequently referred to the fact that the total of our national rum bill amounts to more than three-fifths of the national debt. The following, which is from the official report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the year 1868, shows the amount of alcoholic drink sold in each State, according to the sworn returns of the rum-sellers themselves, and upon which government tax was paid:

New York	$246,617,520
Pennsylvania	155,663,495

According to the census of 1860 the population of New Jersey, Iowa, Maryland, Indiana and Texas was about the same as Maine, yet the latter, under the prohibitory law, paid only a little over eight millions for rum, while the other States named averaged over thirty-eight millions.

This contrast between Maine and the other States named goes very far to prove the success of prohibitory laws, when enacted and supported in obedience to the popular will.

The Great Canon of the Yellow-Stone.

The Great Falls are at the head of one of the most remarkable canons in the world—a gorge through volcanic rocks fifty miles long, and varying from one thousand to nearly five thousand feet in depth. In its descent through this wonderful chasm, the river falls almost three thousand feet. At one point, where the passage has been worn through a mountain range, our hunters assured us it was more than a vertical mile in depth, and the river, broken into rapids and cascades, appeared no wider than a ribbon. The brain reels as we gaze into this profound and solemn solitude. We shrink from the dizzy verge appalled, glad to feel the solid earth under our feet, and venture no more, except with forms extended, and faces barely protruding over the edge of the precipice. The stillness is horrible. Down, down, down, we see the river attenuated to a thread, tossing its miniature waves, and dashing, with puny strength, the massive walls which imprison it.

All access to its margin is denied, and the dark, gray rocks hold it in dismal shadow. Even the voice of its waters in their convulsive agony cannot be heard. Uncheered by plant or shrub, obstructed with massive bowlders and by jutting points, it rushes madly on its solitary course deeper and deeper into the bowels of the rocky firmament. The solemn grandeur of the scene surpasses description. It must be seen to be felt. The sense of danger with which it impresses you is harrowing in the extreme. You feel the absence of sound, the oppression of absolute silence. If you could only hear that gurgling river, if you could see a living tree in the depth beneath you, if a bird would fly past, if the wind would move any object in the awful chasm, to break for a moment the solemn silence that reigns there, it would relieve that tension of the nerves which the scene has excited, and you would rise from your prostrate condition and thank God that he had permitted you to gaze, unharmed, upon this majestic display of natural architecture. As it is, sympathizing in spirit with the deep gloom of the scene, you crawl from the dreadful verge, scared lest the firm rock give way beneath and precipitate you into the horrid gulf. Scribner's Monthly.

RELIGION IN COSTUME.—To show the reader to what nicety of meaning this expression is resolved, we refer him to the fashionable arbiters in their last issues. They adapt costumes to the very root and groundwork of the Christian system. The mother about to devote her first-born to the service of God, with tears and prayers, for life and for eternity, is advised, as a proper preparation for this rite, to take care that its robe be not less than a yard and a quarter long and trimmed with alternate flutings and valenciennes. A grosgrain silk of dove color, it is delicately thrown out as a suggestion, would probably express her own grave feelings. The young girl who has resolved in the fresh purity of her earliest years to profess openly her secret trust in her Savior, is relieved entirely from all doubt on the subject of dress. The most appropriate expression of her maiden innocence, she is assured, will be found in a kilting trimmed polonaise of white linen, stiff piques giving too harsh a meaning. Nothing can be more appropriate than a finish of a white chip hat with harebells, or better suited to the solemn simplicity of the occasion. It is for more advanced Christians, however, that the imagination of our American modistes wing their most exalted flight. Black, or at least subdued violet suits, we are told, are worn by the leaders of the ton as a proper submission to the awful solemnities of Passion Week, when the Christian world meditates in silence upon the mysteries upon which rests its salvation. "In consonance with this primary idea of mourning, skirts are made but slightly bouffant, and only Chantilly lace is admissible in trimming." But when the music of Easter proclaims the victory of life over the grave, to which all nature responds triumphantly, our mantua-maker is ready with her hymn: "Rich silks of pale yet bright tints," is the burden she sings, "made with postillion basques. Short, high shoulder seams display a fine figure."

THE RELIGION OF LABOR.—Religion does not altogether consist of devotional exercises, but as well of daily work. We get a wrong idea of Christianity when we reduce it all to songs and sermons, to prayers, solemn faces and ecclesiastical paraphernalia. It is not especially for Sabbaths and sanctuaries, but also for week-days, for shops, for homes, for mills, for stores, for streets and fields. Religion is largely an out-door institution. Its Author was born, baptized, transfigured and crucified under no roof but the sky. It means diligence in business, serving the Lord in common vocation and every-day relations, as well as in consecrated syllables on set occasions. Jesus was more sublimely great standing unknown at the carpenter's bench in Nazareth, with apron on, than if he had been surpliced as a priest in the temple, or arrayed in robes of royalty on Pilate's throne. He was greater with an adze in his hand than with a crown on his head. Christianity allows no aversion toward the mechanic. It gives him honorable position. It invites him to its home, and visits him in his.—Clark's Work-day Christianity.

CHARITY.—We are told in classic history that an old painter was employed to sketch the Macedonian Emperor. The Emperor had received a severe wound upon the right temple in one of his famous battles, and a large scar was left. The artist proceeded to the work assigned him, and sketched the monarch leaning on his elbow, with his forefinger covering the scar. His ingenuity was universally applauded, and he became more famed than ever. So it is with genuine charity, which "covereth a multitude of sins." Instead of exposing the faults of others, and holding them up to scorn and ridicule, it covers them with the fingers of love, except when truth and justice require them to be openly rebuked. The way of the world is, to expose the scars of character, and set them off in more than their real ugliness. They are the subjects of gossip and keen satire in the social circle, and the sparks that are struck around often kindle into a flame. How much more beautiful is that spirit which treats the failure of others with forbearance, while it does not excuse iniquity in the nearest friend! This is the charity which "suffereth long and is kind," and "doth not behave itself unseemly," and thinketh no evil.

THE other morning a gentleman and his wife were in such a haste to reach a railway train that they were obliged to omit family worship. The next time they sat down to read, the mother remarked that the first chapter of Ephesians was the place. "No, mamma," said one of the little girls, "it is the second chapter; we read the first chapter after you were gone." The children were all under ten years old, but they had conducted family worship in the absence of their parents. How many older boys and girls are ashamed to do their duty under such circumstances.—Sunday School Journal.

A CLOSE ARGUMENT.—"Do you not believe," said a father to his patriotic son, "that the preaching of divine truth is the main safeguard of your country?"

"I do," was the reply.

"Why, then, do you not attempt to save your country in this way?"

"Because I am not pious."

"But you ought to be pious."

"I know that, but I am not; and while I am not, I ought not to enter a theological school."

"What profession, then, will you enter?"

"That of the law."

"But you have no right to study law while you are not pious."

"That of medicine, then."

"But you have no right to study medicine while you are not pious."

"Then I will be a merchant."

"But you have no right to be a merchant, nor a mechanic, nor a farmer, while you are not pious."

"What, then, shall I do?"

"You have no right to do anything while you are not pious."

"Then I will do nothing."

"But you have no right to do nothing while you are not pious. Except a man be born again, he is not authorized to take one step in any direction, nor on any spot is he authorized to stand still. You must be born again."

EVERY DAY.—I pray you with all earnestness to prove, and know within your hearts, that all things lovely and righteous are possible for those who believe in their possibility, and who determine that, for their part, they will make every day's work contribute to them. Let every dawn of morning be to you as the beginning of life, and every setting of the sun be to you as its close; then let every one of these short lives leave its sure record of some kindly thing done for others, some goodly strength or knowledge gained for yourselves; so, from day to day, and strength to strength, you shall build up indeed, by art, thought and just will, an ecclesia of England, of which it shall not be said, "See what manner of stones are here," but, "See what manner of men."—Ruskin.

THE RIGHT IDEA OF PRAYER.—A little boy once heard a clergyman preach from the text, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you." After reading the text he stopped a minute and asked his hearers to consider what it was they should like most, and then to ask for it in Jesus' name, trusting to his promise that it would be given to them. At the end of the service the little boy asked his aunt if she had asked for anything. Then she asked him what he had asked God to give him, and he said:

"I thought first of one thing I should like and then another, but I did not know which would be best to ask, and so I said: 'Father, thy will be done.'"

GLORIOUS EXPERIENCE.—The venerable Dr. Dean, of the Chinese mission, Bangkok, of the Baptist Church, writes: "Among all the sixty-three years of the past I have never commenced a year with greater sense of gratitude, nor firmer trust in God, nor fuller hope for the future success of the gospel. Every year adds new beauties to the words and brightness to the promises of the Bible. Every day confirms my conviction of the power of the gospel to save the heathen, and every hour increases my rest in the sacrifice of the Lamb of God, and the salvation of Jesus Christ."

IN, INTO AND UNDER.—The vexed question of the proper mode of baptism was thus disposed of by "Uncle Cæsar," a colored preacher: "Now bredren," said he, "I hear great fuss about dese words in and into: and folks want us to believe dat dey mean under, and dat when de Scriptur' speaks of an individual going down into de water, de Bible mean to say dat he went under de water. S'pose some day I go ober to see Brudder Solomon, and Brudder Solomon werry politely say, 'Uncle Cæsar, come into de house,' do anybody s'pose dis here nigger would go under de house?"

THE HEIRS of Father Taylor, says Zion's Herald, have presented his library to the Boston Theological Seminary. There, alongside of Bishop Hedding's and Bro. Hempstead's, it will perpetuate the name and memory of the old man eloquent. Generation after generation of coming ministers will handle these memorial volumes, and be incited to investigate the history and character and power of the traditional hero to whom they once belonged. We are glad he is to have such an abiding memorial in the church.

AN ENGLISH MINER, who was recently asked what he would do if he were as rich as the local Crœsus, replied: "I would have figgy pudding every day, and a new preacher every Sunday."

IF YOU are God's wise men the world will count you fools.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

DR. TRENCH, who was made Archbishop of Dublin in 1864, declares that the annual income of his bishopric has been $55,000, and claims from the church commissioners as his commutation-money $550,000.

THE Wesleyan Missionary Society received and expended about $750,000; and reports for the past year a total of some 5,500 "paid" laborers of all kinds, 22,410 "unpaid," 779 central stations, and 5,230 chapels and other preaching places.

ALMOST one thousand miles from the sea in the depths of the great interior of China, on the large river Quangee, the American Methodists have a mission, from which report comes of "prospects brighter than ever, crowds attending the preaching, and two native helpers already secured."

WE COMPARE 1820 with 1870. In 1820 a total of 357 Protestant missionaries had gone from Europe and America. In 1870 a total of 1,949 was at work in the fields. To these should now be added eleven thousand native preachers and teachers, converted, trained and rendering most effective assistance. These fifty years have not been in vain.

IN THE Baptist Year Book there are registered two hundred and forty-three doctors of divinity. Nearly one-half of these Baptist doctors of divinity are resident in Illinois, Massachusetts, New York and Philadelphia. Although the great numerical strength of the denomination is in the South, the number of doctors of divinity in that section is only seventy-three.

LAST YEAR the English churches of all denominations subscribed $3,296,395 to foreign missions, and about $4,000,000 to other societies represented in the May meetings. A grand sum, and it might seem as if the world were about to be converted immediately. But, on the other hand, Great Britain spends as much in two days on liquor as she does in a year on foreign missions; and the zeal seems somewhat less considerable with this contrast.

SINCE 1771 the commission appointed by the Diet of Sweden for a new translation of the Bible has been steadily engaged in its work. Nine archbishops, thirty professors and fifty doctors of theology have contributed their assistance. Of these, it is said that one has been employed forty years, one thirty-six years, one thirty-five years, one thirty years, the others from that down. If the number of years given by all the individuals concerned in the translation were estimated as performed by one alone, the full amount would be over five centuries. The translation, however, still remains incomplete.

THE Southern Presbyterian Board has among its missions one in Brazil, of which its organ for June says: "In no part of the papal world are the prospects more encouraging. The prestige of Romanism seems to be gone; the people are anxious for instruction. The government appears to entertain kindly feelings toward Protestant missionaries, and the gospel is preached without let or hinderance. * * * * An institution where young men can be trained for teaching and preaching is greatly needed, and we earnestly hope the mission to this country to obtain the means will be regarded with great favor by all who pray for Christ's kingdom."

A PASTOR by the name of Fliedner founded an institution in Germany, more than a quarter of a century ago, for the purpose of training females for nursing the sick and general mission work. The institution has been eminently successful and useful. It has nothing of a conventual nature, and the parties connected with it are not shut out from the world for the purpose of self-culture and the practice of ascetic rules; but for the sole purpose of doing good and ministering to the wants of others. In Tottenham, near London, England, one of these institutions has flourished for years, being principally supported by the benevolence of Mr. Morley, M. P., whose large gifts to every good work are gaining for him a world-wide reputation.

CONDITION OF THE DUNKERS.—A correspondent writing to the Philadelphia Press on the present condition of the Dunkers, says: "In attempting to give the present condition of the denomination throughout the United States, some difficulty is experienced from the fact that they have never published nor collected denominational statistics. They have been opposed to this as a matter of principle, regarding the parade in print of their numbers and wealth and growth as calculated to foster pride rather than to subserve any useful purpose. But as there are delegates here from nearly all the districts, it has been possible to form tolerably correct estimates. The number of churches cannot be much less than five hundred. There are certainly from fifteen hundred to two thousand ministers and elders, while the membership is about one hundred thousand. There are single churches having as many as six hundred members. They are most numerous in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and Virginia. There are churches in nearly or quite all the Western States—even the newest, Kansas and Nebraska, having churches—and in some of the former slave States, especially Tennessee, Missouri and North Carolina. West of the Rocky mountains churches have been formed in California and Oregon. The denomination is steadily extending itself in the West. Missionaries are appointed to travel over new sections of the country and to organize churches wherever proper fields can be found; and in this way they are likely to more than maintain their present strength in the country."

IT IS DOUBTED whether any expenditure shows its good results on mission fields quicker than that for hospitals. Such institutions cannot be tradnced, or undervalned, or distrusted, or spoken against. They not only plead their own cause, but the Cause, and open its way to the hearts of the people. The hundreds, perhaps thousands, of patients treated every year, and for the most part without money or price, are thereby furnished with what goes far to break down all prejudice, not only in their own minds, but among their own family circle. And often they are brought, by what they hear of Christ while under treatment, to learn of him who "went about doing good and healing all manner of sickness and disease among the people." The last annual report of the Hankow Mission Hospital shows a total of 6,067 patients for the year, of whom about one-third were females. Four or five pages are devoted to the consideration of leprosy, which is said to be found throughout all China in two distinct and distressing forms. "A considerable parallel exists between the diet of the Israelites in Egypt and the Chinese." Indeed, "that food upon which the former so multiplied then is exactly the diet of the Chinaman to-day. Fish, of which they both did and do eat freely (tending perhaps to the production of that curious disease common to both, viz., leprosy,) cucumbers, leeks, onions and garlic are the staple food of the Chinese." After describing the characteristics of this disease, this report says: "Almost every important tonic and alterative has been tried, without yielding any remarkable benefit. We have only to look at the long list of remedies recommended at different times, and never abandoned, to convince us of its incurability."—Independent.

FROM THE FEDERALISTA, a daily in the City of Mexico, we have an article on the (late) Roman Catholic priest, Manuel Aquas. Recognized for years as not only one of the most learned and eloquent, but most saintly and pure of men, his conversion to Protestantism, to the simple spiritual views of the gospel, has awakened in our sister republic, and especially in Mexico itself, a profound interest. It was brought about by the reading of one of Ryle's earnest and practical appeals, loaned him by the Rev. Mr. Riley, a missionary of the American and Foreign Christian Union. And, being now "soundly converted," he is preaching to large audiences of the higher and most cultivated classes of Mexican mind. But to the article from the Federalista, of which we give the following translation: "This distinguished preacher, once a Dominican friar, who has filled a high place among the Roman clergy, who has had charge of the most important as well as most magnificent enracies, and has been spiritual director (confessor) to very exalted personages among the clergy, has lately been converted to Protestantism, and is to-day one of the pillars here of the Reformed and Evangelical Church. This has produced, as was natural, the utmost surprise and no small irritation among the intolerant Roman society; a priest named Arias wrote to Mr. Aquas making inquiries as to his separation from the Roman Catholic communion. Mr. Aquas has replied at length in a published letter, that we mean soon to produce, as it is interesting for more than one reason. In our humble judgment his reasons are conclusive, and his disclosures as to the abuses of the Roman clergy unanswerable, as we all know they are true. This conversion tells the more against the Roman body because it cannot this time start anything of calumny; for the true virtues and holy character, not less than the profound learning which has enabled him to occupy the highest places in his order (St. Dominic,) are too well known in Mexico." What with such a man in Mexico, Dr. Dollinger in Germany, Pere Hyacinthe in France, and the professors of the University in Rome itself sending their letter of sympathy and encouragement to Dr. Dollinger, uneasy lies the papal head, however infallible."—Independent.

Centenary College of Louisiana.

The annual commencement of Centenary College, Jackson, Louisiana, will take place on the second Wednesday in July (the twelfth.)

The meeting of the Board of Trustees and Visitors will be held at Jackson, Louisiana, on Monday, July 10, at two P. M. A full meeting of the board is much to be desired; and the friends of this institution are earnestly invited to be present, and give their countenance and support to this important enterprise of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences. Commencement sermon on July 9, by Rev. John Mathews.

J. C. Keener,
President Board of Trustees.

The last number of the Home Advocate, Jefferson, Texas, announce the death of Mrs. Annie Patille, wife of the editor, Rev. T. J. Patillo. The deceased was a lady of eminent piety and worth, and her death will be regretted deeply by a large circle of friends. The bereaved husband has our sincere sympathy.

Northern Methodist Book Concern.—The trial of Dr. Lanahan has come to an end, and the New York Christian Advocate gives the result;

We give up a large share of this week's paper to the proceedings of the Book Committee and other matters connected with the affair, to the exclusion of much other valuable matter. We greatly regret that they fail to indicate the coming of any relief in the case. Eleven of the fifteen members of the Book Committee vote that Dr. Lanahan has so conducted himself as to make it proper that he should be removed from the office of assistant book agent, and with that finding one of the Bishops (Janes) concurs, the other of the two who were in attendance (Ames) non-concurs. The result is that the whole proceedings fall to the ground. To our seeming the case was never before in so almost hopeless a condition as now. We have nothing further now to write upon it, though we think very decidedly about it.

Death of Prof. H. F. Jones.—With profound regret we announce the death of Prof. H. F. Jones, which occurred at his residence in Okolona, Mississippi, Friday morning, June 16. So we learn by letter from the Rev. T. Cameron, received too late for publication before next week. Prof. Jones was a Christian gentleman, of scholarly attainments and high repute as an educator, and his death is a public calamity, as well as an unspeakable loss to his family. He was a brother of the Rev. Amos W. Jones, D. D., president of the Memphis Conference Female Institute.—Western Methodist.

The Rev. Jesse H. Walker, presiding elder of the Chickasaw district, Indian Mission Conference, says the Western Methodist, forwards an obituary notice of the Rev. Silas Paine, a native Indian preacher, which we insert in the present number, and writes in a brief note: "Say to the friends of missions that the good Lord is blessing this work. While the workmen are being buried, yet the work goes on. Since Conference, on the Chickasaw district (six circuits,) we have baptized ninety-seven infants, one hundred adults, and received into the church two hundred and seventy-seven members; collected $57.70 missionary money."

CHARITY AND POPERY.

Two words were never put on the same line so utterly different. Popery is the quintessence of all uncharitableness, as well as the embodiment of the most fatal errors. Think of the papal anathemas and the Inquisition, and then find any place for charity in such fellowship! The good archbishop has commended us to the prayers of the faithful, and we hope henceforth to grow in grace. What a change in tactics is this sanctimonious affectation, which only covers the wish that heretics might be dealt with now as in the palmy days of the rack and the stake! As those times are passed, and the papacy is on its last legs, it is well to pray. As the teeth and claws are gone, nothing better than prayer is left.

An anonymous writer, in a city journal, has been kind enough to exhort us to charity.

The following paragraph exhibits the good intention of the writer, who takes our notice of the papal jubilee, and that of our correspondent, much to heart:

You are very well aware, Mr. Editor, that I am no Catholic. I very much doubt whether any Protestant sect would assign me a seat in its chapel; the Rev. Linus Parker, D. D., would certainly pronounce against me as one of these sons of Belial, given over to "the atheistic tendencies of science;" but I would ask him, in all seriousness, whether he and the Catholic, whom he derides, worship the same God? whether they believe in the same authoritative revelation of his will? and whether they look for pardon and salvation to the same crucified Savior? And if they do, I ask him by what right, Christian or other, he dare sneff at those who, however the forms of their faith may differ, cry in that spirit of adoption by which even the Rev. Linus Parker, D. D., hopes to be saved, Abba! Father!

The writer avows that he is no Catholic, and we are sure that no disclaimer is needed as to his Protestantism. No well-instructed Protestant could hold the mummeries of popery in reverence, or ask the questions contained in the above quotation. As to worshiping the same God, we are not clear that the Romanists in general worship God at all, "since God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship in spirit and in truth." We can by no means be classed with those who bow down to a wafer, and who pray to Mary and other saints. With reference to belief in "the same authoritative revelation," here we doubt again, as the Romanists make as much of the apocryphal books as they do of the received canon, and give more heed to the unwritten word and traditions than to all the Scriptures put together. Their perversion of Scripture, their proverbial fear of the Bible, and the fact that they do not allow it to circulate or to be read where they can help it, lead us to conclude that there is a vast difference between them and Protestants in their views of "the same authoritative revelation of his will." They have never had much use for the Bible, and, with an infallible Pope, they have now less need than heretofore. What with their traditions, councils and unerring Pope, it would seem to be easy to dispense with the Bible altogether. Concerning "pardon through the same crucified Savior," we fear that Romanists look for absolution in some other direction. So far as we can discover, with them faith in popery is more essential than faith in Christ. Old Dr. Dollinger has lately been excommunicated for no other sin than for refusing to accept the absurd dogma of the papal infallibility. If Christ is looked to at all for pardon by the devotees of the Pope, there is a formidable apparatus of prelacy and sacraments which lie between the sinner and his Savior. Amidst the doctrinal fog of penance, works of supererogation, priestly absolution, extreme unction and purgatory, there can be but a very imperfect apprehension of Christ as "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." The difference between papists and Protestants is not in "forms of faith." It is in the faith itself, in the most essential doctrines of salvation.

We give another extract from the writer already quoted:

And the Catholic clergy of New Orleans, including their aged prelate, the archbishop, have always, and without an exception, sustained a character for charity, for self-sacrifice, and for uncalculating devotion to the service of their Master, which any church, in any age, might justly be proud of.

The priests referred to may be, many of them, sincere men, and better perhaps than the system which they uphold. We would recall a circumstance which happened about two years ago, and which the writer just quoted has probably forgotten. On the sixth of June, 1869, a Romish priest forced himself into a Protestant Sunday school, near the Jackson railroad depot, a little before the time for opening the school, and, finding no teachers present, began to cuff the children and to scatter them. A mother came in with her little ones, and this specimen of courtly manhood began on her, and, shaking his fist in her face, said: "You and your associates deserve to be tied to the stake and burnt. You are training these boys to be thieves and infidels, and the girls for prostitution." To a male teacher, who came in at this juncture, the reverend father said: "I want my children, to whom you have been holding out all sorts of inducements to proselyte and make thieves of them." The clarity and urbanity of the Catholic priest shines conspicuously in an article published in the Times, wherein he attempts to vindicate his ruffianly conduct. We give a choice extract:

"Some time ago rumors reached me that the enemy was insidiously at work establishing a viper's nest in the shape of a Sabbath school mission, in the neighborhood of the Jackson railroad depot, for the purpose of carrying on a Protestant propagandism and proselyting institution—soliciting Catholic parents to send their children thereto, and bribing Catholic children to frequent those dens of hypocrisy, lies and deceit, in order to imbibe in that poisoned source these biblical cants and sanctimonious slang belched forth by their authors in Luciferian ejaculations. Not wishing to act immediately upon the rumors until I would be better informed, four Sundays ago I made a descent upon the den, and there found one of my Catholic children, whom I ordered out of that nest of darkness and irreligion, remarking to one who was a Sabbath school teacher, or connected therewith, that I would tolerate no one to influence the Catholics of my parish to frequent that haunt of error—that I would allow no wolf to come in the clothing of sheep and make incursions among my flock, without sounding the cry of alarm, and expurgating, with all the might of my moral force, my parish of this imported religious infection.

The author of this raid upon a Protestant Sunday school, and of this most conclusive vindication, was doubtless prominent on the platform on the jubilee occasion. We recall the matter only to show the close affinities of popery and charity, and because it is a blossom of Romanism somewhat nearer to us than the massacre of St. Bartholomew and the Spanish Inquisition.

The priests are doubtless devoted to their master—their master, the Pope—and have sworn to defend the Roman papacy and "the regalities of St. Peter."

In the episcopal oath of allegiance to the Pope is this language, and evidently filled with the grace which covers a multitude of sins: "Heretics, schismatics and rebels to our said Lord or his foresaid successors, I will, to my utmost, persecute and oppose." Protestants can well afford to measure charity with Roman Catholics. Conceding that they hold some truth amidst an overwhelming mass of error, and that there are sincere Christians among them, the system is the most baneful—a blight upon society and the world. Popery is anti-Christ, and with its teachings there can be no compromise. In the Protestant mind, respect or reverence for it is impossible. It has been the curse of the nations where its supremacy has obtained, and it will be the ruin of America should it ever reach the ascendancy to which it aspires.

Our blessed Lord illustrated all virtues indeed, but most especially the passive ones.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE.

This institution is located at Brookhaven, on the Jackson railroad, about one hundred and thirty miles from New Orleans. The village is the county seat of Lincoln county, and contains perhaps twenty-five hundred inhabitants. There are a number of handsome residences, a Masonic hall and several churches. We were informed that from fifteen to twenty thousand bales of cotton are annually shipped from this point, and that the surrounding country is healthy and prosperous. The college property consists of a large center building of two stories, with wide front galleries, and is surmounted by a handsome cupola. It is well arranged for boarding purposes, and the rooms are large and pleasant. The halls and passages are wide and high, a cistern of vast capacity supplies the establishment with abundance of cool water, and there is a steam laundry with all the latest improvements. The chapel, fronting uniformly with the main building and but a few yards from it, has an audience room that will seat as many as five or six hundred people, and contains a number of recitation rooms. It was built by the president, Rev. H. F. Johnsen, since he took charge of the college, and is in every respect suited to the purposes for which it was constructed. Fronting on a line with the two buildings we have mentioned is the church, a neat frame, handsomely finished inside and out, and furnished with spire and bell. Not far from the church is a commodious parsonage, which seemed to need nothing but three coats of paint to make it an ornament to the place.

The college is the property of the Mississippi Conference, mostly the gift of Mr. Whitworth, lately deceased, and has been placed for a term of years under the management and control of Mr. Johnsen. This is the fourth year of his incumbency, and the college has grown and prospered beyond the expectations of its most sanguine friends. Four years ago there were less than sixty students; the catalogue for 1870-1 shows one hundred and eighty-two, of which one hundred and thirty are in the collegiate department.

It was our fortune to be in attendance during the recent commencement, June 25-27. It is not often our privilege to meet a larger or more attentive congregation than assembled in the spacious chapel on Sunday morning. Bro. Johnsen preached at night, by request of the senior class. On Monday morning the senior class were examined in moral science, geometry and chemistry. The examinations were fair, thorough and satisfactory, and were alike creditable to teachers and students. On Monday afternoon there was a meeting of the alumni association, when we were entertained with reports, essays and addresses pertinent to the occasion. On Monday night we had music and compositions, and all of the best. The commencement exercises on Tuesday were attended by a crowded and delighted auditory. The essays, from salutatory to valedictory, were good. We will not mention any in particular, because we were delighted with all. The annual address, by Hon. E. Barksdale, of Jackson, Mississippi, was impressive and appropriate. We doubt whether his position on the woman suffrage question is the right one, but in such a presence of beauty and grace a man is scarcely responsible. The graduating class consisted of ten young ladies, upon whom the degree of mistress of English literature was conferred, and to whom diplomas were delivered. The degree of mistress of arts was conferred upon two of the former graduates, and as an honorary degree upon one young lady who is a teacher in the institution.

We were not present at the concert on Friday night, nor at any of the examinations except those we have mentioned. Our impressions are derived from what we saw and heard, and we came away with the conviction that Whitworth College is an honor and a blessing to the church and to the country. There are few institutions more complete in all their appointments. President Johnsen has surrounded himself with an able faculty, and is peculiarly fitted for the important work he has taken in hand. In addition to the able and judicious management of its president, Whitworth owes much to its eligible location. It is on a railroad, and two trains from North and South pass it every day. Its accessibility is a most important circumstance, and one that goes very far toward assuring its permanence and future prosperity.

LETTER FROM REV. W. V. TUDOR.

On Shipboard, Steamer Oceanic,
Noon, Wednesday, June 7, 1871.

To Dr. B. H. Moss, William R. Stuart, J. L. Dunnica and others, stewards of the Carondelet St. M. E. Church South, New Orleans:

My Dear Stewards—My diary at sea shall take the form of a letter to you. But diary, indeed! What can I write of but the sea—the grand, the mighty, the awful sea? What are all the incidents of parting at the New York pier which I find in my diary, what the dimensions and appointments of this great ship, what the solemnities or trivialities of life aboard—what are all these to the sea, the rolling, the majestic, the terrible sea? I had thought in my foolishness on land that the time had come to me when I could say with the apostle, "When I was a child I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man I put away childish things;" but on this ship's deck I am a very child again; only the thoughts and understanding and speech of a child seem natural or rational to me as I gaze out upon the sea—the new, the good, the playful sea. I have said in my manhood on land, "The deep, the boundless, the storm-tossed sea." I thought that a grand expression; but I knew not what I said. I give it up; I am a child; I do not know what the fine, euphonious adjectives mean that describe the sea. I am only a child, now exclaiming in my gladness, "O, you beautiful thing," and again running away in terror and hiding my eyes, and crying: "Take it away, take it away, the dreadful thing." Thus am I alternately pleased and appalled, not daring to have more than a child's thought; my only well-defined consciousness that of an infant, just old enough to know itself "rocked in the cradle of the deep." But again, in mercy to me, God has rallied my conscious manhood by the simple incident of a passing shower. It came like a revelation. It was at night the steamer met and passed us, so near us that, ship and sea still, voices might have been exchanged. Whence came she? From the port to which we were bound to the port from which we came. Then, for the shortest time and distance, the same track belonged appropriately to us both. It was not by accident we met. There is neither stake nor station upon this great highway; and yet, but for the meeting, the keel of either vessel would probably have cut the water midway between us where we passed. Then I saw the triumph of the art of navigation; and whereas I had in my thoughts gone down, as upon a wave of this sea, into the depth of childhood, I arose upon the next billow to the height of manhood's dignity, and exclaimed: "Behold the divinity of man, who stakes off his course over this trackless waste with suns and stars, and compels the craft in which he sails to keep the way his magnetic finger points." I grow proud, but not long, for I look out again, and the horizon looks like a curtain dropped all around, and hiding from us that upon which we could not bear to look—the sea, the sea, in all its length and breadth. Only one Eye can look upon that and live. We sail successive lakes apparently, or we should probably never have attempted the sea at all. He sees all. Divine is man, but not Deity.

Thus far we have had a prosperous voyage—prosperous particularly in the sailor sense, for a fair wind has filled our sails from four masts since Sunday night, driving us along, in connection with the steam, at, it is said, an almost unexampled rate of speed. We are in mid-ocean. Our good ship, the steamer Oceanic, of the White Star line, is, after the Great Eastern, the largest vessel in the world. Her dimensions are: Length of deck, four hundred and thirty-two feet; breadth of beam forty-one feet; depth of hold, thirty-five feet; draught, twenty-four feet; tonnage, six thousand tons; engines three thousand horse-power; and her cost was $600,000. The number of cabin passengers, this trip, is two hundred and eighty-three. I do not notice them much; I have too much fun with the sea. The sea loves a little child to play with it, stroke its hoary mane in my fancy, play; at times it has seemed to be a little angry, and then I have stood off a little; but again it has smiled, fallen into more gentle ways, invited me to return to my sport with it.

It is just the world's life—the living drum, stale, prosy world, here with these people aboard—men, women, children; good, bad; business, pleasure; the old, old story is the story all told. Some are afraid, many are sick. One would give $1,000 to be ashore—another protests that he will never try the sea again, no, never to return to his native land; henceforth he is an exile. O sea, sea, I will not be fall out with thee. Even wouldst thou moan and grieve like a child to play with thee!

Our vessel rocks and tosses so that it is almost impossible to write, but I want to send you this by the first mail after arriving at Queenstown.

Last Sunday's services were simple and solemn, being the prayers of the Church of England, read by Dr. Schaff, and a sermon by Rev. Mr. Dickinson, Baptist, of Boston.

In the evening several hymns were sung by a large company assembled in the saloon. But I could not get my sea. Its deep bass, in the feet chord, fell upon one attentive ear. We sang "Rock of Ages." The antiphony of the sea taught me how to love the Rock. O mighty sea!

I have not yet been sea-sick. The sea and I are on terms of good understanding.

Friday Morning, June 9.—Last night a heavy gale made midnight always solemn hour terrific indeed. Every officer of the ship was at his post, every sailor was in demand. The fierce blast seized a sail by the teeth and bore it off. What the wind and sea I did not know what next would be; but my Father knew, and to him I committed myself, the ship's company, and when I awoke the danger was over.

O obedient sea! now, as ever, subject to him who "arose and rebuked the winds and the sea, and there was a great calm." The vessel rolls, so I must stop writing.

Saturday Noon, June 10.—We are four hundred miles from Queenstown. We must be sick to appreciate health; hungry to relish food. Sea, land—that is what I mean. It is probable that the first of these we shall see will be a lighthouse. Lovely lighthouse! There ought to be a lighthouse in every sea.

I must notice here the steam apparatus of our ship, which is worked by steam. I have seen men pulling hard at the wheel of one of our river steamers. But this is a small wheel, and a child can manage the helm in the heaviest gale.

Sunday, June 11.—The captain has invited me to preach to-day. I said I must consult my stewards; they forbade me preach after leaving the shores. I have heard it was seconded and carried in your favor. Able body, that Bro. Tudor be excused this exception, and so I will preach. Thank you, brethren. Two hundred miles from Queenstown.

Monday, June 12, 10 A. M.—At the breakfast table, Queenstown is a very good place to be after the sea, to get here through a Scotch mist from our vessel anchored out in the harbor. Love to my church.

W. V. Tudor.

Since it is more important how we live than how we die, and death is merely the arrival at the end of a journey—the beginning, progress and history of the journey determining what the arrival shall be—we shall do well to dismiss borrowed trouble with regard to the manner of our departure out of the world, and be solicitous only with regard to the right discharge of present duty.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

BLANCHE GILROY. A girl's story. By Mrs. Margaret Hasmer. A 12mo of three hundred and thirty pages. Published by J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia.

We are indebted to Gresham, Camp street, for a copy.

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE. — The July number is worth much more than the cost of the entire volume. We have but one request to make of the publisher, that he send to all editors the table of contents printed on separate slips. We do not like to mar our copy by cutting from the cover, and we do not often have time to copy them, nor is it always convenient to send the Magazine up stairs to the composing room. Contents: Nothing but a Woman; Old Letters; Jessie's Home; Japanese Fairy Tales; Explaining English to a Frenchman; A Scottish Songstress; Descriptive Poetry; Beautiful Things; Birds, at Home and Abroad; Sweet Kittie was a Country Girl; Familiar Insects; A Handful of Dust; Good Pluck; To China and Back; What is Man? A Reminiscence of Bishop Andrew; De Soto's March across the Continent; The first Umbrella; An Old Maid's Evenings; Celebrities that I have Seen; The Character and Career of King David; The Goldsmith's LittleDaughter; Things not Generally Known; The True Enjoyments of Life; Love in a Cottage; Editor's Round Table; Book Notices.

WE HAVE RECEIVED a neatly printed pamphlet, Manual of the Church of the Strangers, New York, Charles Force Deems, D. D., pastor. The frontispiece is an engraving of the church edifice, given by Mr. Vanderbilt. The pamphlet contains a full and very interesting account of the organization and history of this remarkable church. Some are disposed to regard the Church of the Strangers as out of line and somewhat irregular. We believe that, for the present, Dr. Deems is doing a good work, and rejoice in the success which has thus far attended his labors.

THE July number of the Atlantic Monthly has among its numerous articles: How we met John Brown; No. 2 of From Generation to Generation; Mountaineering in the Sierra Nevada; and No. 7 of Our Whispering Gallery. The Poet of Sierra Flat, by Bret Hart, is unworthy of a place in any respectable magazine.

SOUTHERN METHODIST HOME ALTAR is a periodical devoted to Christian perfection. Edited by Rev. William Baker and Miss M. L. Baker, and published monthly at McMinnville, Tennessee, at $1 per annum. We wish it a successful and useful career.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE of June 24 has a most tempting table of contents. Among the articles we notice: Life of the First Earl of Shaftesbury; The Original Merry Andrew; Sir John Herschel; Nemesis in Paris; Belgian Politics; and Affairs in China.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for this month has: Independence Hall; Baltimore Beauty; The Settlement of Maryland; Student-Rambles in Prussia; Public Libraries and their Management, and other articles. It is a good number.

THE GALAXY for July is fresh and varied, as usual, and contains a number of excellent articles. Scientific miscellany and current literature are particularly valuable. The Galaxy Club Room and Nebulæ are good reading for a hot day.

THE MANUFACTURER AND BUILDER for this month is up to its usual standard of excellence. Farmers, mechanics, machinists, everybody, ought to have it. Western & Co., publishers, New York. Price, $1.50 per annum.

THE PRACTICAL PLANTER is a monthly journal devoted to agriculture. Edited by George W. Gift, and published in Memphis, Tennessee. It is a valuable periodical. We have just received the June number.

ARTHUR'S LADY'S HOME MAGAZINE and the Children's Hour for July will give satisfaction to their readers. The illustrations in the Children's Hour are unusually good.

GRACIOUS REVIVAL INFLUENCES, says the Western Methodist, prevail in this city and the suburbs. At Chelsea church, the Rev. W. M. Patterson, pastor, twenty persons have professed faith in Christ, and the religious interest increases from day to day. At Springdale church, the Rev. D. R. S. Rosebrough, pastor, a blessed work of grace has been commenced—several conversions and a large number of mourners. May the sacred fire catch and spread throughout the city and country.

THE following is the editorial staff of the Independent: Henry C. Bowen, editor-in-chief; Edward Eggleston, D. D., superintending editor; Rev. William Hayes Ward, office editor; and Joshua Leavitt, D. D., Samuel T. Spear, D. D., Rev. Washington Gladden, and T. M. Conn, M. D., associate editors.

OUR MISSIONARY DEBT.

From the above statement it will be seen that more than $15,000 of the amount necessary to pay off our missionary debt, and nearly all of which has been subscribed, remains unpaid. The several Annual Conferences, at their late sessions, resolved to liquidate this debt with a promptness we have seldom witnessed, and in a majority of the cases the pledges then made have been redeemed.

The necessity for a speedy settlement of the entire debt against the Board of Missions is upon us, and we have promised to liquidate the last obligation against us at an early day. We have made this promise on the basis of the subscription made at the Conferences, and we most earnestly request our brethren who have not remitted the amount they subscribed, to do so as early as possible.

A. H. REDFORD,
Treasurer Board of Missions.

*Alabama Conference assumed the amount apportioned to the Western.

†Some of the Conferences in Texas may not have the proper credits, as the persons who made remittances did not always specify the Conference from which the money was forwarded. If we are not correct, brethren in Texas will inform us.

Death of Mrs. Gilliland and Son.

We sincerely sympathize with that venerable matriarch, Mrs. McFerrin, the widow of the late Rev. James McFerrin, and mother of Dr. J. B. McFerrin, and the family connection, in the great calamity which has lately befallen them. The doctor has received a letter from his brother, Mr. J. H. McFerrin, informing him that on June 14 his nephew, Samuel Gilliland, aged fifteen years, was drowned while bathing in St. Francis river, Wittsburg, Arkansas. As soon as the dreadful news reached his mother she hastened to the river to see the breathless remains of her son; and the shock was so great that she sank under it, became unconscious, and never rallied, but on the next day joined her son in the spirit-land. The remains of mother and son were interred in one grave, and their funeral sermon was preached by Rev. J. J. Prather on Sunday, June 18. Mrs. Gilliland was an excellent Christian matron, the widow of the Rev. Samuel Gilliland, late of the Memphis Conference. She has left two sons and five daughters. She was fifty-nine years of age. It is a noteworthy fact that during the period stretching through Mrs. Gilliland's life, Mrs. McFerrin has not been called to mourn the death of any of her family. Her husband died in 1840; and she, in her eighty-sixth year, is looking for her release and reunion with those who are not lost, but gone before. Up to a recent date she was in the possession of all her faculties—and she is still, except her sight—but "they that look out of the windows are darkened." Such a stroke as this, though not unaccompanied with gracious alleviations, will be keenly felt by this "old disciple." May she be divinely sustained under it; and may it be sanctified to all the bereaved.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

A GOOD WORK has been inaugurated by the Mulberry Street church in Macon. A school for the poor has been established, and it is flourishing. It was begun two or three months since, under the charge, temporarily, of the Rev. H. J. Ellis, but now Mr. Walter Smith (a son of Prof. C. W. Smith,) who graduates this year at Emory College, has taken it. It numbers some fifty or sixty scholars, and is to be supported by the church. The ladies have taken it in hand, and formed an association to work for it. We hope to see the day when every city church shall have its free school.—Southern Christian Advocate.

A WORD ABOUT REMITTING.

State explicitly whether the money which you send is for the Book Agency or for the ADVOCATE. The two are separate and distinct concerns. Though they are conducted by the same agent, we must not mix their business. If convenient, write to each on separate sheet or half sheet, but be sure to state for which office the money sent is intended; and if for both, then state how much for each. This will save trouble and prevent mistakes.

SEND US CURRENCY.

We cannot use State money. We have to lose by discount here, or by the expense of sending into the State where it is issued to have it exchanged for currency. Procure the currency and save us the trouble and loss.

Obituaries.

Died, September 18, 1870, Rev. HENRY T. THOMS. He was born in Bedford county, Virginia, January 1, 1804.

Died, September 3, 1870, MARY THOMS, wife of Rev. Henry T. Thoms. She was born in Rockbridge county, Virginia, September 1, 1801.

They both died of yellow fever in St. Landry parish, Louisiana, whither they had moved in 1866, from Wilkinson county, Mississippi. They were married in 1825. In that year Brother Thoms was licensed to preach. For forty-five years did these two Christian souls walk together, and they were not parted by death but for a few days. We might write a long obituary, and tell, in part at least, how they lived and how they died. Those who knew them know this also; and those who know them not may not care to know. Suffice it, they were Christians, and he a Christian minister, and both of unimpeachable character for nearly half a century; and they died as they had lived. Their memory is blessed. Shall not the savor of their names be "of life unto life" to their children? Will they not follow on? May God grant it!

THOS. W. BROWN.

Died, in Columbus, Mississippi, May 14, 1871, WILLIAM L. SKINNER, aged thirty-four years and five months.

The subject of this memoir was a native of Mississippi. At the age of fourteen years his father was prevailed upon by a merchant of Columbus, who had taken a great fancy to him, to have him in his store. His father was unwilling to give him up before his education was finished. He at last consented, however, and the child went. By his honesty, integrity, noble, generous and sprightly disposition he soon won upon this merchant's love. By his kindness to the child he learned to love him almost as a father. He remained with him until he was grown. He then went into business in Mobile, where he remained until the outbreak of the war.

In the spring of 1863 Mr. Skinner joined the Confederate army at Vicksburg. He was a brave and true soldier, and was loved by all who knew him. Many warm friends will long mourn the loss of this noble, generous and good man. He was a devoted husband, a loving parent, and a treasured son and brother. But they mourn not as those who have no hope, for he assured them that he was not afraid to die.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The following tribute of respect was adopted at the second Quarterly Meeting Conference of Snow Hill circuit, Alabama Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, May 27, 1871:

Died, at his residence, near Pleasant Hill, Dallas county, Alabama (where he had resided forty-four years,) on the nineteenth of March, Bro. RICHARD J. BRYANT, familiarly known as Uncle Dick, at the ripe old age of eighty-two years. He was a class-leader for sixty years. His was a character well worthy the imitation of all. Those who were well acquainted with him say he never knew anger, discontent or unhappiness. He died with the full confidence, respect and esteem of all who knew him, leaving an aged companion, only a few years his junior, with whom he had lived fifty-nine years, waiting her summons to meet the loved and lost in a brighter world above, where parting will be no more. As a husband he was kind and affectionate; as a father he was unusually kind and tender; as a Christian and church member he was spotless and pure, and as a class-leader his worth could hardly be told. His last words to his family were: "I am already packed, waiting for the train." His Bible was his constant companion, having read it pretty much all day the day he died.

Resolved, 1. That in the death of Father Bryant the church on Snow Hill circuit has lost a devoted member, the community a useful citizen, and this body one whose presence will be greatly missed.

2. That while we mourn our loss, we are greatly comforted by the thought that our departed father in Israel is with the Savior, and that we will strive to meet him in the better land.

3. That we tender to his bereaved family our sympathy and prayers, and fondly trust that he who alone can comfort will pour into their bereaved hearts the consolations of his grace.

JOHN BARRETT HOLLOMAN, JR., son of Rev. J. B. and Nancy H. Holloman, was born in St. Genevieve county, Missouri, January 20, 1848. He died of pneumonia, at the residence of his father, in Yazoo county, Mississippi, March 3, 1871, aged twenty-three years and forty-two days.

Ten days the struggle lasted—ten days of exquisite suffering to him, of anxious solicitude to his friends. On the morning of the tenth day the end came; and he, like David, "had served his generation by the will of God, and was fallen on sleep."

The last four days of his life he was, for the most part, all unconscious. Once he called for his sister's little one-year old child, his pet—toyed with her, pressed her to his bosom, and kissed her with an intensity of manner that bespoke but too plainly the conscious probability of a last caress. Once he turned to his sister and interrogated: "Sister, what would you say if asked Are you hidden in the cleft Rock?" And as the last fearful hour approached, recalled to himself by his mother's half-suppressed grief, he inclosed her in a long, last embrace—kissed her again and again, and yet again—and bestowed upon her his parting commendation. "Faithful ma! faithful ma!" were the simple words of the unstudied eulogy of the heart's last, tenderest, best acknowledgment.

Turning from his mother, he appealed to heaven: "My Lord! my Lord!" and though the invocation was unfinished (for he was again immediately unconscious,) the intention of the appeal told that he was seeking help for this last agony—the crushing of earthly hopes, the severing of earthly ties, the passage through the cold river; and no doubt he received strength to go down peacefully into the grave, for "his Savior had passed through its portals before him." A few minutes later he quietly breathed his last.

He was a devoted son, a kind and affectionate brother, a generous friend, and an energetic, intelligent and capable citizen. He loved the Methodist Episcopal Church South—believed her dogmas, rejoiced in her pure bishopric and superior ministry, supported her liberally with his little means, was informed as to her history, and, with a vast and accurate memory, was always ready to defend her unsullied record with the logic of undisputed facts. Perhaps no young man had more friends; perhaps none is more deeply regretted.

The Friends and Admirers of the famous ARGYLE BITTERS, after long years of continued use, with life prolonged, bodily vigor and elasticity maintained, and the bloom of health upon their happy faces, can and will testify to their pre-eminent virtues over all others for the cure of Dyspepsia, the hydra-headed monster; Bilious Disorders; Nervous Derangements; Depression of Spirits; Menial Anxiety; Engorged Spleen; Visceral Congestion; Calamential Derangement, and most of the diseases of women and children. They are anti-periodic and anti-bilious; they cure Flatulence and Constipation without the disgust and loathing for medicines usually attendant upon medication and sickness.

No family should be without them; and we would respectfully caution the people generally against buying other and cheaper bitters, because of their availability as a commercial article in the hands of merchants, who realize a larger profit in buying inferior bitters on account of their cheapness.

Ask for the ARGYLE, and take no other; the base of which is pure Bourbon, full-proof whisky, with true Calisaya Bark as one of their ingredients, neither of which, we guarantee, is used in any of the bitters that flood the market.

The ARGYLE is a standard preparation, has never been adulterated in the hands of the manufacturers, and is always pleasant and healthful.

VIRGINIA SPRINGS.

RAWLEY SPRINGS, VIRGINIA,

WAS REGULARLY OPENED FOR THE reception of visitors on the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, 1871. Situated, as it is, in the Mountains of the Valley, it is not only one of the most delightful Summer Resorts in the State, but its curative properties are becoming widely celebrated.

The analysis of the water by Prof Mallet, of the University of Virginia, together with the experience of many eminent physicians, prove that it is the Springs for suffering females. But besides its wonderful tonic properties as a remedy in general debility, anemia and diseases peculiar to females, it is unsurpassed in the treatment of the various forms of Dyspepsia, and particularly for those suffering from torpid and inactive liver, its action upon the liver as well as kidneys being prompt and decided. Very many remarkable cures could be cited of this class of troublesome diseases.

RAWLEY is now easy of access, situated only twelve miles from Harrisonburg, the present terminus of the Orange, Alexandria and Manassas Gap Railroad, from which point there will be two daily lines of stages, morning and evening.

Since last summer the buildings have been greatly improved, as well as the road from Harrisonburg to the Springs.

There is also now a Telegraph Office at Harrisonburg.

The accommodations will be strictly first-class, under the management of JOSEPH N. WOODWARD, widely and well known as a Hotel Manager.

THE DIFFERENCE.

There was an old lady all dressed in silk,
Who lived upon lemons and nothing milk.
And thinking this world was a nice old place,
She cast up her nose all over her face.

Another old lady, all dressed in patches,
Lived upon anything that Dooley's matches;
So the world made her strange and cross,
And sure as you rubbed her you got her off.

Another old lady, all sunny and neat,
Who lived upon sugar, and everything sweet,
Declared, when she heard of their troubles, she "never"
For the world was so like she could live on forever.

MORAL.

Now children, take your choice
Of the food your hearts shall eat:
There are worrish thoughts, and trimstone thoughts,
And thoughts all good and sweet;
And whatever the heart feeds on,
Dear children, trust to me,
Is precisely what this queer old world
Will seem to you to be.

Hearth and Home.

THE PEARL OF GREAT PRICE.

There is an old story of a poor fisherman in India, who one day found a large pearl. He knew nothing of its true value, and in his hard life of toil there was no place for adorning, so he sold it for a trifle to an Arab.

The Arab, but little wiser, exchanged his pearl for some powder and shot with a Russian merchant on a trading vessel. The traveler took home the smooth ball, and it made a pretty toy for his children. Another merchant saw the treasure as they tossed it lightly in their play, and knew at a glance the rare and wonderful beauty hidden in the soiled, dust-covered ball. He knew, too, its almost priceless value, and at once bought it from the innocent children for a trifle that would purchase a new toy for them.

The story says: "He rejoiced at the silent fraud by which he had obtained the costly treasure, and cherished it as the pride of his heart." After the stain and soil were removed it stood revealed pure and lustrous, a marvel of beauty. The transformation was like magic. Its fame became so widespread that visitors from all parts of the world came to St. Petersburg to behold this wonder of nature's most perfect handiwork. The owner built a room for his treasure, and himself led visitors to enjoy the rare delight of beholding it. Through many rooms, filled with the rare and costly adornments of wealth, they passed to an inner room, of which he alone kept the key. The floor was of marble, the ceiling carved in scented woods, the walls hung with silken tapestry, and in the center one single article of furniture. It was a round table of dark Egyptian wood, and on it a strong box. In that were many doors and secret locks until the innermost one was reached, and there a plain box of Russia leather alone met the eye.

The poor man, who had grown almost to worship his pearl, crossed himself piously before taking from his neck the golden key, which he wore next his heart, unlocked the casket, and held up, to the light that fell from the grated window above, his precious jewel. It was a glorious sight for a lover of such things. Large as an egg, perfect in shape, unsurpassed in purity and beauty. As the light touched it and glanced again, the sunset dyes of the iridescent, flaming opal glowed about it. There seemed a charm, a spell in gazing upon its soft, white splendor, as it lay at rest, or the matchless display of color that trembled across it as it rolled to and fro on the dark table.

It fascinated the gazer by the thought that bound in its magic sphere was the price of a monarch's ransom. Then, too, the entranced rapture of the old merchant, as he exhibited his darling treasure, was a curious sight to see. His pride in his "pearl of great price" had become a mastering passion. The Emperor of all the Russias was collecting pearls for a necklace for his bride, and he offered rank, titles, honors, all in vain, for this priceless gem.

After a time the merchant became guilty of some offense against his royal master, and fearful of punishment, he fled with his treasure to Paris. Here, for a long time, he refused to let it be seen; at length, having been repeatedly importuned, he appointed a time, and invited a company of noblemen, famed for their knowledge of precious stones and pearls, to behold the wonder. He drew forth the golden key and opened the casket—but what a sight met his frightened gaze. He turned deadly pale, his frame shook, and the casket dropped from his trembling hand. His miracle of loveliness was tarnished with decay! His pearl was discolored—a sickly blue shade overspread it; the ineurable disease to which pearls are liable had fastened upon it. Its matchless luster was diminished, its pure and perfect beauty perished; its glory was in the past. The owner of the finest pearl in the known world was a pauper. In fleeing from his country to save his treasure he had sacrificed all of his other wealth—this he knew and felt. Alas! he took no heed of the first, and by far the saddest sacrifice he had made for the perishing thing. He counted not the cost of truth and honor and honesty at which he bought it from the little ones. But the blight, the curse, that sooner or later must fall upon sin, had at last overtaken him. "Silent," as had been the wrong he did, so "silent" was the justice meted out to him.

I have told you, dear children, so much about the wonderful, incomparable beauty of this Indian pearl, that you may better understand an older story of a pearl.

It was told in a far-away eastern land, nearly two thousand years ago, but it comes unchanged by time down to us in our day. It is told of a merchant who was seeking goodly pearls, and who, when he had found "one pearl of great price," went and sold all that he had, and obtained it. This merchant dealt honestly, nobly, and we know that his treasure was everlasting. The story was from the lips of our Lord, who often taught his disciples in this sweet and homelike fashion, so that a child might understand the lessons of faith and love so given. The pearl of great price represents the kingdom of heaven. Afterward, when the Pharisees asked him concerning this kingdom, he answered: "The kingdom of God is within you."

Yes, dear children, the kingdom of God, this most precious pearl, is the love of Christ in your hearts—your love to him in return for his greater love for you. He died that you might live forever. He first loved you, and if you will only give him your hearts, he will enter in and rule over them in gentlest, tenderest love. Your heart must be the casket for this beautiful, wonderful, priceless pearl. Depend upon it, no time or disease or decay can change it. Fadeless, perfect, growing only brighter and purer for ever and ever, is this "pearl of great price."—Christian Weekly.

LITTLE BROTHER LETTERS.

OF ARTISTS.

Little brother, who, like a great many other people's little brothers, keenly enjoys marking up every stray piece of white paper, and who, now that he has learned the delight of making the strangest, oddest characters imaginable, has a little boy's desire to spend all his life in the same occupation; little brother, when your crayons and pencils are all gone, you may send to Carl for some more, and he will gladly send them to you. Your "big brother" would be very proud if he could make his little brother an artist, i. e., a man who makes beautiful pictures—though sometimes ugly ones also are made by men calling themselves artists. But I would have you an artist who would make only beautiful pictures.

Have you ever thought where the men get the pictures they make? Is it not out of their heads—their brains? I think it is; and I have noticed this as I have been about among them: that the men who make the beautiful pictures are the men who have thought beautiful thoughts, and made themselves beautiful minds. I never saw a cross or a discontented or a peevish man make a beautiful picture while he was cross or discontented or peevish; and I find that it is so in all kinds of life—for every one is an artist, making every day pictures by which his comrades are saddened or cheered—that it is the little boy who has thought beautiful thoughts, and thus made his mind beautiful, that grows into the man whose pictures—whose deeds—delight us all.

So that my best wish for my little brother is that he may be an artist, making all along his life's journey such kindly and loving sketches, pictures so full of soul, as shall make many who see them wish likewise to become such artists and make the world sunnier, happier, more beautiful.—Carl, in Christian Weekly.

By the light of reason we cast a sort of glaring illusion around ourselves; but if confided in, it tends only to obscure our vision of more exalted glories. Illuminate a town—the streets are light, while the heavens are lost in darkness; but when the day breaks forth, both the earth and the sky become visible. So the sparks of our own kindling, while they shed an artificial brilliancy for a short distance around us, involve the scenes above in shadows even darker than those of night; but if the "day-spring from on high" dawn in the soul, we have clear views both of earth and heaven.—Rowland Hill.

There is a man in Northampton, Massachusetts, eighty-four years old, who has never been sick a day in his life, never paid a cent for a doctor's or lawyer's bill, nor a dime for preaching, and is said to be worth at least $100,000.

FREEDMEN.

HOW TO GET WORK OUT OF THEM.

A correspondent of Our Home Journal gives his views on this subject as follows:

I have read a great many interesting articles in your paper in regard to the different systems in working labor in the South to the best advantage. Now, sir, allow me to give you my personal observation and the experience of planters.

The best mode to obtain work from the freedmen is to engage them by the year at the rate of so much for twenty-six working days per month, one-half of the amount payable when he has worked his twenty-six days, and the balance back wages payable at the end of the year in the form of a due bill.

Give him tickets at the end of every week, and when he brings his twenty-six tickets, he receives half of his wages. It is the best way to force him to work. Do not give him any advances, and if he should come and ask to borrow money, tell him "money is scarce and wages high; if you need money there is plenty of it in the field; work Saturday afternoons, do extra work in ditching, cutting wood, and you will soon get twenty-six tickets and your money." Never refuse them work; on the contrary, encourage them to do extra work, both for their interest and your own.

Not being able to get a cent before they have twenty-six tickets, they are compelled to work to get their money. Let all those who have tried other systems try this, and before long we will be able to work Saturday afternoons, which lost time is one of the great drawbacks to planting.

Sawdust.—Partially decomposed sawdust is very valuable as a mulching material for trees, plants and vegetables, and should be gathered and saved for that purpose. The too common practice, in our lumbering districts, of throwing sawdust into the streams on which sawmills are situated, is reprehensible. It would not pay to spread it upon a muck swamp, but upon any sandy land, or light, gravelly loam, deficient in vegetable matter, it would prove a good dressing, and in time would show good results. It makes good bedding for animals in stables; it is an excellent absorbent, and will keep cows clean even better than straw. It is also a very light, handy article in the hennery. The article is merchantable in cities, and is quite extensively used upon floors in eating saloons, and for other purposes. It is a good substitute for straw, and this is now worth so much for manufacturing purposes, in many parts of the country, that no thrifty farmer can afford to use it for bedding.

Five Ways to Destroy Ants.—1. Pour hot water copiously, as near the boiling point as possible, down their burrows and over their hills, and repeat the operation several times.

2. Entrap the ants by means of narrow sheets of stiff paper, or strips of board, covered with some sweet, sticky substance. The ants are attracted by the sweets, and, sticking fast, can be destroyed as often as a sufficient number are entrapped.

3. Lay fresh bones around their haunts. They will leave everything else to attack these, and when thus accumulated can be dipped in hot water.

4. Pour two or three spoonfuls of coal oil into their holes, and they will abandon the nest.

5. Bury a few slices of onions in their nests, and they will abandon them.

Watering Plants with Hot Water.—It has lately been shown, by careful experiment, that sickly potted plants, even some that have almost died out, can be greatly benefited, and sometimes, indeed, entirely restored to vigor, by applying warm water to them instead of cold. In certain cases, oleanders which had never bloomed, or did so only imperfectly, after being treated with lukewarm water, increasing the temperature gradually from one hundred and forty degrees up to one hundred and seventy degrees Fahrenheit, produced the most luxuriant bloom. Similar results occurred with an old plant of Hoya, and also with an India rubber tree which had nearly withered away. In all these cases the application of water heated to about one hundred and ten degrees Fahrenheit, without any other precaution, caused a new and flourishing growth.

An agricultural paper says: "The microscope reveals the fact that a speck of potato rot, the size of a pin head, contains two hundred ferocious little animals, biting and clawing each other savagely." That would do well enough if they confined their attentions to each other, but unfortunately they always turn to and worry the potato.

Cuttings of Tomatoes, Etc.—It is claimed, says the Rural Carolinian, that tomato plants, grown from cuttings, are more productive than those which retain their original roots. We believe that this claim is well founded. We have other illustrations of the same principle. The sweet potato produces but indifferent crops where the tuber is planted. Slips or "draws," removed from the bedded tubers, produce much better crops, but cuttings of the vines are still more fruitful. Here is a question in vegetable physiology: Why is it that, in certain cases at least, the further we remove a plant from its original germ or bud the greater its tendency to produce fruit?—Our Home Journal.

Horseradish for Animals.—Horseradish is an excellent condiment to mix with the food of cows to give them an appetite, and make them sleek and thrifty. It should be fed freely to all animals that are not well, and it will be of great service to working oxen troubled with heat. If given to cows in doses of a pint a day, mixed with potatoes and bran, it will prevent or relieve cows of the disease called cake in the bag. Few animals will refuse to eat it, and some will eat of it greedily, as much as half a peck at a time.

Waterproof garments are very useful, often, for field hands, and all who are exposed to the heavy dews and sudden drenching rains of our climate. Into a bucket of soft (rain) water, put half a pound of sugar of lead, half a pound of alum; stir this at intervals until it becomes clear; then pour it into another bucket, and put the garment therein and let it be in for twenty-four hours, and then hang it up to dry without wringing it. This will make it waterproof.—Our Home Journal.

Peas.—We trust that our readers will not neglect peas this year. For the cost and trouble they give no other crop compares with the field pea. Plant in your corn fields at the last plowing, and leave them to take care of themselves. The red and black peas will lay on the ground all winter without rotting; the whippoorwill makes most vine, while the Crowder is the best table pea.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

Gumbo.—Take a nice fat hen, or two chickens, cut up and put into a pot to fry; when it is fried brown, not scorched, put in two quarts of finely sliced okra (the white is preferable,) four large tomatoes and two onions, peeled and chopped fine. Keep covered with water, and have the kettle tightly closed.

A very Delicate Omelet.—Beat six eggs, the yolks and whites separately, melt a bit of butter in a teacupful of warm milk, to which add gradually a tablespoonful of flour, a tablespoonful of salt and a little pepper; mix the yolks of the eggs, and lastly the white, beaten to a stiff froth. Bake in a flat pan, well buttered. Add, if you wish, a little grated cheese.

Cream Cake.—Number One.—Boil in half a pint of water, three-fourths of a cup of butter; stir in, while boiling, one and three-fourths cups of flour. When cool, mix in five eggs, one at a time, not beating them, and half a teaspoonful of dry soda. Drop on buttered pans, half the size wanted when baked. Varnish each with a feather dipped in the beaten yolk of an egg. Bake fifteen or twenty minutes. When baked, cut them open at the side and fill with the following mixture: Heat one pint of milk; mix one-half cup of sifted flour, one cup of sugar and two eggs together; stir in the hot milk, replace it on the fire to heat, and thicken. Flavor to taste. Bake in a hot oven.

Cream Cake.—Number Two.—Three eggs, one and one-half cups of flour, one cup of sugar, one tablespoonful of water, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, one-half teaspoonful of soda. Bake in pie pans, and split each. Cream for filling: One-half pint of boiled milk, one egg, one-half cup of sugar, one tablespoonful of corn starch, one-half teaspoonful of lemon extract, all mixed with cold milk, and stirred into the milk while boiling. Add one-half cup of butter.

Baked Bread Pudding.—One pint of bread crumbs, one quart of milk, one teacupful of sugar, yolks of four eggs. When baked, spread jelly or fruit over it, then whites of four eggs beaten with four tablespoonfuls of sugar.

Coffee Cake.—One cup of butter, one cup of molasses, one cup of strong coffee, four cups of flour, one nutmeg, two eggs, one teaspoonful each of cloves, cinnamon and soda, and one pound of seeded raisins.—The Household.

Jerrold said to an ardent young gentleman who burned with a desire to see himself in print: "Be advised by me, young man; don't take down the shutters before there is something in the window."

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
VIRGINIA.

This institution, located on the great railroad line from New Orleans to Baltimore, among the mountains of Virginia, is offering peculiar advantages to those who are seeking a thorough collegiate or business education. Two Hundred and Thirty Dollars will cover the expenses for an entire collegiate year of ten months, for Tuition, Board, Fuel, Room-rent, Washing and Contingent Fees. For the character of the school, please consult our own Alumni, or any of the Bishops or of the leading men of the Southern Methodist Church, or the Professors of the University of Virginia, who have authorized this reference. RIWASSEE COLLEGE.

The twenty-second annual session of this school will begin on the First Monday in August, 1871. The entire expense for board and tuition, for forty weeks, will be $150. The board is of the best description that the country affords, being furnished by the steward from his own farm and prepared by the hands of his own family. We had boys from five different States last year, and not a word of complaint was ever made on this point, which is often the subject of just complaint at boarding schools. The fare is peculiarly grateful to Southern boys, who require a more generous diet when they change their climate.

The manner of governing the school is paternal, as the entire exemption from temptations in the surrounding country renders the discipline easy. The institution is under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but under my own control. The young men attending the school last year were, without exception, moral and religious. Young men preparing for the ministry may receive tuition free, and in certain cases can obtain lower rates of board. Regular services are held in the College Chapel.

The location of the school is near Madisonville, Monroe county, East Tennessee, in the midst of a fruitful and beautiful country, and surrounded by a thrifty and intelligent population. No negroes live in the neighborhood, all the laborers in the fields and servants in the families being white. The citizens of Monroe county were true to the South in her late struggle, and have adhered to Southern churches.

Students arriving by the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad will get off at Sweetwater, forty miles south of Knoxville, whence they will find conveyance to the college, seven miles distant.

Our post office is Madisonville, Tennessee.

F. M. GRACE, President.

P. S.—1. Families from the South will find good board in the neighborhood, and a delightful summer retreat at White Cliff Springs, sixteen miles distant from Madisonville. For information on this point parties may address D. A. McKenzie, steward of the college. The health of the country is proverbial.

P. S.—2. Younger boys may be safely sent to this school, as all are under the immediate oversight of the principal, both when in school and when at the boarding house.

MEDICAL.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR,
A Purely Vegetable Compound
FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF
RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

The subscriber takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered questionable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to durat on of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

STOVES AND TINWARE.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

THESE are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. For sale by Scientific.

SPONGIO-PILINE.—This is the name of an ingenious contrivance, recently introduced abroad, which may be used either as a poultice or as the means of fomentation. It consists of wool and small particles of sponge, apparently felted together, and attached to a skin of India-rubber. It is about half an inch in thickness. It retains heat for a considerable time, and by means of it vinegar, laudanum, camphor, hartshorn, etc., can be placed on the skin, accompanied by heat and moisture, much more readily, and with greater cleanliness, than by the use of ordinary poultices.

OUR OWN DAY has witnessed the first exact measurement of the distance of the nearest fixed star, which is twenty-one millions of millions of miles. A learned calculator has shown that in the space around our solar system there is room in one dimension, or one straight line, for twelve thousand solar systems; in two dimensions, or in one plane, there is room for one hundred and thirty millions of solar systems, and in actual sidereal space of three dimensions there is room for one and a half million millions of solar systems the size of our own. Such are the blanks in the scheme. How fearful the thought of such physical immensity!—Dr. Alexander.

THE ORIGIN OF GEYSERS.—The geyser is a new and perhaps the most remarkable feature in our scenery and physical history. It is found in no other countries but Iceland and Thibet. The geysers of the country last named are inconsiderable when compared with either those of Iceland or the Fire Hole of Madison Basin; and those of Iceland even dwindle into insignificance by the side of those of the Madison. Until the discovery of the Madison geysers there were but two of any note known to the world—the Great Geyser and the Strokr of Iceland. The phenomena presented by these have been sufficient, at various periods during the past century, to invite the personal investigation of some of the most distinguished of European savans. Von Troil, Stanley, Ohlsen, Hooker, MacKenzie, and, at a later day, Bunsen, have visited Iceland for the purpose of witnessing these aqueous eruptions, and forming some satisfactory conclusion relative to the causes in which they originate.

The theory published by Sir George MacKenzie, that the outbursts were produced by the pressure on the air contained in cavernous recesses under ground, for many years received the sanction of the scientific world. The periods intervening between the eruptions of the Great Geyser of Iceland have been very irregular until within the past forty or fifty years, since when it has generally projected a small jet to the height of twenty feet every two hours, and a large one to the height of eighty feet every six hours. MacKenzie's theory was that there were two subterranean cavities connected with the main pipe, one much deeper and larger than the other, which rapidly filled with water after each eruption, and that the pressure of the vapors upon them produced these periodic explosions.

Ingenious as this theory appeared to be, it was dissipated by the experiments made upon water by M. Donny, of Ghent. He discovered that water long boiled became more and more free from air, by which its molecular cohesion is greatly increased, and that, when it is exposed to a heat sufficient to overcome the force of cohesion, the production of steam is so instantaneous and so considerable as to cause explosion. Bunsen ascribes the eruption of the geysers to this cause. He found the water at the bottom of the well of the Great Geyser to be of a constantly increasing temperature up to the moment of an eruption. On one occasion it was as high as two hundred and sixty-one degrees Fahrenheit. His idea is that, on reaching some unknown point above that temperature, ebullition takes place, vapor is suddenly generated in enormous quantities, and an eruption of the superior column of water is the consequence. The geysers of the Madison exhibit precisely the same physical features, and doubtless originated in the same causes. They are surrounded, too, as are those of Iceland, by innumerable springs of hot water. The bursting of a column into millions of particles resembles an explosion more than a mere eruption; and the vast clouds of vapor which enshroud them, and mingle with them in their ascent, sometimes gives an appearance of bulk to the upper part of the columns much greater than their real magnitude.—Scribner's Monthly.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market continues extremely dull, and nearly every branch of trade participates in the prevailing apathy. The receipts of sugar and molasses have been trifling, and met a steady demand at about previous rates. Flour has been inanimate, without any quotable change in the prices. Corn has been firm and in good request. Provisions have ruled still more in favor of sellers, the closing rates showing a further advance of 25c. in pork, and ⅛ to ¼c. in bacon.

Nothing of much interest has been reported from the country. It is manifest, however, that although in some localities the cotton may recover from the injury of the previous protracted cold and wet spell, in others the plant looks weak and yellow, with little promise of anything like an average yield in the diminished area planted.

The river is 7 feet 3 inches below high water mark.

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales..	4,306
Lake		1
Arkansas		405
Mobile		333
Texas		431
Total		5,476

On Saturday, under encouraging accounts from Liverpool, buyers came forward with increased spirit, and the sales summed up 2,400 bales, at full prices, especially for good ordinary, which sold at figures indicating an improvement of ¼c. On Monday, there being no telegrams from New York and those from Liverpool reporting no further advance, the demand was slack and the tendency in prices in favor of buyers, but without any quotable decline, although in some cases factors were compelled to make concessions of ⅛ to ¼c. The sales embraced 1,350 bales. Tuesday being generally observed as a holiday, the business was confined to 600 bales, mostly on the basis of 16½c. for good ordinary.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 4,350 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,412,299 bales, against 1,121,780 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,071,127 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 907,463 bales to Great Britain, 305,184 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 207,130 to France.

Ordinary	14 to 15
Good ordinary	16½ to 17
Low middling	18½ to 19
Middling	20½ to 20⅝
Strict middling	21 to ..

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS.

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $—, will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All Instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—The proclamation of the treaty of Washington, dated yesterday, commences as follows:

By the President of the United States of America. A proclamation. Whereas, a treaty between the United States of America and her majesty, Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, concerning the settlement of all cases of difference between the two countries, was concluded and signed at Washington by the high commissioners and plenipotentiaries of the respective governments on the eighth of May last, which treaty is word for word as follows: [Here follows the treaty.] The proclamation thus concludes: And whereas, said treaty has been duly ratified on both parts, and respective ratifications of the same were exchanged in the city of London on the seventeenth day of June, 1871, by Robert C. Schenck, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States, and Earl Granville, her majesty's principal secretary of State for foreign affairs, on the part of their respective governments; now therefore be it known that I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States of America, have caused said treaty to be made public, to the end that the same and every clause and article thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and citizens thereof.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done in the city of Washington, on the fourth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, and of the independence of the United States the ninety-sixth.

By the President:

U. S. GRANT.

HAMILTON FISH, Sec. of State.

SALT LAKE CITY, July 5.—There were no demonstrations on the fourth. Two companies of United States troops were in the city to prevent a parade of the woman militia.

NEW YORK, July 7.—The colored Senator, Andrew Jackson Jones, of North Carolina, has sued a gambling house for $5,000 lost at cards.

BOSTON, July 7.—The ship Golden Fleece, hence for Bombay, on fire, put into Halifax, and was scuttled.

Two persons are dead and several sick from eating fresh clams dug on Chelsea beach.

NASHVILLE, July 7.—John Claiborne, journalist, lately of the New Orleans Picayune, is dead.

OXFORD, Miss., July 7.—The June term of the district court has adjourned. The grand jury has returned forty-five bills under the enforcement law, implicating three hundred persons.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 7.—The semi-annual report of the Board of Trade shows a healthy increase, and a large accumulation of bullion and coin.

The troops remain in possession of the mines in Amador county.

There was a sharp earthquake at Visha, but no damage.

Some Italians hoisted a flag inscribed: Viva Italia, Roma Capitole. The ultra Catholics took umbrage at the display, and made threats to tear down the flag. The Italians are now parading the streets, carrying the American flag, and shouting: Viva Garibaldi! Down with the Pope!

SAN FRANCISCO, July 7.—The Mechanics' Fair, to be held here in August next, promises to be a great success. The Japanese contribution will be a leading feature of the exhibition. The space for articles is nearly engaged already.

Reports from all parts of the State show that the wheat crop is much better than anticipated.

The total product will be very little short of that of last season.

The crop of California potatoes this season is being shipped to Denver, Colorado, where $350 in coin per car load of ten tons is being paid for them.

NEW YORK, July 8.—A convention of the Irish societies in secret session, it is said, resolved to appeal to the mayor. The appeal failed to break up the Orange procession.

Trains from Newark and New York collided. The cars are a burning mass. Several bodies have been taken from the ruins, and it is supposed there are many more. The list of passengers shows no Southerners.

MOBILE, July 8.—Braxton Bragg, Jr., nephew of General Bragg, was attacked by Madison Wilson, son of L. M. Wilson, vice president of the Mobile and Montgomery railroad, this morning, in front of the customhouse. Each fired one shot. Wilson was instantly killed. Particulars after the trial.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., July 8.—The United States steamer Kansas is quarantined.

The hay crop is a third to half less than last year.

HUDSON, N. Y., July 9.—The Catholic rebellion in this city assumes no new phase to-day. It was expected that Bishop Conway would be here to endeavor to harmonize the belligerents, but he did not come. This morning three hundred opponents of the priest gathered around the church, but they conducted themselves with perfect order. Father O'Sullivan did not make his appearance, but sent his message to request the church to be opened for the usual services.

The assembled crowd gave him to understand they were still firm and unyielding in their determination not to allow the church to be opened until their grievances were redressed, and O'Sullivan was recalled from the parish. Mass was celebrated at the priest's residence to a small assemblage.

BOSTON, July 10.—Colonel Gardner Banks, brother of General N. P. Banks, is dead. He had lived several years in New Orleans, from whence he arrived on Wednesday.

CINCINNATI, July 10.—Late information from Dayton indicates that the effect of the storm there yesterday evening was more severe than at first supposed. The names of the persons killed by the falling of St. John's Lutheran church are Christian Thomas, Mrs. Theresa Randall and Leonard Weyraugh. Jacob Wolfrem is probably fatally injured.

Besides these a number of others were seriously hurt. Edward Meehan and George Speyer were taken out dead from the Washington street bridge. They were horribly mangled. James Feischburgh and another boy were removed alive, but badly injured. A few miles from the city a tree was blown across a gipsy wagon in camp, instantly killing a woman.

It was severe in the country adjacent to Dayton, particularly in Randolph township, destroying crops and fences, and in a few instances barns were struck by lightning and burned. At Xenia the storm was less severe, but made havoc among the trees, fences and outhouses.

WILMINGTON, N. C., July 11.—A fearful butchery was perpetrated in Robeson county, yesterday evening, by Henry Berry, Lowry, and a band of negro outlaws. A sheriff's posse, having in charge Lowry's wife and several others who had been aiding and abetting the outlaws, was ambuscaded near Buis' store, on the Wilmington, Charlotte and Rutherford railroad.

The following named of the sheriff's posse were killed and wounded: Killed—Hector McMillan, Archibald Brown and Hector McNeill. Wounded—D. McCormick, Berry Barnes and James Lowry, the latter a colored man and cousin of the outlaw Lowry, but cooperating with the sheriff's posse.

The fight resolved itself into a regular battle, which lasted some time. The sheriff's posse fought well, and were following the outlaws into the recesses of the swamp, but it is not certainly known that any of the outlaws were killed.

Lowry, the leader of the outlaws, and Captain F. M. Wishart, had a regular duel on the railroad track, each loading and firing deliberately five or six times, but neither was wounded.

The whole county of Robeson is at last fully aroused, and it is believed a campaign will be inaugurated that will result in the extermination of the outlaws. Committees of citizens of Robeson county come to this city to-day to secure arms and ammunition. Every member of the Lowry band is a negro.

FOREIGN.

ROME, July 4.—The municipality of Rome gave a brilliant ball last night. The King was present. At the close his majesty started for Florence.

There has been an unusual attendance of cardinals and other high dignitaries of the church at court during the King's stay in Rome.

MADRID, July 4.—The Cortes continues the discussion of the budget. Reports which have been circulated here of alleged disturbances in Havana are now ascertained to be wholly unfounded. During the debates in the Cortes Senor Nocedal took occasion to denounce in very bitter language the occupation of Rome by King Victor Emanuel. Senor Olozaga, in reply, protested against the expression of any opinion whatever on the subject by the Cortes.

HAMILTON, Ca., July 5.—Rev. Dr. Neville, rector of St. Thomas' church, is dead. He was formerly stationed at New Orleans, Philadelphia and New York.

ROME, July 5.—During the banquet last night Visconti made a speech, in the course of which he declared the conduct of the Romans during the visit of the King justified the transfer of the capital, and proved that Rome was profoundly attached to the dynasty.

PARIS, July 6.—A loan will be raised by Paris to rebuild the destroyed monuments.

Jules Ducatel, for treason to the Communists, has been awarded the cross of the Legion of Honor.

Marshal McMahon has been reinstated in command at Versailles.

Duke de Nemours and Schneider, formerly president of the Corps Legislatiff, are in Paris.

The supplemental elections occur next Sunday. Prince de Joinville, having declared for the republic, will undoubtedly succeed in the department of La Manche.

General Munteuffel dined with President Thiers to-day.

Count von Moltke has ordered the German commanders to forbear inflicting punishment for offenses which the French law can reach.

Count Waldersie complains of the bitter language of the journals toward Germany. The Official Journal, publishing this statement, advises other journals to exercise the utmost forbearance.

PARIS, July 7.—The court martial, in trying prisoners, will proceed in the following order: 1. Members of the Central Committee. 2. Persons who usurped public functions. 3. Those generally implicated. General Rossel will be tried before a special tribune.

It is proposed to lend President Thiers the Palace Elysee as a residence.

The Bank of France yesterday sent one hundred and four million francs to Prussia.

Amiens has been placed in a state of siege in consequence of the failure of the authorities to discover the murderer of a Prussian.

The smallpox is on the decrease in Paris.

The Pope writes President Thiers that he will remain in Rome.

LONDON, July 8.—The Times publishes a letter vindicating the conduct of United States Minister Washburne during the seige of Paris by the Versailles army, and stating in the most emphatic terms that Washburne was never in favor of the Communists.

The National Assembly is engaged in the discussion of a bill, recently introduced, providing for the election of Conseils Generaux, and fixing a day on which the same shall be held.

ROME, July 8.—The French charge d'affairs at the Italian court has taken up his residence in Rome. The Austrian minister is expected at an early day.

HAGUE, July 8.—The second chamber of Parliament ratified the treaty for the cession of the Island of New Guinea, in the Pacific ocean, to England.

MADRID, July 8.—It is announced that Marshal Serrano will resign the presidency in the council of ministers in case the budget fails in the Cortes.

PARIS, July 10.—Sixteen thousand Communist prisoners at Versailles have been released by order of the government, but sixteen thousand are still held for trial by court martial. They will be tried in squads.

President Thiers has written a letter to the Pope, inviting him to take up his residence in France. Thiers makes an humble apology to the holy father for the inability of France to interfere in behalf of the temporal power in the Roman States, but declares it has the earnest conviction that Italian unity is impossible.

ROME, July 10.—Vicar General Cardinal Patrizo prohibits members of the church in the Roman States from reading non-clerical newspapers.

IMPORTANT NEWS FROM CHINA.

For some time past, indeed ever since the murder at Tien-tsin, there has been more or less uneasiness in regard to Christian missions in China. The prevailing impression has been and is that the highest class of society is anxious to banish missions from the empire, or at least to embarrass them so that they will be utterly inefficient. It is now apparent that the government is feeling the pulse of the Christian representatives in China, with a view, if they may safely, of repressing the action of the missions. They have opened correspondence with the Christian representatives, having in view the publishing decrees adverse to missions. They set forth their proposed policy, and ask the favorable consideration of it. The answers of the foreign ministers give us, as we judge, good ground to hope the Chinese government will not press their new policy in regard to missions, as it evidently involves a rupture with the treaty powers. The subject has attracted wide attention, and our mails just received at the mission rooms are quite full of it. The letter which we give below, from Rev. L. N. Wheeler, dated at Peking, April 25, 1871, gives a clear and condensed statement, and we print it for the information of the church. Bro. Wheeler says:

An event of no small importance to missionaries in China, and which should call out in their behalf the sympathies and prayers of the home church, has recently transpired at the capital. Some weeks ago the several foreign ministers received a document from the Board of Foreign Affairs, containing several propositions bearing upon missionary work throughout the empire, and which, if approved, it was intended to embody and promulgate in the form of an imperial edict. Through the kindness of S. W. Williams, LL. D., secretary of the American legation, I am enabled to give you these propositions. They are in brief as follows:

1. Orphan asylums established and maintained by missionaries hereafter to be placed under the supervision of native officials.

2. Females not to be allowed to engage in missionary work, and the assembling together for purposes of worship of persons of both sexes to be prohibited.

3. Foreign missionaries to be prevented from encroaching upon the rights of officials and the gentry, and from despising and maltreating the people. Individuals so offending shall be sent home.

4. The course of justice shall not be interfered with by the missionary; but in all cases where foreigners and natives dwell together the laws shall be equitably executed.

5. French missionaries shall not be allowed to change passports, nor to transfer their passports to other people, and when change of residence occurs the proper officers shall be duly informed.

6. To prevent the admission of law-breakers into Christian societies the missionaries should hold a careful examination in the case of each candidate, and always insist on a period of probation; and, moreover, the number of converts, with their names, shall be reported by each mission to the proper officials once a month, or at least once a quarter.

7. Missionaries shall not be allowed to override constituted authority, nor they shall be prohibited from assuming the manner and style of mandarins. They shall not have the right to address a magistrate on behalf of any native; while their own matters shall be represented in the form and manner (that is, upon bended knees when in the magisterial presence) required of subjects.

8. No houses or lands shall be reclaimed by missionaries on the ground of old titles, and all purchases of property shall hereafter be made by native churches, not in the name of the missionary.

It was claimed by the government that in consequence of the misconduct of foreign religious propagandists evils of long standing threatened the peace and good order of the country. It must be admitted that certain grave charges directly made or implied in this official communication are not wholly without foundation in fact; but it is equally true that Roman Catholic missionaries, principally French, are the responsible parties. The misfortune is, however, that the government, partly through ignorance, and, it is to be feared, partly of set purpose, is likely to confound Protestants with Romanists, and regard them as one in its deliberations and enactments on this subject. Should the original purpose of the authorities be carried out, missionaries and native converts would necessarily have to endure many hardships, and there would seem to be no escape from violent persecutions in various parts of the empire in consequence of the license and impetus that would be thus given to the superstitious ignorance of the masses, and the feeling of hostility entertained toward foreigners and their religion by the gentry and official classes.

The propositions of the government were responded to by foreign ministers in such a manner as gives every reason to hope that all danger, at least for the present, it past. The reply of Mr. Low, our American representative, was very satisfactory. In his communication to Prince Kung and the other members of the Board of Foreign Affairs, his excellency remarks that it would seem hardly necessary for him to reply on several points, as they appear to have reference only to (French) Roman Catholics. Protestant missionaries have never been accused of interfering with judicial cases, and should they make the attempt they would not be upheld in such a course. By prompt and judicious action on the part of the magistrates, under the provisions of the treaty, most of the evils complained of might, in all probability, be easily remedied. As to the proposition concerning female missionaries, etc., Mr. Low, among other things, observes that the elevation of women is the glory of Western countries, and should the imperial wishes in this particular come to be generally known in the West, they will be regarded as indicating a most unwise policy. He concludes by desiring Prince Kung and his associates at the foreign office to look into the holy Scriptures, where may be found those principles and doctrines under whose influence foreign countries have become great and powerful.—New York Christian Advocate.

OUR LOST PICTURE.

BY MRS. S. M. B. PIATT.

No, it was nothing old and grand
Only a child out in the sun,
Choking a kitten with one hand,
And crushing pretty flowers with one.

Some rose-buds, sweet as buds could be,
Were blown against the blowing hair:
The clear eyes watched a cedar tree
That held a red bird flaming there.

The frame around was dark and small,
Just opposite the open door,
One morning, on our cottage wall
It hung, when we were young and poor.

This little piece of light and bloom
Was more, a thousand times, to me
Than all you have seen in great church-gloom,
Or palace gallery light, could be.

You do not understand, I say.
We saw the picture in the glass,
In our first home, so far away,
When our dead child played in the grass.

MY DISTRICT.

Mr. Editor: I want to write a few things for certain persons to read, and I presume that caption will do as well as any other, especially as it will be mostly about things in, and that have been done in my district.

What I write may be applicable to your district, or your circuit or your station. If so, apply the truth and make good use of it.

My district embraces one entire county, and parts of four others. It has three stations and nine circuits, and if I had the right sort of men I could have another circuit and a mission to add to these works. The minutes of our last Annual Conference say there are nearly twenty-five hundred members in my district, so that it is one of importance, and you may say whether it is of great or more than ordinary importance.

There is one river, which spreads out very much at times, runs through the district from northeast to southwest. Another runs through the eastern end, almost on a due line from north to south. One river bounds it on the west, and another on the southeast. And there are more creeks than a man cares to come in contact with in such a winter and spring as we have just passed through. Yet, by the blessing of God, I have not failed to get to a Quarterly Meeting or to hold a Quarterly Conference for twenty-four weeks passed, although the rain on two Sundays kept the people away, so that we did not preach or have communion on those days.

The preachers, with one exception, have been at their posts and working well. His family is not on the circuit, and the river between his home and work has been more than he could manage, at least he could not get ferriage at times. Every one will see from this the importance of parsonages, so as to have their pastors in their midst; for as every man ought to have his own wife, it is his duty, though a minister of the gospel, to see that his family is taken care of, and to spend some portion of his time with them. If he has to go out of his pastoral work to take care of and visit them, he, by that necessity, is placed at a disadvantage, and his circuit or station loses his presence, influence, example and labors while gone on these trips. I was once appointed to a station without a parsonage, and kept my family in another place; and although I did not average more than two days per week with them, I do not remember that I ever visited them in two years but I learned, when I went back to my work, that some one or more persons had called for my services during my absence. The sick wanted me, or I was desired at a funeral, or to marry a couple, or some other ministerial work. So those circuits and stations which have not parsonages lose a great deal by that deficiency, and put their pastors to a great deal of trouble and expense that might be avoided by having a parsonage. Is it your circuit or station that is thus deficient? Do you intend to let it remain so? or will you provide for your minister and his family a comfortable house, so that he may be with his family and with you all his time? That would be as it should be. Both parties would be greatly benefited by that arrangement. I hope you will take the suggestion and act at once upon it. The house and home are needed.

There is a scarcity of parsonages among our people. In my district the people are waking up a little on this subject. I hope to be able at our next Conference (D. V.) to report two or more new parsonages in this district.

The finances of some of the circuits are very low. One set of stewards came to Quarterly Conference without so much as a dollar for their preacher or presiding elder. "We expected you would take a collection to-morrow." "So I expect to do, but not for you. I shall try to do my work, but not yours. Not a dollar of the collection will go toward the support of your preacher or presiding elder. It will be for the Bishops. You must do your own work, and not expect me to do it for you." Well, when they found I would not do their work, they hustled around and brought up about $30. But why is it that so many stewards come up to the first, second and third Quarterly Meetings with so little money?—hardly enough to pay the traveling expenses of the preacher and presiding elder. Indeed, I knew an instance where a preacher had not received, up to the second Quarterly Meeting, as much money as it had cost him to move to his circuit. But why is this the case? Because, first, our people are not properly instructed; second, too many stewards give so little themselves that they do not ask the people to give any more than they do; and third, too many do not seem to care whether the preacher and his family live or starve. My opinion is, that a plan of assessing every member and family of the church and congregation should be adopted by every board of stewards, large enough to give the preacher a comfortable living, and they be called on to pay up a pro rata monthly or quarterly. This plan, if persevered in, would work well and relieve many a preacher of debt. But neglecting a plan of system, they hurry around about the fourth Quarterly Meeting to get a little for the preacher, and come up with about one-fourth or one-half—may be two-thirds—of the preacher's claims. They heave a few sighs and utter a few groans! "Mighty sorry, brother, we have done no more for you! But the truth is, our people are poor and not very liberal! I hope the Lord will bless you, and you may get a circuit next year that will support you well. Farewell! and if you ever pass this way call on me." Now if that steward had trained his church to give every month, or every quarter, he would have been flush and paid all up, and with a smiling face would have said: "Brother, God bless you! I hope you will be sent to us next year. Tell the presiding elder to see that you are sent back here."

Well, was your circuit the one in either case mentioned above? If not, how much better did yours do? Are you the steward that never collects for the preacher till the last quarter? You forced that preacher to go in debt, and pay from twenty-five to thirty-five per cent. more for his provisions than he would if you had called on the people monthly or quarterly for his salary. May you do better. The stations have done far better than the circuits in finances so far in the ecclesiastical year.

The tendency of the white people, as well as negroes, now, is to move to cities, towns and villages, and enter upon some business other than farming. It seems difficult for many to adapt themselves to the new state of things—either to work the crop themselves or manage the lazy freedmen in the country, and submit to their indolent, unthrifty way of working corn and cotton. It tries the patience of men and women, when the crop needs immediate culture, and the weather and season are favorable, to see the hands—as much interested in the crop as the whites are—put on their Sundays, mount a mule, and go off to town and spend a day loafing around, or march off with a gun and fishing rod, and spend the day in the woods, or on the banks of some branch or creek or pond. Yet the woolly-heads often and often do just that way. Well, to get rid of such trouble, vexation and, as they believe, final starvation if they remain on the farm, many are leaving them and trying what the city or town can do for them. Hence, by these removals, many country churches are decreasing, and have decreased until there are not male members enough to fill the offices of the church. In our church, in my district, the pastor of the circuit informed me there was no male member for a superintendent of a Sabbath school, class-leader or steward. Only one man, and he merely a nominal member. That's a queer title—nominal. Yet I fear there are such persons in almost every church.

But while the circuits and country churches are depleting or diminishing, the town and city churches are increasing and becoming more efficient—are stronger numerically, financially and, in some places, spiritually. May they still grow.

These facts intimate to us the importance of taking steps at once to have good church houses built upon eligible positions or lots at all the depots or stations along the railroads, so that our denominational influence may be felt and recognized in those communities, and impress them properly as they grow and develop. And if we had a church extension society in our Conference we might build a church at a railroad station in my district, where no church has any organization, and where we cannot preach, because no room can be had to preach in. We have no church nearer than six miles. No other denomination has a church nearer than three or four miles. The freight depot building could be secured but for the large amount of freight received at that point. Occasionally, too, churches built years ago are one or two or three miles from the depot. In such cases it seems to me it would be better to move the church to the depot town. There is one church in my district, about a mile from the depot—built a long time ago—which, while it does very well for the country people, does not answer a good purpose for the town people. If it were in the town services could be held at night very often, with a tolerably large congregation, which could not be got to the church in the country. We lose, too, the children from the Sunday school by having the church in the country. Thus we are losing our influence with and hold upon them by having the church out in the country, instead of in the town.

That church will die out if it is not moved, I fear. P. E.

Extinguish.—Talking about "fine phrases" recalls another story of a clergyman who had a fondness for long words, and undertook to instruct one of his church officers in the use of them. One night, as they were about to leave the vestry, John asked the minister if he should put out the candles.

"Put out! say extinguish," answered the clergyman.

"Ah!" said John, "does extinguish always stand for put out?"

"Always," replied the minister.

Next Sunday it happened that a dog began to bark in the church. John at once rose in his seat, and solemnly gave the order: "Some one will please to extinguish that dog."

Prayer Self-Productive.—Felix Neff once made the following comparison: "When a pump is frequently used, but little pains are necessary to have water—the water pours out at the first stroke, because it is high; but if the pump has not been used for a long time the water gets low; and when you want it you must pump it a long while, and the water comes only after great efforts. It is so with prayer; if we are instant in prayer, every little circumstance awakens the disposition to pray, and desires and words are always ready. But if we neglect prayer it is difficult for us to pray; for the water in the well gets low."

Sammy Bradburn said: "Some of our brethren pretend to go into the pulpit without any previous meditation, and preach from the first text that happens to catch their eye; and this they call 'extempore' preaching. I call it 'extrumpery' preaching."

THE CHINA MISSION.

Mr. Editor: I am still holding myself ready to receive all the money any one may send me for the China mission. I am not only holding myself ready, but am actually receiving contributions from persons and Sunday schools for this object. I make it a point, when I receive from $60 to $100, to buy a draft on China, or San Francisco or London, and send it to Bro. Lambuth. This course keeps the money going, and keeps it from rusting. Do you see the point?

For some weeks past I have meditated a few items for the readers of the Advocate, in reference to some amounts I have received for Bro. Lambuth and his school, hoping they might induce others to believe they could, if they willed it, do something for this cause.

A venerable lady, who knew Bro. Lambuth when he was a boy, and who was once well off in worldly goods, but is now in the extreme of poverty—not having a foot of land for a home—and lives about from place to place, spends what time she can get from harder work in knitting socks, which she sells or gets the merchant to sell for her, and gives the proceeds to me to send to William, as she calls Bro. Lambuth. I have received as much as $5 at a time from this venerable lady for this object! Who will go and do likewise? If all had the will and purpose of this venerable lady, and would work up to it, the treasury of the Lord would have much more in it than it gets.

A lady in North Carolina some time since saw something in the papers from me, or which had my name connected with it, in reference to the school for orphans in China. She had a class of five in a Sunday school, and interested them to give a cent a week for this school, and on the nineteenth of June remitted to me the first installment. Could not every teacher in a Sunday school get their scholars to give that much for the school in China? By making such beginnings with children we may train them to do much for the Lord's cause in a lifetime.

A poor "young Methodist," living near the bay coast, and having many difficulties to contend with, nevertheless denies herself so as to send me $2 for Brother Lambuth's school.

Some one at Thomastown, not wishing the left hand to know what the right hand doeth, sends, without name, $5 for Bro. Lambuth.

The wife of one of the members of the Mississippi Conference has been paying me $6 a quarter to pay for a Bible reader in China. The old woman employed for this work visits women in China, and reads the Bible to them. This she can do quietly in their homes. She has access, too, where the missionaries and their wives could not. Thus the truth is heard, and their thoughts directed to the Author of every good gift, and to Jesus, the Savior of sinners. Will any one else do likewise?

Well, I receive amounts (have received them) ranging from fifty cents up to fifty or more dollars in the remittance. Send on any amount you may have that you wish to send in that direction.

Well, I had like to have failed to mention that one lady, who has had a school the past term of ten months, arranged that the closing exercises of the school should be a concert, and that all who attended should pay fifty cents each for what they heard, and that the proceeds should go to Bro. Lambuth's school in China. The hand of the town kindly assisted in the entertainment. Now let our principals of schools and colleges make a note there, and act on the suggestion next Christmas, May day and commencement, and send the net proceeds to me for Bro. Lambuth's orphan school. That's a good way to get the children interested in the cause of missions. And when that lady reads to her pupils the letter she will get from Bro. Lambuth, after I report to him this week, I believe they will thank God for the thought ever entering the head of their good teacher.

It seems to me, to others also, that our General Conference and Bishops have never manifested much interest in the China mission. Not one of our Bishops has ever visited the mission; consequently no native preacher in our China mission has ever been ordained. We have had native preachers there who were useful men, but as they were not ordained by our church, and from the indifference manifested by the General Conference and Bishops, saw no prospect of ordination in our church, they connected themselves with other missions, so as to be ordained to the full work of the ministry. The native preacher, under whose labors the great work in the north of China was carried on a year and a half ago, was converted under the labor of our missionaries. He went to another mission for ordination. Hence our mission has lost him and his useful labors. Can we blame him? So we have lost all but two of the native preachers who have been in our mission in other years. They died waiting for the arrival of a Bishop—hoping to be ordained. At the General Conference of 1866, in New Orleans, I offered a resolution that the Committee on Missions should devise a plan for the organization of mission Conferences in our foreign missions, and for our Bishops to arrange for one of their number to visit those foreign missions at least once in two years. My object was to get a mission Conference in China, and to get our Bishops there to ordain some native preachers; for I believe that if there had been a Conference organized there twelve or more years ago our mission there to-day would report members by the hundreds instead of tens. And only the refusal to devise liberal things in this line has kept us from having all the money necessary for all the necessary expenses. The expenses were all that kept the committee from recommending the plan to the General Conference, and the Conference adopting a plan providing for this work.

If the next General Conference does not provide for this work, and the ordination of such native preachers as may be believed to be worthy, I hope it will order our missionaries home, and let us abandon the field. I believe the Bishop who has charge of that mission ought to visit it before the meeting of the next General Conference.

Report of Visiting Committee to Whitworth Female College.

This institution is in a most flourishing condition. One hundred and eighty-three pupils were present during last session. Rev. H. F. Johnson, the principal, has always been successful in the undertakings of his life; but conducting a female college seems to be his forte. He possesses the esteem and confidence of his patrons, and of the entire community, and the affection of his pupils.

We witnessed the examination of the senior class for the degree of mistress of English literature. It was most searching and thorough, yet entirely satisfactory to the audience, and triumphant for the young ladies. The names of the ten graduates were placed in a hat, and the propositions in Davies' Legendre were put in another; one of each was then drawn, and the class were required to demonstrate the proposition thus designated. This would have been a thorough test for even older heads, but the young ladies promptly and conclusively proved themselves equal to it.

All the exercises we witnessed were highly creditable; the essays exhibited thought and mental culture, and the music showed that the instruction in that department had been artistic and thorough.

We can confidently and truthfully recommend Whitworth Female College to all who have daughters to educate.

THE LOWLY LIFE.

BY GERALD MASSEY.

A little flower so lowly grew,
So lonely was it left,
That heaven looked like an eye of blue,
Down in its rocky cleft.

What could the little flower do,
In such a darksome place,
But try to reach that eye of blue,
And climb to kiss heaven's face?

And there's no life so lone and low
But strength may still be given,
From narrowest lot on earth to grow
The straighter up to heaven.

THE POPE'S JUBILEE,

OR SILVER WEDDING,

s it is called, is noticed in many of e papers. It was celebrated on e seventeenth instant. A writer the New York Observer gives the llowing sketch of his ecclesiastical reer:

The Rev. Dr. Mastai Feretti, pas- r of the first church of Rome, sly, commonly called Pope, was alled to the Popedom twenty-five ears ago, quite as much to his own arprise as to that of his friends nd the public, but he entered upon is work with great zeal, and has iven a quarter of a century to the ervice of his church, with energy nd devotion unexcelled by any of his predecessors. But his pastorate annot be considered successful. He ad hardly become accustomed to he use of the shepherd's crook be- ore his flock became very unruly, nd, for sheep, singularly rebellious. They turned upon the shepherd, nd in 1848 he was compelled to hrow aside his pastoral garments, o put on the attire of a footman, nd to take himself out of the city of which he was the chief minister nd ruler. But for the interference of some foreign friends, who have ow suffered terribly for their kind- ness, he would never have got back to his beloved but reluctant flock. From that time onward his pas- torate has been marked with dis- content among his people, and blun- ders on his part. He has been obliged to keep a foreign army of paid soldiers in his parish, to de- fend him with bayonets and bul- lets from the attacks of his own church members. Such a state of things is unheard of in the annals of the Christian religion. When the apostle, in his rashness, drew his sword and amputated the ear of a man who was thought to be an enemy of Jesus, the Lord told him to put up his sword, for those who used it would perish by it. Dr. Feretti, the Pope, was so addicted to the custom of imitating Peter that he fancied himself his successor, and surround- ed himself with a guard of men with drawn swords, who should slice off, not the ears, but the heads of any and all who attacked, not the Savior, but his own precious self. And in him was fulfilled the words of the Lord respecting them who take the sword.

The doctor was very much op- posed to the progress of learning, and feared, with much truth, that the reading of the Bible and other good books, the establishment of schools and newspapers, etc., would be bad for his business, which was to keep his place as Pope of Rome, and he set his face against all such things, believing the maxim, long honored in the church over which he has the honor to preside, that "Ignorance is the mother of devo- tion." So many blunders did he make that he determined to be considered incapable of making a blunder; and calling his people to- gether, told them to pass a resolu- tion that he was infallible. They did as they were told, for the doc- tor had now the power; but when he made them say he could not make a blunder, he made the great- est blunder of his ministry. The day following this foolish declaration his "eldest son" made another dec- laration, even of war against a mighty power unfriendly to the reli- gion of the Pope of Rome, and all the soldiers who stood round about the Pope with drawn swords were sent for to come and fight the foes of the "eldest son." As soon as these hireling soldiers were gone the members of Dr. Feretti's church rose up in arms and said they would not have him to be their ruler, for he was their minister, their servant, and not king at all. They were willing that he should be their pastor, though he had done very little preaching, but they did not want a minister to lord it over the State. So they upset his throne, shut him up in his house, and called Victor Emanuel, a great king, to come and rule over them in tempo- ral things, while the doctor should confine his attention to the spiritual.

This, however, was just what the old doctor did not want to do. His temporalities were his living. Be- sides, he loves power as well as other people. And while he was king, as well as priest, he could say to this man, Come, and he came; to another, Go, and he went. He kept an Inquisition—a nicely ad- justed machine to make all men think alike—and when one of his people differed from him, he put him into this machine and shorten- ed or stretched him, as the case re- quired, until he was adjusted to the regulated standard of faith. Some- times the heretic put in never came out. This was the case with Bishop Reese, of Michigan, who was sent for to Rome by one of Dr. Feretti's predecessors. The Bishop was put in to be reformed into necessary uniformity, but his people never heard of him again. Now it came to pass, when the new king, Victor Emanuel, came to reign over Rome, that this power to inflict pains and penalties was taken away from the head of the church, and he was re- quired to mind his own business, which business was very disagree- able to the doctor, unless he could enliven it with the secular pleasures that had hitherto engrossed the most of his attention. As his "eldest son" had lost power to help him, he sent to the man of Austria, who had always been his obedient child. But the Austrian replied that it was just as much as he could do to look out for himself. Then the fright- ened pastor intimated to his friends in England that he wanted aid, and Mr. Odo Russell was told to say to him that an English frigate was off the coast, and he could run away in it whenever he liked. In his despair he sent an appeal to the Grand Turk, and begged his kind interfer- ence. But the follower of Moham- med had no bowels of compassion for his old enemy in distress, and could give him no succor unless he would abjure wine, take half a dozen wives, and become a Mussulman.

Thus abandoned by his former subjects, his own church members no longer willing to have him for their king, and snubbed by all his foreign friends, including the Turk himself, the poor old man finds his twenty-fifth anniversary anything but a "silver wedding." The mar- riage bells that rung in the morn of nuptials, when he was married to the Church of Rome as her head, now toll the requiem of his power and the climax of his sufferings. From the windows of the Vatican he will look out over a city that is no longer his own, upon a world where he has not one to do him reverence as a king. How thou art fallen, O Lucifer! never to rise again.

On the seventeenth was the an- niversary of his settlement in Rome. It is said that no pastor in Rome has held the charge so long since Peter; and as Peter was never pas- tor there, it is quite true to say that Dr. Feretti's pastorate was the longest, as it is the last, and will be the last of those who claim to be in Rome prophet, priest and king.

RUSSIAN PROVERBS.

The Scotch and the Spaniards have hitherto divided the credit of possessing the largest stock of pro- verbial wisdom, but were the litera- ture of Russia more widely known she might prove a formidable rival to the land of the oatmeal or to that of oranges. We give a few specimens, which, on account of their pointed terseness, their quaint, homely vigor, and dry, Sancho Panza satire, scarcely need the aid of rhyme to recommend them. They are, indeed, more fully than words can express, the faithful mirror of the shrewd, simple, dogged, humor- ous Russian mind, ever vailing its natural keenness under a mask of habitual and impenetrable stolidity.

"Every fox praises his own tail."

"Go after two wolves and you will not even catch one."

"A good beginning is half the work."

"Trust in God, but do not stum- ble yourself."

"With God, even across the sea; without him, even to threshold."

"Without cheating no trading."

"Money is not God, but it shows great mercy."

"The deeper you hide anything, the sooner you find it."

"If God don't forsake us, the pigs will not take us."

"A debt is adorned by payment."

"Roguery is the last of trades."

"Never take a crooked path while you can see a straight one."

"Fear not the threats of the great, but rather the tears of the poor."

"Ask a pig to dinner, and he will put his feet on the table."

"Disease comes in by hundred- weights and goes out by ounces."

"Every little frog is great in his own bog."

"An old friend is worth two new ones."

"Be praised not for your ances- tors, but for your virtues."

"When fish are rare, even a crab is a fish."

"A father's blessing cannot be drowned in water, nor consumed by fire."

"A mother's prayer will draw up from the depths of the sea."

HUMBLENESS of mind is gained more by believing in Christ than by dwelling upon our sins. When we see the "King in his beauty" we have little desire to behold our own deformity.

BROTHER, YOU MUST SQUEEZE.

Once upon a time a church, or rather the officials thereof, came to the conclusion that as crops had been very good, and money was scarce in the country, they would not make any special effort to col- lect their pastor's salary, which by the way had been fixed at the mini- mum living point at the beginning of the year, but give him just what came in every month, and let him make the best of it.

This resolution on their part was accompanied with the solemn advice to their pastor: "Brother, you must squeeze; the times are hard." He re- plied that he would think of it and see how the plan would work.

In a few days he called upon his landlord, who was a member of the church, and told him that he could not promise to pay any specific rent for the house from that time forth, but would pay what he could, for the "times were hard and he must squeeze." The landlord stared at him in astonishment, and replied: "I don't let my houses on those terms. You must pay the rent in advance or move out."

He next went to the mill and asked for a sack of flour. "Cer- tainly," said the miller, "but do you know that the price of flour has ad- vanced since you bought the last?" "I did not know it," said the minis- ter, "but it is of no consequence; I am to give what I can for it. Brother, you must squeeze; the times are hard." "Hard or easy," said the miller, "I must have the market price for my flour, and you can't have it for any less."

The minister next went to the shoemaker, and priced a pair of boots for his wife, but when the same terms were announced, the shoemaker declared that he did not sell upon such terms.

The butcher treated him in the same way. His meat was so much a pound. And the vegetable dealer insisted upon having a regular price for his commodities.

On his way home the minister went to one of his stewards who kept a grocery store, and asked for some necessary articles for the use of his family, such as a dollar's worth of sugar, a pound of tea and a bar of soap. After packing up the things, the storekeeper began to reckon up the price. "You need not trouble yourself," said the min- ister; "I will pay what I can for them. Brother, you must squeeze, as the times are hard with me at present." "Squeeze," said the store- keeper with pious surprise; "what do you mean! give what you can— how much will that be?" "I can- not say at present," said the minis- ter, "but you shall know at the end of the month, when I see how much I shall get." "That will not do for me," said the storekeeper; "I have to pay a certain price for my goods, and I cannot let them go in that way."

"So," said the minister, "I see that I am the only one who is to squeeze because of the hard times. I have called upon my landhand, the miller, the shoemaker, the butcher, the tailor and yourself, to see how your plan of squeezing would an- swer, but I find that you must all have a stated price for your goods. How, then, am I to pay my way with- out a stated salary, and that suffi- cient for the supply of my family's wants. Squeeze!" continued the minister with righteous disgust; "your plan can only result in squeez- ing the self-respect out of my heart, the energy out of my life, and the demons of want and discontent into my household."

We did not hear how the matter was settled.—San Francisco Spectator.

LETTER TO A MINISTER.

HOW TO FIND TEXTS.

"MY DEAR KINSMAN: In the early part of my Christian profession I eagerly seized every human author in divinity; preferring them to the Bible itself, because I thought I un- derstood them better than the prophets, apostles and Jesus Christ. This I lamented, and felt the re- proofs of conscience for it. I often suspected my sincerity on this ac- count. I resolved to make a trial of the sacred Scriptures by read- ing one part of the day a few chap- ters in the Old Testament, and at another some chapters in the New Testament. This method, with a blessing, soon opened my eyes, cor- rected my error in practice, and endeared the sacred volume. Read- ing one morning that part of Abra- ham's history where he feared the inhabitants of the land would kill him to possess his wife, and in the afternoon reading a few chapters in Proverbs, I paused at Solomon's words: 'The fear of man bringeth a snare;' and was so struck with the illustration of it by the snare which entangled Abraham as to think Solomon had it in his eye. I began to see that Scripture is the best interpreter of Scripture; and from that trial 'compared spiritual things with spiritual.' On another occasion I read the Jewish law re- specting a bird, which might be killed when wandering in the field or flying in the air, but not on her nest. After this I read Solomon's words alluding to it: 'As a bird wanders from her nest, so is the man that wanders from his place;' his danger begins with his wander- ing from home for safety! Ever after my mind was determined on keep- ing my eyes on the sacred Scriptures night and day; and, by the divine blessing, this has furnished me for thirty years with three sermons on the Lord's day and twice on week evenings. And the more I read, preach, converse and expound, the more amply am I filled with divine truth. All my fears of wanting a text or a subject vanished when I adopted this plan. Yet such was my folly and disposition to 'cleave to the dust,' that the first funeral sermon I was called to preach, I flew to Dr. Bates' sermon on death. I read it with attention and anxiety; but on my finishing it felt myself weary, unhappy, disappointed. The thought occurred, why not read the book of Job, the Psalms, the writ- ings of Solomon on the subject of death? I did so, and was soon sup- plied with a text and a sermon. This cured my folly, and convinced me that the word of God is 'able to make the man of God perfect,' or completely furnish him for his work. Yours faithfully, JOHN COOKE."— From the Preacher's Lantern.

THE GREEK CHURCH.

Now that it is an undisputed fact that New York is to have erected on one of its handsomest avenues a grand temple of the orthodox East- ern faith—the religion of a people with whom its relations have always been more than cordial—it is proba- bly not inappropriate to give a brief history of the great religion of the East, about which so little is known in America. As is well known, it is the established faith of Russia, and is officially called the Orthodox Eastern Church, though it is fre- quently designated as both the Greek and Russian Church. It separated from the See of Rome in 1054, and from the Byzantine Pa- triarchate in 1589. It has its own independent synod, but maintains the relations of a sister church with the four patriarchates of Constanti- nople, Jerusalem, Antioch and Alex- andria. The Sacred Synod, the board of government of the church, was established with the concur- rence of the Russian clergy and the four Eastern patriarchs. There have been three epochs in the gov- ernment of the Russian Church. At first it had a foreign head, the pa- triarch of Constantinople, who ap- pointed the Metropolitan of Kiev, and afterward of Moscow. During the second period, commencing in 1589, it was governed by a patriarch appointed by the Czar Feodor the First, but was nearly independent; lastly, the direction of the church was transferred to the Emperor. He is, however, not the head of the church in the same sense as the Pope of Rome, though he exercises the external functions in a still greater degree than the pontiff. He appoints to every office in the church, and is restricted only so far as to leave the bishops and prelates the privilege of proposing candidates, and he transfers and dismisses per- sons from their offices in certain cases. But he has never claimed the right of deciding theological and dogmatic questions. In the case of any new heresy springing up in Russia requiring a judgment, the Emperor cannot pronounce a de- cision; but this duty remains to the synod, and if the question is critical, the opinion of the four Eastern patriarchs must be con- sulted, and finally a council has to be convened. The judgment of the church being once given, the Em- peror must command its execution.

In official documents the Emperor never calls himself the head, but only the defender of the church. The points in which the Greco-Russian Church differs from the Roman Catholic faith are, its denying the spiritual supremacy of the Pope, its prohibiting the celibacy of the clergy, and its authorizing all in- dividuals to read and study the Scriptures in their vernacular tongue. The prohibiting of celibacy is car- ried to such an extent that no priest can perform any spiritual function before he is married, nor after he becomes a widower; and, as by the rules of the church he is not allow- ed to remarry, the death of his wife occasions the cessation of his cler- ical function. The priests may, however, on the death of their wives, enter into a convent, and en- joy the privilege of becoming eligi- ble to be dignitaries of the church.

With the exception of the re- straints laid upon the Jews, who are not allowed to settle in Russia proper, all religions may be freely professed in the empire. No mem- ber of the Russo-Greek Church is permitted to renounce his creed; and when a marriage takes place between one of its members and a person belonging to another faith, the children must all be brought up in the established faith.—New York Christian Advocate.

MEN may judge us by the success of our efforts; God looks at the efforts themselves.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Lutherans in the United States number 2,200 ministers, 3,537 churches, and nearly 400,000 communicants.

A MEETING of Nonconformists was held in Birmingham recently to in- augurate an active agitation against the subsidizing of denominational schools.

AFTER forty years of labor the Primitive Methodists have suc- ceeded in erecting a chapel at Toll- cross, Glasgow Station. It will seat two hundred persons, and cost £400.

AT ST. MARY'S CHURCH, Truro, on Sunday, the Bishop of Exeter or- dained eight deacons and eleven priests. Some three hundred years have elapsed since the ordination at Truro.

AN EXTENSIVE CONSPIRACY, having for its object the wholesale mas- sacre of the entire Jewish inhabit- ants, has been discovered at Odessa, and a general panic prevails among the Israelitish population.

IT IS stated that the Hebrew Li- brary at Amsterdam, Holland, the most extensive one in existence, has been purchased by the congregation of the Temple Emmanuel in New York for the Rabbinical Seminary, established in connection with the church.

THE Independent Church at Bird- bush, Wilts, was founded about 1671, at Fern or Grove Hall. The meeting house that was erected in 1723 having become very dilapi- dated, has been taken down, and a new chapel is being erected on the same site.

THE baptisms of Jews in London during the year 1870 have been: Adults, 4; infants, 9; total 13. Since the opening of the chapel 583 adults and 646 infants have been baptized, making a total of 1,299. The Hebrew schools con- tinue to prosper; 886 Jewish chil- dren have been admitted since their establishment in 1809.

A REMARKABLE REVIVAL is in pro- gress in Newport, Monmouthshire, England, in connection with the Established Church. A correspond- ent of the Record says: "It is the most marvelous work of God I ever heard of. I imagine that it has reached 1,000 persons, and been a converting work to 800 at least. The other 200 will not rest where they are."

THE Jewish Times repudiates the Rabbinical Conference lately held in Cincinnati. It says: "If it had not been labeled and marked as Rabbinical Conference of Jewish Rabbis, and only the proceedings had been reported, one might have been tempted to look upon the Cin- cinnati convention as an adjourned meeting of the Boston Free Reli- gious Society, instead of an ad- journment of the Minhag-America revisers."

AS A MEMENTO of the expulsion of 2,000 clergymen from the Estab- lished Church in 1662, the Congre- gationalists in England have raised a fund of $1,250,000, the greater part of which has been applied to the building of chapels and schools. Of this sum, however, $250,000 has been set aside for the building of a memorial hall and the founding of a library. The site fixed upon (freehold) is a portion of the ground whereon the old Fleet Prison stood, in Farringdon street, and close to Ludgate Circus.

HAS ROME become thoroughly safe for Protestants? On a recent Sab- bath, while the little Wesleyan church recently drawn together there was engaged in celebrating the Lord's supper in its newly-opened place of worship, a bomb was ex- ploded in the portico, shattering it to pieces, but not seriously injuring any one of the worshipers with whom the hall was crowded. The police are at work to discover the authors of the outrage. Rev. Dr. Vernon, the newly-appointed Meth- odist missionary to Italy from this country, left New York on Saturday, the seventeenth ultimo, on the steamer Manhattan, for his field of labor.

THE state of things in the Episco- pal Church is growing serious. The Protestant Churchman, in review- ing the situation, comes to this con- clusion: "Therefore, we address ourselves frankly and finally to the majority in our General Convention. And what we have to say is that unless you protect Liberal Church- men in their rights, as they have been heretofore enjoyed, before the recent oppressive legislation, the days of the Protestant Episcopal Church in its present form are num- bered. We say it not in anger, much less as menace. We say it with grief. We say it because we love the church, and wish to live and die in her fellowship. But there are things we love still more. They are truth, conscience, a rea- sonable religious liberty, and the communion of all saints—liberty to act on our own principles, without restraint, hinderance or obloquy."

THE Cumberland Presbyterian General Assembly, at its meeting in Nashville, discussed at much length the foreign mission work. It was stated that one young man was consecrating himself to this work, and had offered himself to the board. A proposition was made to co-operate with the American Board; but this was objected to, on the ground that the American Board had became too denominational, and such action would lead to inconvenient complications. A reso- lution prevailed to instruct the Board of Missions "to ascertain, if possible, the best method of enter- ing upon the work of foreign mis- sions, proceed to raise funds for that purpose, and report to the next General Assembly." Steps were taken to organize two presbyteries of colored Cumberland Presbyterians into a separate synod. A total of 5,000 conversions and 4,500 acces- sions to the church was reported for the year.

CENTRAL TURKEY.—Wonderfully has God wrought in this mission. The gospel has triumphed there glorionsly. The Missionary Herald contains a letter from Mr. Trow- bridge, dated at Marash, who writes: "Evangelical labors began among the Armenians in this mission field in the year 1847, and have been steadily prosecuted ever since. That these labors have been attended with the divine blessing will appear from the following facts: There are now in the mission 22 regularly organized Protestant churches; 14 ordained pastors, 7 preachers; 42 school teachers; 10 other native helpers; 1,500 children in the com- mon schools; 1,468 church mem- bers; 31 Sunday schools; 32 places where the gospel is regularly preached; while the average attend- ance on the Sunday schools and Sunday services is 4,300; and the whole number of enrolled Protest- ants, 6,899. There is a well-or- ganized female boarding school in the mission, with 20 girls in attend- ance; a theological seminary, with 35 students; a girls' high school, with 35. Many of the churches and schools are entirely self-supporting, and all do much toward their own support."

THE Dollinger schism has been developed a little further by one or two new acts of the Pope. The Roman professors who signed the address to Dr. Dollinger, of which we made mention some weeks since, have all been excommunicated, and the students have been inhibited from attending their lectures under pain of same censure. The students have made repeated demonstrations in favor of the excommunicated pro- fessors, and especially those who are most obnoxious to the Jesuits. A state of anarchy accordingly pre- vails throughout the entire school, down to the primary department. The excitement runs so high that not long ago a follower of Dr. Dol- linger, aged fourteen, stabbed an Infallibilist, aged ten, to the heart. The refusal of the Pope to see Father Hyacinthe has already been noted. The father wrote, in re- sponse to the note of Monsignor de Merode, formerly his friend, through whom the refusal was communi- cated, in the following terms: "Once the Good Shepherd ran after the lost sheep, and bore him tenderly back on his shoulders. Now the lost sheep seeks the Good Shepherd—or him you regard as such—and is driven away. What a distance between the gospel and the Vatican!"—Independent.

THE United Greek Church com- prehends those Christians who, while they follow the Greek ritual and use the Greek language and liturgy, are yet united with the Church of Rome. They admit the double possession of the Spirit and the supremacy of the Roman pontiff, and accept all the doctrinal deci- sions subsequent to the Greek schism which have force in the Roman Church. In all these par- ticulars they differ from the so- called Orthodox Greek Church. They are found chiefly in Southern Italy, in the Austrian dominions, in Poland, and in the Russian empire. Those of Italy are computed at 80,000; those of Austria at about 1,000,000; those of Poland at about 250,000; the number of those in Russia it is more difficult to ascer- tain. The total number in all these countries probably falls short of 5,000,000. As to nationalities, the Austrian United Greeks are divided into Romanians and Ruthenians; the former being settled in Wallachia, Transylvania and Eastern Hun- gary; the latter in Little Russia, Galicia and Northwestern Hungary. The former united with the Roman Church about the end of the twelfth century; the latter near the close of the seventeenth. These United Greeks follow the custom of the Orthodox Greek Church, by per- mission of the Pope, in regard to the marriage of the clergy, the use of trine immersion in baptism, and the administration of the commu- nion in both kinds.—The Standard.

A WORD FOR THE ADVOCATE.

The following pertinent extract is from a business letter addressed to us by an able and useful member of one of the patronizing Conferences—not intended for publication, but we take the liberty, without using his name, to insert it, hoping that many others may be fired with like zeal.

Rev. R. J. Harp—Dear Brother: I send inclosed $6 for the Advocate. * * * I hope to forward other subscribers soon, the good Lord helping me; and from this on I intend to press upon each family the importance of taking your excellent paper. The church here is very greatly demoralized in regard to supporting our church literature. Out of a membership of sixty-five or seventy only twelve or thirteen subscribe to our periodicals. This is so not because of delinquency on my part. Time and again, in our solicitation, have we been put off with the "not just now" of parents—heads of families—individuals to whom God has intrusted the training of immortal spirits. Three dollars, by the scores, can be found when self is concerned, when a bargain is to be made, when worldly pleasure invites, when son or daughter needs dress. The body of the child, with many of my church, is esteemed far more valuable than the soul, judging from their actions. This is a grave assertion; but are we not right? Look a moment at their doings. The body of the child is cared for, watched diligently, fed with wholesome food, clad with good raiment, etc. The mind or soul, how with it? Not cared for, not nourished, not developed. This is so, year in, year out, with the many. Why? No good religious paper in the family. The father is not discharging his sacred obligations to his children who neglects this matter. O that God may awake the whole church on this all-important subject. May he give his ministers courage and hard-facedness, that they may talk and plead with the lean and stingy souls of the church.

Health of the City.—Our city was never healthier than at this time. No yellow fever has made its appearance, nor are there any indications of it so far. We have every reason to believe that we shall have a healthy summer and fall.

The degree of D. D. was conferred on Rev. W. M. Rush, of the Missouri Conference, at the late commencement of Trinity College, North Carolina.

MISSIONARY DEBT.

Since our last acknowledgment we have received the following amounts in payment of subscriptions to liquidate the missionary debt, viz: Rev. John Mathews, New Orleans, $50; Rev. J. M. McKee, Mooringsport, Louisiana, $25; Rev. R. H. Adair, Keachie, Louisiana, $25, and placed the same to the credit of the treasurer.

Robt J. Harp, Agent.

According to Archbishop Thomson, in the article on our Lord in "Smith's Dictionary of the Bible," Good Friday this year fell on the exact day of the month as that on which the crucifixion took place.

WEARY IN WELL-DOING.

It is as it ought to be when men get tired of their sins, and when they grow sick and weary under the yoke of the devil. In doing well, however, we might suppose that there should be no weariness, and rarely any discouragemsnt. In doing well there is the assured approval of God, the testimony of a good conscience, and the hope of reward beyond the grave. But it is a fact in the experience of the most devoted Christians that they are subject to great depression and to seasons of extreme discouragement. In the wilderness "the soul of the people was much discouraged because of the way." The path of duty is often rugged and beset with enemies. The soldier of the cross wins his victories by conflict with the powers of darkness, and by an unceasing warfare with inward and outward onemies. The pilgrim, bound for the land of promise, goes up harnessed, and is foot-sore and faint under the burden and heat of the day.

Elijah, under the juniper tree, represents many who have yielded to temporary weakness, and have felt that further effort is useless. They are ready to exclaim with the prophet: "Who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?" The tears, prayers and toils of years seem to have been in vain, and the bread cast upon the waters has not been found after many days. The discomfited believer is ready to cry with Jeremiah: "He hath led me and brought me into darkness, but not into light." Christ recognized this tendency to discouragement in many of his parables, as of the tares and the wheat, and perhaps also in that of the mustard seed. He warns his disciples: "In the world ye shall have tribulations; but be of good cheer: I have overcome the world." John, in prison, no doubt gave way to distrust and depression of mind when he sent two of his disciples to Jesus, with the question: "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" The kingdom was developing too slowly, and not in the manner he had expected. The suggestion, in the solitude and darkness of his prison, came into his mind that there might be some mistake. Many with less reason are sometimes driven to a like suspicion that something is wrong in a system which does not sweep all before it at once. The burden of prophecy was, "How long?" and the souls of the martyrs under the altar are described as crying with a loud voice, "How long, O Lord, holy and true? dost thou not judge and avenge our blood in them that dwell on the earth?"

It is as we might suppose in a world of trial and sin. Goodness here must needs be in a state of conflict, and the most formidable opposition has to be encountered in the attempt to promote virtue and religion in the world. Christians have need of patience, even long patience, remembering "that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." They must have patience to wait, with the assurance that they shall reap in due time "if they faint not." They must have patience with themselves, with one another, and with both the apathy and enmity of the world. And they must have faith in God—in his truth and in his promises. "He is faithful that promised." From the first dim intimation in the hour of the fall to the last clear declaration of the apocalypse, not one promise has ever failed. The fainting child of God can cling to every promise, and intrench himself in the faithfulness of him that promised. God will surely bring it to pass, and the divine word shall stand and gleam as a lighthouse on the billow-washed shore.

We must look to God. He strengthened Abraham by the cheering announcement: "Fear not, Abram; I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." When the disciples were tossed upon the sea, and filled with terror and alarm, the Master's salutation was: "Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid." He who looks to the approval of men, or to immediate fruit, will often be disappointed. God's approval and grace must be our present and sufficient reward. And beyond this the weary worker must have "respect to the recompense of the reward" which leaves the grand solution to the unfoldings of eternity. The anchor must be cast within the vail. Faith must penetrate the curtain of time and sense, and hope must feed upon the living pastures which roll and swell amidst the heavenly paradise. The service of song, in its highest raptures, must be adjourned until that time when golden and imperishable harps shall be given.

LETTER FROM REV. W. V. TUDOR.

Dublin, Monday, June 19, 1871.

To Dr. B. H. Moss, Wm. R. Stuart, J. L. Dunnica and others, stewards of the Carondolet St. M. E. Church South, New Orleans:

My Dear Stewards—I shall write you of things as I see them, mingling only such history as may be popularly interesting. Water here is like water with you, and land like land. A boy is a boy, and a harbor a harbor. But the beauty and capacity of Queenstown harbor immediately impress the traveler. There is no finer in the world. Queenstown, on the southeastern coast of Ireland, strikes the eye very pleasantly on approaching near it. It is built mostly of stone, and on shelves like. Queenstown is as elevated as New Orleans is flat, and its masonry looks as though it would require the thunders of the judgment to batter it down. The garden district of New Orleans is beautiful; but the villas which constitute a part of Queenstown are richer in beauty. I had not been in Queenstown twenty minutes before Pat., observing me eyeing his donkey colt with pleased curiosity, offered to sell him to me for ten shillings. It was a mistake some one made when he described a certain horse as fourteen feet high, when he should have said hands. I should not make so great a mistake if I were to describe the donkey colt as being four hands high. I said to Pat.: "How shall I ever get him to America?" "O," says he, "you can carry him in a cage." I thought a moment, and then thought I would not buy.

From Queenstown to Cork is twelve miles by rail, along the River Lee. Well, Cork is houses like, and steeples, and streets, and people, and horses and drays, and stores and banks, and jaunting cars. The accommodating sexton of St. Anne's Shandon church rang its far-famed chimes for the gratification of our party. It was sweet music.

From Cork we made an excursion in jaunting cars to Blarney Castle, five miles distant, and kissed the Blarney Stone, of course. Some of us were admiring the beautiful scenery as we rode along. "Ah!" said Pat., our driver, "what would all this world be to you if your wife were a widow?" Pat.'s pleasant way of putting the matter did not make us as serious, perhaps, as the truth which lay hidden under his conundrum would have naturally the effect to make us.

I have just looked at my watch. It is fifteen minutes past eight o'clock, and the sun is not yet down. Twilight will last till after nine o'clock. This is a curiosity to me; it is one of the things as I find them here, and some reader of this may get an item of information from it, and therefore I note the fact. North of us yet we shall have daylight till ten o'clock P. M.

From Cork we came to Killarney, one hundred and nine miles distant—twenty-five by rail, eighty-four by jaunting cars, and for the most of the time exposed to showers of rain at short intervals; but our way was through a picturesque, romantic country indeed. We stopped a night, on the way, at Glengariff, at the head of Bantry Bay. In this country I see illustrated, as I never understood before, the difference between the Old World and the New. City and country in America look unfinished—the city capable of indefinite expansion, vast tracts of rich forest land inviting the tiller's occupation. Here, on the contrary, the cities and towns seem to be walled in by a decree as imperious as that which said to the sea, "Thus far shalt thou come, and no further;" and every acre that had not to be abandoned to the rocks has either been cut by the plow or trimmed into beauty as by the most cultivated art of landscape gardening. I have not seen a wooden bridge. The bridges are of stone, solid, massive. Lawns and parks and thrifty fields, bordering the roads, show industry and taste. But the rocks and mountains have well defied cultivation, as they defy improvement, at least by human hand, in grandeur.

Through Kilmare our route lay to Killarney, on nearing which the beautiful lakes that have made it so celebrated in travel and song greeted our eyes. We spent, and well spent, both for pleasure and profit, a day in traversing the lakes in a rowboat, having a bugler along, whose notes reverberated in astonishing echoes from crag to crag of the mighty walls of mountains, in the midst of which these lakes lie embowered. It is entertaining beyond description to observe how these Irish people love their emerald turf and their glassy lakes. Our bugler, as we were returning, gave us the following for our diaries:

"I've seen Kate Kearney's daughter's daughter,
I've seen Killarney's beauteous water,
I've seen the Bull and Purple* too,
And tasted of the mountain dew."

Mountain dew, in this vernacular, is whisky. I repeated the stanza to learn it, but, much to the bugler's amazement, altered the last line, when I came to it, as follows:

"But tasted not the mountain dew."

From Killarney to Dublin it is one hundred and eighty-six miles by rail. We are running through these parts, and therefore my sketch is a running one. Spending Sunday in Dublin, I sought the church of my fathers, and found the Centenary Wesleyan Methodist chapel. It is a small church, capable of packing away in it, perhaps, five hundred people. The galleries are on the four sides, supported by pillars painted the inevitable emerald, and they frown, like great eyebrows, upon the pews below. Pulpit and reading desk are of mahogany, the pulpit towering high above the desk, as though the preaching were intended for the galleries, and the prayers alone for "the lower floor." The order, litanies and prayers of the Church of England were scrupulously observed in the morning service. The form was well sustained by both preacher and people, but it was tedious. In America we are perhaps lacking in form. I have been pained to see both the opening and closing exercises of our public worship slighted. But I have given it up as vain to hope, in the present state of society, for a perfect, happy combination of the æsthetic in form and the spiritual in devotion; and better far, the wildest living growth than crystalized death.

How does your pastoral visiting come on, my dear stewards?

W. V. Tudor.

RANDOLPH MACON COLLEGE.

The recent commencement of this institution indicates growing prosperity. We notice with pleasure that the board have elected Mr. James Harrison, son of Mr. J. P. Harrison, of this city, professor of modern languages. Mr. Harrison is a graduate of the University of Virginia, and has spent several years in Europe perfecting himself, especially in the modern languages. The following is from the Richmond Advocate:

The whole number of students in attendance this session was one hundred and forty-two. We began at Ashland, three years ago, with forty. Is not this a gratifying increase? Next session there ought to be above two hundred students; and there will be if all the friends of the college will go to work in earnest.

The board elected a new professor of modern languages in place of Prof. Valentine, who resigned. The new professor is Mr. James Harrison, of New Orleans, an A. M. graduate of the University of Virginia, and for several years a student at the University of Munich. He comes with the best testimonials of fitness from distinguished scholars, such as Prof. Peters and Prof. Gildersleeve, of the University of Virginia.

THE PROTESTANT PRESS AND POPERY.

A contributor of the Methodist from Baltimore gives the sum of what the Pope has done, as stated by Prof. Burg, of St. James College, at the jubilee in Baltimore:

But to what the Pope has done—to the events which shine as stars in his tiara, for which drums beat, bells ring, cannon roar, gleaming lights flash up and down, and myriad voices rend the air with shouts. The professor says:

"There are six points in which the present Pope has benefited the Roman Catholic Church:

"1. Proclaiming the dogma of the immaculate conception of Mary.

"2. The canonizing of the twenty-seven Japanese martyrs.

"3. Establishing thirty bishoprics in the United States, and over two hundred and thirty in the world.

"4. The convocation of the nineteenth General Council of the Church, and proclaiming the dogma of infallibility.

"5. Announcing St. Joseph as the chief protector of the church.

"6. Conferring the title of doctor in the church on St. Alphonsus, whose sons have been so zealous for the advancement of the spiritual welfare of the Germans in the United States."

There's a life for you! It has a "point" every four years and two months. How ordinary lives dim, pale, shrink! And then such "points!" Let us rejoice that the Japanese martyrs at last had the justice done them which the predecessors of Pio Nono, though infallible, neglected or refused. Joseph is no longer ignored. Peal your bells; pile on resin; high heap your shavings; stint not the consumption of gas; Joseph has at last been declared protector of the church! As I walked the streets of Baltimore I was struck by the decorations and illuminations of the lager beer saloons. Piety was enthroned among casks, spigots and flagons. Over "Try our Five-Cent Beer" hung the sacred keys, the cross and tiara. Sanctity was odorous with malt, and gurgling faucets made novel accompaniment to papal glorification. I had read of "holiness on the bells of horses," but never conceived of the liquor business being thus consecrated. All Baltimore lager ran for several days under holy auspices. But the wonder is solved. Pio Nono made a "point" of doing the fair thing by [illegible] Alphonsus, and many a pint w[illegible] offered as a libation of thanksgiving.

As to the Ecumenical Council, Joseph, and infallibility, I am somewhat puzzled. Things are confused. The dogma is followed by trouble in France; the son of the church, remembering that Joseph has been declared protector, removes his bayonets; the Italian King marches his troops into Rome, and assumes one of the Pope's two swords, assuring his holiness that the other is of excellent stuff if it will only keep its temper; Austria snubs the aged pontiff; a Protestant Kaiser consolidates all Germany into a great Protestant empire; the son of an excommunicated king assumes the sceptre of Ferdinand and Isabella: atheism riots in Paris; Brussels despises the jubilee; all Belgium laughs it to scorn; Protestant churches are open in Rome; papal San Domingo asks the United States to grant her admission into the republic of the starry flag; Mexico is open to evangelical labor, and all this time where is Joseph, the protector of the church? Is it not ungrateful to wait in supine blessedness while the church, which has just honored and recognized him, is cruelly wasted—its pontiff imprisoned within the environs of Rome, and reduced to the beggarly allowance of six hundred thousand a year, and the voluntary offerings of his loving people, and is compelled on such a pittance to sustain his bachelor establishment? Where is Joseph? Might not the thought have crossed the mind of Prof. Burg that possibly the Pope had fared as well if he made the Lord of Hosts his tower, the God of Jacob his refuge?

The Christian Union speaks of the jubilee with reference to the old tradition and prophecy so signally overturned by the unaccountable longevity of Pius the Ninth:

It is rather odd that all the Roman Catholic presses and pulpits should be so filled with jubilation and triumph over an occurrence that falsifies one of the myriad traditions which that church presents to the acceptance of the faithful, with a demand hardly short of that urged in behalf of the holy Scriptures. It has always been understood as a prophecy, applicable to each Pope in his turn, that he "should not see the years of Peter." The Church of Rome is never at a loss for a tradition to cover a given case, or to accomplish a required purpose. They say that the predecessor of Pius the Ninth, coming to him when he was a soldier in the Noble Guards, exhorted him to become a priest, prophesied the cessation of the epileptic attacks to which he was subject, and assured him of the great future that was before him: They say, too, that St. Peter lived in Rome, that he was the first Pope, and that he reigned just twenty-five years. They have said till now that no Pope would ever occupy the chair as long as St. Peter did. What there is to render any one of these traditions more reliable than any other it is difficult to see; and yet the remark would pass with the true Catholic for neither more nor less than a piece of Protestant irreverence.

It is natural, then, and proper for Roman Catholics to exult on this great anniversary in the life of their head, and as fellow-mortals "having a good time" they are welcome to our sympathy. Let them make the most of their jubilee, for there are mutterings in the horizon. The ecclesiastical court that sets itself against the freedom of conscience and above the earthly "powers that be," is condemned of God and man, and whatever may become of the Catholic Church, the papacy is doomed.

His infallible and most unfortunate holiness Pope Pius publishes an encyclical letter on the occasion of his jubilee, in which he recounts the events of his pontificate, and makes devout mention of the fact that he alone of all the bishops of Rome has equaled the years of Peter. Among the great successes of his pontificate he specifies the proclamation "of the dogma of the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mother of God," and the rendering of "honors to several heroes of our religion." He speaks of the syllabus as if its force were everywhere recognized. "By the help and for the glory of God," he says, "we have been able to pronounce a solemn condemnation upon errors that are as contrary to human reason as they are to the divine order of things—errors which have acquired great power in our time. It was by divine assistance still that we have taken care to associate by the bond of concord the ecclesiastical power and the civil power in Europe and in America." As a strange commentary on this last sentence read the following affectionate mention of Victor Emanuel:

"But the temporal cupidity of a neighboring potentate led him to the possession of countries under our sway. He [illegible] preferred the counsels [illegible] doomed to perdition—to our reproaches, admonitions and paternal words; and, surpassing by far the insolence of that prodigal child whom the gospel speaks of, he has attacked by force this city, which belongs to us, and which he claims and now retains in his power, against all justice, as a property which is none of his. We cannot help being moved at this criminal usurpation."

It would seem that the "bond of concord" aforesaid had been slightly strained in this transaction.

The Western Christian Advocate gives the following items about the jubilee in Cincinnati:

Last Sunday was a high-day for the Roman Catholics of our city. They turned out en masse to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the pontificate of Pope Pius the Ninth. The display of bunting, paper, ribbons and feathers was tremendous. The procession was near three hours passing a given point. As a demonstration it was a success; but as a religious celebration it was the grandest farce our city ever witnessed. The crowd, shouting hosannas to the Pope, was made up of every variety of material. The billiard saloons, beer gardens, gambling houses and all the dark dens of the city turned out their motley groups to add to the display.

The symbols were singular. Among them was a fishing boat on wheels, representing Peter and the other disciples as fishermen. We could understand the boat, the nets and the fishing tackle generally, but the beer keg within the boat we could not understand. On this point we shall be obliged to ask the Catholic Telegraph to explain. For our part, we do not believe Peter took a beer keg with him when he went a fishing in his boat; but there is no mistake about the beer on wheels containing one, for a neighbor of ours saw it. What was it designed to represent? Will the Telegraph tell us?

The music of the occasion was as singular as the symbols. The children in the wagons, trained, of course, in Romanist Sunday schools, sang, "Walking Down Broadway," "Hang Jeff. Davis on a Sour Apple Tree," "Captain Jinks," "Shoo Fly," etc. The brass bands bellowed out airs of equal solemnity.

The most striking feature of the procession was a lot of fellows painted red, and dressed in fantastic style to represent Indians. They did it pretty well, reeling to and fro on their horses, and performing numerous antics for the amusement of the crowd. But what it meant was the mystery. After looking the display, a gentleman who makes no pretension to piety remarked that he would now adopt the Darwin theory, for it was evident that men were only a slight improvement on monkeys.

The marshals were deeply interested, and moved their companies with zeal. Some of them were seen in drinking houses, displaying their badges and sashes over their intoxicating beverages, and making the vile places disgusting with their horrid profanity while preparing for the march. As an exhibition of fanaticism the whole thing was unequaled. That such things can be done in the nineteenth century, in the name of religion, is a mystery of mysteries. We lack space for further comment, but must say that for a combination of all the elements of hypocrisy, blasphemy and fanatical devotion to a foreign despot, the like was never seen before in this land of freedom and law, on the holy Sabbath day.

That encyclical letter noticed already closes with a promise of absolution. The St. Louis Christian Advocate comments and quotes:

The lowest point of the barometrical pressure is now not over recondite dogmas, but over the universally sensitive point of political rights, and there the weather is very threatening. The Popo uses his spiritual thundor as Jupiter did his fulminations, for all purposes of papal interests. He has just issued an encyclical letter, at the close of which we find the following act of grace:

"Desiring to watch over the spiritual welfare of the faithful, we grant, in the Lord, by these presents, that all Christians of both sexes, in whatever diocese they may be, who have made confession, entered into the holy communion, and have addressed to God pious prayers for the concord of Christian princes, the extirpation of heresy and the exaltation of our holy mother church, should obtain absolution of all their sins."

Here the Pope, in his own right, actually pardons all the sins of men who do certain things never before required to be done, and without regard to the old spiritual requirement for salvation. The terms of salvation, in fact, are altered for the present occasion. It is perfectly astounding that Protestants can yet look kindly on this strange religion and overlook its true nature.

In reference to another matter—the exemption of Romish priests from the civil law—the same paper gives a suggestive paragraph from a leading Catholic organ. The Advocate says:

In the middle ages the persons of priests were sacred. The profane hands of the civil law dared not touch the consecrated clergy. They were a superior order, amenable only to God—that is, to their superiors. Society did not enjoy that much. The public good did not prosper under it. It has always been considered an advance to get rid of it, and make priests obey the powers that be, like other folks. But the Tablet lets us know that Romanism would restore the old regime if it could. It says:

"If the church had her own way in this country, ecclesiastics would probably be answerable for civil as for ecclesiastical offenses, only in the ecclesiastical courts, or be answerable in the civil courts only by the consent of the supreme ecclesiastical authority, not likely to be given till the offenders are first degraded from their ecclesiastical state. In a Christian State the clergy should be free and independent in face of the State; yet as the church enjoins on all her children obedience to the civil law, when not repugnant to the divine law, she cannot suffer her clergy to violate it with impunity. But to preserve their freedom and independence in the discharge of their ministry, she insists that they should be tried only in her own courts. This does not withdraw them from the law, nor raise them above it, but simply withdraws them from the jurisdiction of the civil tribunals, and subjects them solely to the ecclesiastical law."

We are glad that "the church does not have its own way," if that is what it would do. The Jewish priests never had any such exemption. The apostles never claimed it, and we wonder what right the Romish clergy have to be regarded as a class superior to the law? Something will come out of all this talk one of these days.

THE METHODIST has come out in its promised new dress, and enlarged by the addition of eight columns. It is one of the largest and best religious newspapers now issued. Its views on Southern affairs are somewhat cloudy, and Southern Methodism gets something harder than a love-tap occasionally, but we like the paper, and read it, despite its shortcomings.

L. D. DAMERON has resigned his position as president of the Southwestern Book and Publishing Company of St. Louis. The St. Louis Advocate of the twentieth ultimo makes the following mention of the retiring president:

"L. D. Dameron, the former president of the Southwestern Book and Publishing Company, has resigned his office, and Levin H. Baker, formerly vice president, has been elected president of the company, and John Hogan as vice president. All business communications with the House or the Advocate should be addressed hereafter to the Southwestern Book and Publishing Company, 510 and 512 Washington avenue, St. Louis, Missouri. In accepting the resignation of the retiring president the board expressed its satisfaction with his administration, and their confidence and esteem for him as an honest and honorable man. As business manager for the Advocate our intercourse with him has been uniformly harmonious and most agreeable, inspiring admiration for his business skill and confidence in his integrity of character. The recollection of the pleasant relations sustained to him in the past will be fondly cherished. The incoming officers are widely and favorably known as eminent citizens and leading members of our church. Their names will justify the continued confidence and favor of the public in the administration of the company."

THE NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

The July number of the New Monthly Magazine begins the second volume, handsomely embellished. Of a high moral tone, of superior literary character, and edited with marked ability, this magazine deserves to be supported not only by the Methodist Episcopal Church South, under whose auspices it is published, but by the South generally. If it be properly sustained the subscription list must be very largely increased at once. The price for the second volume, commencing with the July and closing with the December number, is only one dollar and fifty cents. We most earnestly solicit our friends everywhere, who desire the success of this enterprise, to subscribe for it themselves, and prevail on others to do so. Back numbers from the first of January to first of July can be supplied. Address A. H. REDFORD, Agent.

ANOTHER HOMICIDE.—At eleven o'clock on Thursday morning Mr. Samuel Rainey, the general bookkeeper of the New Orleans National Bank, while at his desk in that institution, was shot through the right side by Mr. William Boyd, and almost instantly killed. The missile which inflicted the fatal wound was fired through the glass partition of the desk, while another shot was lodged in the wall near the ceiling. Mr. Wheless, the president of the bank, was in his office at the time, and, rushing out, saw three men standing in the passage opposite the desk, and on the outside of the partition. One, who he thinks is Mr. Pasteur, was standing behind the others, apparently endeavoring to prevent the party in front from firing. After the second shot all three walked out, and William Boyd was arrested on Camp street, nearly opposite the bank, by the officer of the beat. He had a Smith & Wesson pistol in his hand.—Times.

Obituaries.

MRS. ELIZA S. SEGREST, late consort of Rev. Samuel Segrest, of Macon county, Alabama, died on the ninth of June, after a short illness, aged sixty years.

She joined the Methodist Church, in South Carolina, at fifteen years of age, and lived a consistent member of the same for forty-five years. Her Christian life, though quiet and retired, was nevertheless straightforward and determined. She loved the church and people of God. For the last ten years of her life, because of affliction, she was deprived of the privilege of attending the ordinances of God's house; but she delighted in the company of Christian friends, and the servants of God were ever welcome at her house. Long and well did she bear the cross, and in dying left to her kindred and friends the inestimable example of faith and good works. Her private walk contributed much toward bringing into the church a large family of children.

How great the loss of such a wife and mother! No wonder the aged husband and full-grown sons and daughters wept as little children around her closing grave. But she has gone only a little before. Soon those weeping ones will doubtless be united with her, together with all who love the Lord Jesus, in the land where parting is no more. L. T. D.

MY brother, JAMES L. JONES, was born in York district, South Carolina, December 10, 1826; came to Alabama in 1835; married Miss Elizabeth Dickinson, of Jefferson county, in 1853, and died at Springville, Sinclair county, April 25, 1871, aged forty-four years, two months and fifteen days.

Having professed faith in Christ, he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1861, and lived the life of a Christian from that time until the day of his death. Being unassuming and rather retiring in his nature and temperament, he made no display of his religion either before the church or the world, but quietly walked through life, and so lived and acted among men as to gain the esteem and confidence of all who knew him. In his death the church lost a worthy member, the ministers of Christ a faithful friend, the Masonic fraternity a valuable workman, and the community one of its most useful and influential citizens. As to his family, I suppose a more devoted husband or father never lived or died. Two lovely babes, having passed away from earth some years ago, awaited his arrival in heaven. A bereaved widow, three daughters, an aged father and mother, six brothers and five sisters remain to mourn his loss; but we sorrow not as those who have no hope. He died in the faith of the gospel and in the hope of a blissful immortality.

Though we will see him no more on earth, yet we confidently expect to meet him in heaven, where there will be no more death forever. He bore his sufferings, though long and severe, without a murmur. When death came he felt no alarm. A few hours before he died he said to me: "If it is God's will, I am ready and willing to go." When the last struggle came he said to the physician: "All I want is to pass away as easily as possible." His was the first death in my father's family for thirty years. A. M. JONES.

MRS. MARY P. MCARTHUR is no more among us. She died suddenly, of disease of the heart, at her residence in Wilcox county, Alabama, May 18, 1871. The daughter of Abel Davis, she was born in Charleston district, South Carolina, January 12, 1803, and removed with her parents to Wilcox county, Alabama, in 1818, where she married Peter McArthur in 1826. Her only child, Mrs. J. A. C. Horn, with ten children, survives her.

She united with the Methodists in 1825, from which time until her death she was a Methodist of the truest and noblest type. She never departed from the standards of Methodism, and never abandoned its peculiarities. She was sure to be in her place and discharge what she understood to be her duty. She was a pillar in the house of her God. I have known her intimately for thirteen years, and loved her as I have loved few members of my charge. It was under circumstances calculated to endear us to each other that I first met her. I spent the third night on my second circuit beneath her hospitable roof under sad circumstances. Her husband lay a corpse, having died that day, suddenly and unexpectedly, of neuralgia. It was January 1, 1858. Of all the women I have known, she came nearest the apostle's injunctions to be in behavior as becometh holiness; a teacher of good things; sober, discreet, chaste, a keeper-at-home, and to study to be quiet and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands. She has left an example worthy of imitation in many, very many respects. In godly simplicity, in retiring modesty, in unswerving steadfastness, in love for her church, in punctuality, in industry, in proper devotion to her household and kindred, she was a model Christian woman. She lived well, and we may say—though she was called away suddenly, and died alone, being found in her bed, the life apparently just gone—that she died well. Only a few days before she fell on sleep she said: "I have no fears for death, nor after." O blessed testimony! There is no spectacle more sublime than that of a Christian standing upon the confines which separate this and the world to come, and proclaiming: "I have no fears for death, nor after!"

The large concourse that assembled at her funeral attested the high esteem in which she was held by her neighbors and associates in the church. She sleeps beside her husband, whom she loved so well in life and mourned so sorely in death; and they shall awake together when the trump of God shall awake the nations of the dead to receive their doom. The Friends and Admirers of the famous ARGYLE BITTERS, after long years of continued use, with life prolonged, bodily vigor and elasticity maintained, and the bloom of health upon their happy faces, can and will testify to their pre-eminent virtues over all others for the cure of Dyspepsia, the hydra-headed monster; Bilious Disorders; Nervous Derangements; Depression of Spirits; Mental Anxiety; Engorged Spleen; Visceral Congestion; Catamenial Derangement, and most of the diseases of women and children. They are anti periodic and anti-bilious; they cure Flatulence and Constipation without the disgust and loathing for medicines usually attendant upon medication and sickness.

No family should be without them; and we would respectfully caution the people generally against buying other and cheaper bitters, because of their availability as a commercial article in the hands of merchants, who realize a larger profit in buying inferior bitters on account of their cheapness.

Ask for the ARGYLE, and take no other; the base of which is pure Jamaica rum, full-proof whisky, with true Calisaya Bark as one of their ingredients, neither of which, we guarantee, is used in any of the bitters that flood the market.

The ARGYLE is a standard preparation, has never been adulterated in the hands of the manufacturers, and is always pleasant and healthful. Jn6 1m

But besides its wonderful tonic properties as a remedy in general debility, anæmia and diseases peculiar to females, it is unsurpassed in the treatment of the various forms of Dyspepsia, and particularly for those suffering from torpid and inactive liver. Its action upon the liver as well as kidneys being prompt and decided. Very many remarkable cures could be cited of this class of troublesome diseases.

RAWLEY is now easy of access, situated only twelve miles from Harrisonburg, the present terminus of the Orange, Alexandria and Manassas Gap Railroad, from which point there will be two daily lines of Stages, morning and evening.

Since last summer the buildings have been greatly improved, as well as the road from Harrisonburg to the Springs.

The Child's Corner.

THE DAYLIGHT AND THE SUNSHINE.

The Daylight complained to the Sunshine, one day,
About an old rock which they chanced to survey.

"I am not severe," said the Daylight, "and never Find fault just to make people think I am clever;
Nor can I be charged with a wish to defame
Any neighbor of mine, nor to blacken his name;
And yet I must say that for years and for years,
This rugged old rock which before us appears,
I have known and have watched in the hope —sh, how vain!—
That its features a lovelier aspect would gain;
But the barren old rock still a rock doth remain."

The Sunshine looked up, but no answer she spoke;
Then she peeped round the edge of her cousin's gray cloak,
And soon, by the bright, winning smile of her eye,
She met a soft glance from a violet, so shy.
That, by dint of hard living, and being but thin,
To a small, narrow crevice had squeezed itself in.
It fluttered with joy at the warmth o'er it cast,
And the gladness it felt was unselfishly passed
To a tuft of dry grass that was drooping behind,
And had long for a look of encouragement pined.

And then the bright sunbeam her charms threw across
The red and gray cups of some lichen and moss
That had crept into corners; but now, at the least,
They thought they were wine-cups set out for a feast.

Weeks glided away; and one beautiful morning
The Daylight came past the same spot at her dawning,
And she said to the Sunshine, with critical air:
"That barren old rock, I suppose, is still there;
How foolishly sanguine about it you were!"

The Sunshine was silent, and Daylight's gray eyes
Awoke to the fact, in unquestioned surprise,
That the fair grassy knoll, with its flowers full in view—
Tiny rock-plants, all freshly baptized with the dew—
And its rich-tinted mosses of delicate fold.
Was the very same rock he had slighted of old!

"O Sunshine!" he cried, "you are right; I believe it;
One way to make beauty is just to perceive it!"
Then an angel sang softly: "Sweet triumph love wins,
For she veils from our sight such a number of sins."

And the rock and its treasures replied in full chorus,
(Though the words, I don't think, were exactly like ours,)
"And under the exquisite veil love spreads o'er us, Spring up, as by magic, God's own precious flowers."

STORY OF THE WAR IN FRANCE.

IN WORDS OF ONE SYLLABLE.

In the land of France, which is a long way off from us, a great war has now gone on for five months. Do you wish to know why this war broke out, who made it, and what it all means? If you do, then read what is to come. But first let me tell you what the land is in which this sad war is fought.

France is a land which was once full of sun and joy, and its sons were proud of it. Eight months in each year it was bright with the rich hues of grapes, some of which were red and some white; and from these grapes fine wines were made for all the world to drink.

You all knew of France, too, as a place from which came the toys and dolls which were so queer and so nice, for some of them spoke words, and could roll their eyes, and go to sleep; and some could jump out of a box, and fall flat when you put the lid of the box down on top of them. But you can have no more of these till this war ends. There is no one now who knows how to make them. All of the men who knew how to do it are in the war.

This land of France, once so gay, would have been gay now if a bad King had not borne rule there. This King, who did not know what it was to be a good man, one day said he would make war with the King who was on a throne in the land of the Rhine, and he did so. Now, the King of the land of the Rhine had done no harm to the King of France, but when he heard that this man meant to make war with him, he said to his friends: "I will fight to the end if he comes here." So the war was sure to come, and come it did.

The King of France sent up to the land of the Rhine his men in arms, and his great guns and shot and shell, and long trains which had bread and food of all kinds on board, and told his men to slay and kill as much as they could. He went forth at the head of these men, and he and they meant to stay till they had got all they could hope to get on the Rhine, and out of those whose homes were there.

But bad men's plans once in a while go wrong in this world. When the French King came to a place where he could see the Rhine, he found a great force of men and of guns in his way, so that he could not go on as he meant to do. There was then but one thing for him to do. He had to fight, and fight he did. But the Rhine King was both too strong and too quick to be put down by his foe. So the great fight went on all day, and the next day, and the next, and each night the men who had fought all day lay down to rest on the fields that were wet with blood. At last the French King was caught, and all the men who were with him were caught too; and the King who had made this war was shut up in a safe place, where he could do no more harm. His son, whom they call a prince, and his wife, who is a queen, have gone to a land where there is no war, and where they will be safe; but they have no home now, and no throne to sit on, and you may know by this that they are sad.

But the war did not end when he at least could do no harm. Oh! no; for the more the King of the Rhine and his men fought the French the more they felt as if they would like to go, and on they went. One day, as they went on through France, they came to a stop at a great French fort, known as the fort of Metz, and said they would take that first. It cost much blood and a good deal of time to take it, but at last it fell. Then the men from the Rhine went on still through France, and fought the French all the way, and beat them. At last the King of the land of the Rhine sat down once more to take a strong place, and this time the place was the Great Town in which the bad King had made his own home. The Rhine men found it very hard to take this place, for it was so strong and great; but they still try to do it, and we shall not have to wait long to hear the news of what they mean to do.

All this time the French King ate and slept each day in the place where he had been left, while the Rhine King went to the bad King's house and made his own home there, and slept and ate his meals, and had a good time, for he was free; and the French King was not free. Great men, with stars on their breasts and swords by their sides, went to see him in his might, and all the world rang with this queer news.

And all this time, too, the Rhine King's men kept up their fight, and cut up the streets of towns with shells, and sent hot shot through the roofs of the houses, and went to take the towns of France in this rough way, till there was not a place in the land that was safe from them, and no one knew where they would go next.

Now this war is very bad for all those who are in it. It has hurt the land of France more than it has hurt the land of the Rhine, but you must not think that the Rhine King's land is now so rich and grand as it once was. You know that when war comes all things stop but the troops and the guns, and so it is now. The shops in both these fair lands are shut, and there are no men to work. Homes are sad, and there is no joy nor sport; for men lie dead, whose eyes can no more look at sweet faces, and whose ears can no more hear the dear tones of wife or child. No laugh is now heard in the good old homes, and no bread nor meat to eat for the tears that fall.

And this is not all, for bread is scarce in the Great Town where the bad King had his home, and the flesh of cats and dogs and rats and mice, or of the horse, is all that some have to eat. Men starve and die when there is no food for them.

A child should know what war means. It is as bad as it can be, you see. It means death and woe, no homes, and no bread to eat. You have heard all about the rest of the war—how the men in France killed each other, and a great many are now dead. When you read of war do not fail, dear child, to thank God that your home is in a land where there is no war, and where no shot from great guns can hurt those who love you, or stop you in your play. War is bad, but peace is good. Be sure you think of this when you hear your friends at home talk of the men who still kill or hurt their foes, far off on the shore of the great sea, in the land that was once the land of the sun.—Methodist.

When an Arab woman intends marrying again, after the death of her husband, she goes the night before the ceremony to pay a visit to his grave. There she kneels, and prays him not to be offended—not to be jealous. As, however, she feels he will be offended or jealous, the widow brings with her a donkey laden with two goats' skins with water. The prayer ended, she proceeds to pour the water upon the grave to keep the first husband cool under the irritating circumstances about the place, and, having well saturated him, she then departs.

The Farm and Garden.

THE FARM.

"Cotton and our prospects" require our most careful consideration. The crop of 1870, exceeding that of the previous one nearly a million of bales, and the consequent decline, with a vast quantity never gathered, demands thought. Those of us who know the character of the laborer, many, especially in the uplands, know that sixteen years ago with such labor we could not have made the crop. We naturally ask, How is it? Let us examine. First, a vast number of people have left the poor lands—have gone to Arkansas and in the bottoms where comparatively little labor makes more cotton. Secondly, fertilizers have done vast service to increase the crop. Thirdly, improved implements have aided much, but few are aware of the great increase that has taken place in the use of riding cultivators. Lastly, many of our white people have gone to work, and they cultivate twenty-five to thirty-five acres of cotton to the cultivator. Besides, the large mass of negro farmers, not working much, had cotton only. Let it be as it may, cotton was made, and prices fell below all expectation, and our duty is to prepare for a low figure. The "hill planters," as those are termed who plant upland, must not attempt to compete with the bottom—"swamp"—planters, for where they make ten bales and only get ten cents, calling a bale five hundred pounds, it is $500 per hand, the "hill planter," making only five, has to be content with only $250. What is to be done? We see no other principle to govern but to employ fewer hands. Sow land down to grass and small grain, provide a good stock, and supply the demand for pork, lard, beef, cows, corn, hay and grain, and a few bales made to buy groceries or to invest in home manufactures. The day has to come when the valley lands will be a cotton field, and look elsewhere for supplies mainly. Why not look at it as wise men, and prepare for the occasion? The facilities we have for manufactures will sooner or later draw capital here, and the demand for supplies must increase vastly. We can, in Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, etc., compete with the Northwest in the production of bacon and lard; where clover is fifteen inches high on the fifteenth of May no one will question the fact. Suppose we make only half the quantity of corn, and can grow clover and feed it all year; we need but little corn to make meat cheap. This year will convince thousands that grass can be grown, and they must certainly take courage and provide good stock and enough to consume the food prepared. The subscribers to our Farmer have sown more grass-seed since the first of last September than was sown in all the cotton belt since we first saw the Mississippi river, July 4, 1830. A farmer, who has the will of the old revolutionary heroes, can prepare and sow, in September, October and March, fifty acres in grass and small grain—say twenty-five of each. He can plow, plant and cultivate say twenty-five acres in corn. Having a Buckeye cultivator, a mower and reaper, a tedder and hay rake, with the aid of fifty to sixty days' work, he can gather his crop. What stock can he kept? With this five acres of cotton can he grown. In 1836 we spent the summer at watering places in Kentucky, and sojourned at Mr. Bright's, near Stanford, for a week or more. There we learned, with some seven workers, he made more clear money than we did, working seventeen grown men, with some women. We say change, and do it at once.—Southern Farmer.

The Boll Worm.—This insect is too well known in the South to call for any description. In some seasons it does serious damage to the cotton crop by cutting into and spoiling the boll; also to the corn crop, for the worm found working in the roasting ear is the same. It is most destructive to these two crops, though it does not confine itself exclusively to them, for we have found it in okra, tomatoes and even melons.

The parent of the boll worm, scientifically known as the Heliothis Armigera of Hubner, is a clayey-yellow moth or miller, with greenish tint, expanding a little over one inch from tip to tip. Near the middle of each wing is a very conspicuous dark spot. The insect does all its flying and all its mischief at night.

There is not much that can be advanced in the way of reliable remedies for boll worm. Mr. B. A. Sorsby, of Columbus, Georgia, who tried the vinegar and molasses remedy, some time back, gives in his experience as follows:

"We procured eighteen common-sized dinner plates, into each of which we put half a gill of vinegar and molasses, previously prepared in the proportion of four parts of the former to one of the latter. These plates were set on small stakes or poles driven into the ground in the cotton fields, one to about three acres, and reaching a little above the cotton plants, with a six-inch square board tacked on the top to receive the plate. These arrangements were made in the evening; the next morning we found from eighteen to thirty moths (of boll worm) in each plate. The experiment was continued for five or six days, and the plates distributed over the entire field, each day's success increasing; then the numbers grew smaller, until they were reduced to but two or three moths for each plate, when it was abandoned as being no longer worthy of the trouble. The crop that year was but very little injured by the boll worm. The flies (moths) were caught in their eagerness to feed upon the mixture, by alighting into it and being unable to escape."—Practical Planter.

Weeding Potatoes with Sheep.—It may not be known to farmers in general that it is a common practice in some of the potato-growing districts to turn flocks of sheep into the potato fields for the purpose of eating down the weeds. This pasturing with sheep is very advantageous when the crop is a late-planted one, so that the hoeing cannot be completed until the haying or harvesting is finished. At the growing season it is the planter's aim to keep down the grass and weeds, so that they may be covered with dirt by a cultivator and hoe, when these are used. Pasturing with sheep will attain this object. Early-planted crops, the cultivation of which is completed in the first half of the summer, frequently become grassy and weedy before time of digging, when the size of the tops precludes cultivation. In this stage sheep are economical weeders. It is hardly necessary to mention that the feed thus given to the sheep makes a double profit, inasmuch as it costs absolutely nothing, while labor is saved and weeds prevented from seeding.—Farm and Fireside.

How to Save Peach Trees.—Whitewash the stem with a good solution of lime, and dig around the roots of the trees and deposit some lime around the stem, and that will kill worms that are gnawing at the vitals of the trees. If it is quicklime it will be all the better. Hot soap suds are known to be good for peach trees, only they are rarely strong enough to do any good. Lye will do the business.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

Sponge Cake.—Three eggs, whites and yolks beaten separately, one and one-half cups of sugar, large half cup of cold water, two cups of flour, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, one-half teaspoonful of soda; flavor to taste. Stir the yolks, sugar and part of the water together, then add the whites, and dissolve the soda in the remainder of the water.

A New Way to Cook Meat.—A good way to cook meat is to seal it in a vessel hermetically tight. Cooked thus a long time in its own juices, it is rendered very tender, and has a peculiar, appetizing flavor. Take an earthen jar that will stand heat, with tight-fitting cover. If beef is to be the dish for dinner cut it in convenient pieces, lay them in the jar, rub each piece with salt and pepper and a little lump of sugar, and put in a little water; then lay on a piece of thick buttered paper, and press down the cover.

If you think it will allow any steam to escape mix short or rye meal with water to a paste; press strips of this all round the edge of cover. Bake in a moderate oven four or five hours, according to tenderness of meat. Chickens or turkeys are excellent cooked in this way. The toughest meat is rendered tender by this process; and none of the nutritious matter is wasted, as in many of the forms of cooking. Boston Journal of Chemistry.

Cleansing Blankets.—It is quite as important to have blankets on our beds clean as to have the sheets pure and white. The Boston Journal of Chemistry gives the following method of cleansing blankets:

"Put two large tablespoonfuls of borax and a pint bowl of soft soap into a tub of cold water. When dissolved put in a pair of blankets, and let them remain over night. Next day rub and drain them out, and rinse thoroughly in two waters, and hang them out to dry. Do not wring them."

But this is not the only domestic use to which borax may be put. Says the same Journal: "Borax is the best cockroach exterminator yet discovered. This troublesome insect has a peculiar aversion to it, and will never return where it has once been scattered. As the salt is perfectly harmless to human beings, it is much to be preferred for this purpose to the poisonous substances commonly used. For cleansing the hair nothing is better than a solution of borax water. Wash afterward with pure water, if it leaves the hair too stiff. Borax dissolved in water is also an excellent dentifrice or tooth-wash."—The Household.

Dolbear Commercial College

A CARD.

All who wish a cash-paying education for themselves or sons can obtain it in the shortest possible time, and with the least possible expense, at

DOLBEAR COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
Nos. 164 and 166 Canal St., New Orleans.

This College, founded in 1832, and chartered by the Legislature of Louisiana, has a full and able Faculty, and separate professors for each branch of study, so as to save the time and money of students, and fit them at once for business. They can take the Commercial Course, or the modern or ancient languages or mathematics, Book-keeping or Penmanship alone, or the whole course of the College. They have a Life Scholarship in all the departments they enter and never pay but once. Persons from twelve to sixty years of age attend.

N. B.—Of all our numerous graduates for the past thirty-nine years, not one is now out of profitable employment, so far as known. Those of last year are now receiving from $1,000 to $3,000 per annum. We have ample arrangements for board, from $25 to $30 a month. When Clubs of three or more enter at the same time ten per cent. deduction is made.

There are no vacations. Students can begin at any time. Those who begin soon will be able to fill good situations in the summer, when Merchants make their changes. Liberal deduction for sons of clergymen and crippled soldiers. For catalogues address my4 1y RUFUS DOLBEAR, President.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
VIRGINIA.

THIS INSTITUTION, located on the great railroad line from New Orleans to Baltimore, among the mountains of Virginia, is offering peculiar advantages to those who are seeking a thorough collegiate or business education. Two Hundred and Thirty Dollars will cover the expenses for an entire collegiate year of ten months, for Tuition, Board, Fuel, Room-rent, Washing and Contingent Fees. For the character of the school, please consult our own Alumni, or any of the Bishops or of the leading men of the Southern Methodist Church, or the Professors of the University of Virginia, who have authorized this reference. Our Fall Session begins AUGUST 17, 1871. If you desire a catalogue, write to E. E. WILEY, Prest.,
Je8 4in Emory P. O., Va.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

THE TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION of this school will begin on the First Monday in August, 1871. The entire expense for board and tuition, for forty weeks, will be $150. The board is of the best description that the country affords, being furnished by the steward from his own farm and prepared by the hands of his own family. We find boys from five different States last year, and not a word of complaint was ever made on this point, which is often the subject of just complaint at boarding schools. The fare is peculiarly grateful to Southern boys, who require a more generous diet when they change their climate.

The manner of governing the school is paternal, as the entire exemption from temptations in the surrounding country renders the discipline easy. The institution is under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but under my own control. The young men attending the school last year were, without exception, moral and religious. Young men preparing for the ministry may receive tuition free, and in certain cases can obtain lower rates of board. Regular services are held in the College Chapel.

The location of the school is near Madisonville, Monroe county, East Tennessee, in the midst of a fruitful and beautiful country, and surrounded by a thrifty and intelligent population. No negroes live in the neighborhood, all the laborers in the fields and servants in the families being white. The citizens of Monroe county were true to the South in her late struggle, and have adhered to Southern churches.

Students arriving by the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad will get off at Sweetwater, forty miles south of Knoxville, whence they will find conveyance to the college, seven miles distant.

Our post office is Madisonville, Tennessee.
F. M. GRACE, President.

P. S.—1. Families from the South will find good board in the neighborhood, and a delightful summer retreat at White Cliff Springs, sixteen miles distant from Madisonville. For information on this point parties may address D. A. McKenzie, steward of the college. The health of the country is proverbial.

P. S.—2. Younger boys may be safely sent to this school, as all are under the immediate oversight of the principal, both when in school and when at the boarding house.

MEDICAL.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR,
A Purely Vegetable Compound
FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF
RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Hawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

INSOLATION OR SUNSTROKE.

As the time when attacks of sunstroke are most frequent is now approaching, it seems desirable to correct certain misapprehensions on the part of the public concerning the causes of this dangerous affection. It is commonly supposed that attacks occur only during exposure to the direct rays of the sun. But this is not so. The causes of sunstroke are classified by medical authorities as predisposing and exciting causes, and of the latter, exposure to the heat of the sun is undoubtedly the most frequent; but the circumstance that attacks are common in sheltered situations, and sometimes actually come on in the night time, shows that the direct action of sunshine is not alone responsible. Any vitiated condition of the system, arising either from living in a foul atmosphere or from dissipation, great fatigue, a lack of nourishing food, garments worn so tightly around the neck and chest that they restrain the free action of the parts, are all powerful predisposing causes, which, combined with exposure to great heat, are liable at any time to induce an attack.

The influence of great fatigue in predisposing to an attack can hardly be overrated. The experience of the British army in India is conclusive on this point. In the case of a particular body of troops obliged to make a hurried march of upward of eleven hundred miles during the hottest season of the year, all stood it well until some three-quarters of the distance had been passed, when the men began to exhibit unmistakable signs of fatigue in the shape of langnor, loss of flesh and failing strength. It was at this time that cases of sunstroke first appeared, and they continued with alarming frequency, coming on in the night, as well as in the daytime, during the remainder of the march. Testimony from the same quarter concerning the bad effects of overcrowding and insufficient ventilation is equally explicit. It is remarked by Dr. Butler that the men under his charge who, though not overworked or fatigued, were housed in crowded and badly ventilated barracks, were the ones who furnished the greatest number of serious cases. Out of sixteen cases mentioned by Mr. Longmore as occurring in a company belonging to his regiment, thirteen were attacked in barrack or in hospital.

Insolation has also been frequently observed on board ship, most often where overcrowding and impure air were added to the influence of excessive heat. It is not uncommon on board the mail steamers in the Red sea during the months of August and September, and it has been observed that most of the cases occurred while the sufferers were in the horizontal position in their ill ventilated cabins. The symptoms preceding an attack are in some cases scarcely observable, the person suddenly falling in a fatal syncope, and dying before assistance can be of any avail. More frequently, however, they are well marked, and if early recognized much may be done even by the non-medical to avert the serious consequences that might otherwise ensue. The more obvious symptoms are extreme heat and dryness of skin, often accompanied by a peculiar stinging sensation over the whole surface of the body, giddiness, congestion of the eyes, a sense of oppression about the chest, and a frequent desire to micturate. Contrary to the general opinion, headache is not a common symptom, though occasionally present. After a longer or shorter continuance of these symptoms the patient becomes insensible, the heat and dryness of skin increase, the respirations become hurried and labored, and unless remedial measures are speedily applied death soon follows.

At the earliest moment after the attack, let the patient be carried to some cool shade where there is free circulation of air, his body stripped, and his face, neck and chest freely douched with cold water. Continue this until the more serious symptoms, such as absence of consciousness, disturbed breathing, and great heat of skin, are relieved, or until the arrival of some competent physician, who on the discovery of the trouble should at once be called. Cold water may be freely given, inside as well as out, if the patient demands it. The causes of sunstroke previously enumerated will suggest the means to be adopted for its prevention.—The Galaxy.

USAGE has so associated cigars with boxes of a certain kind of cedar-wood, that they would hardly sell in anything else; and now German art comes in play to supply a stained wood which cannot be distinguished from the original. What a waste of genius for an ideal

THERE is no use of money equal to that of beneficence; here the enjoyment grows on reflection, and our money is most truly ours when it ceases to be in our possession.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market continues extremely dull, and nearly every branch of trade participates in the prevailing apathy. The receipts of sugar and molasses have been trifling, and met a steady demand at about previous rates. Flour has continued dull, but without any further decline. Corn has been in good request at steady prices. Oats has ruled in favor of buyers, and bacon has hardly maintained its previous position.

The accounts from the country are various. In some localities the prospect is decidedly encouraging, but in many, if not most others, the reverse. Where the grass has been cleaned out the plant has been found weak and yellowish. A good deal, moreover, has perished, and the fields look thin and unpromising. Upon the whole, there appears to be a pretty general disappointment with regard to the anticipated recovery on the change in the weather.

The river is 8 feet 7 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the seventh instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales	3,622
Mobile		128
Florida		8
Texas		469
Total		4,227

On Saturday, under the influence of favorable dispatches from Liverpool and New York, the movement was animated throughout the day, and the sales summed up 2,600 bales at stiffer prices for ordinary and good ordinary, which closed ⅛c. dearer, but without any variation in other grades. On Monday buyers again came forward with a fair degree of spirit, and took 2,400 bales at full prices for all descriptions, but especially for the medium and lower grades. On Tuesday, under the conflicting influences of a decline of ⅛c. at New York and increased buoyancy at Liverpool, the market exhibited less animation, and the sales did not exceed 1,400 bales, while nothing transpired to indicate any quotable change in prices. There was more inquiry for low middling, which was consequently firmer. There was also some demand for the lower grades at concessions which factors would not admit.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 6,400 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,418,797 bales, against 1,133,655 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,080,648 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 892,405 bales to Great Britain, 301,872 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 215,677 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	14¼ to 15¼
Good ordinary	16¾ to 17¼
Low middling	18¼ to 18¾
Middling	20¼ to 20¾
Strict middling	21 to

ROBERT J. HARP,
NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,
AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF
GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S
PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in the most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. George Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention up what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS.

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our Instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our Workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having sound chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $[illegible], will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All Instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, July 12.—The Orange procession formed between two regiments and four hundred police. There were only about two hundred in line, with two banners—one the Stars and Stripes, the other William of Orange on horseback. After waiting some time for a band, and the soldiers to load with ball, the procession started. The procession was assailed three times up to the last advices.

At the corner of Twenty-third and Eighth avenue the troops were ordered to fire. About a dozen were killed and wounded. One policeman was shot dead. Colonel James Fisk, Jr., was wounded, and one man in the ninth regiment mortally.

4.45 P. M.—A dispatch from the operator at the Fifth Avenue Hotel says about three P. M., as the troops were passing down Fifth avenue, when between Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth streets, the mob fired three shots at them. The military returned the fire, killing eight and wounding three. Two boys and a lady were shot. Sixteen citizens in all were killed on the avenue; three soldiers were also killed.

Three hundred Orangemen passed here about half an hour ago, through Twenty-third street.

New York, July 12.—The mob attacked Harpers' building, but were repulsed. In the fight two soldiers were killed. There were several other fights, but no details are obtainable.

Governor Randolph, of New Jersey, stops ferryboats in the stream until satisfied of the character of the passengers.

The mob attacked the Fenian armory for the purpose of obtaining arms, but were driven off.

New York, July 12.—The line of the Orange procession was guarded by a part of the ninth and a detachment of the sixth regiments. Shortly after the procession started shootings were heard from the side streets; the excitement increased, and missiles were flung from some windows into the procession.

The officers of the National Guard ordered the men to fire; this they did, and about fifteen persons were killed and twenty wounded. This occurred in Eighth avenue. The utmost excitement over the affair still prevails. Lieutenant Page, of the ninth (Fisk's) regiment, is reported mortally wounded.

Captain Spencer, of the ninth regiment, was killed by his own men, in Twenty-sixth street, between Fourth and Eighth avenues. He had given an order to fall back, when he became mixed in the crowd, and was killed by a volley fired into the rioters.

A number of officers of the ninth regiment are wounded. One man was killed and several wounded. Thirty or forty rioters are killed or wounded.

8 P. M.—The fight at Twenty-fourth street and Eighth avenue was severer than at first reported. Over one hundred and fifty of the mob are believed to have been killed and wounded. Among the troops known to be killed, besides those already reported, are a captain of the eighty-fourth and two privates, and a sergeant of the ninth.

Five regiments are resting on their arms near Cooper Institute.

10 P. M.—About forty persons were killed during the riot to-day. The total number of wounded is unknown, but fifteen are known to be mortally hurt.

At the sixteenth precinct there were sixteen dead bodies this evening. They were removed to the Morgue. At the nineteenth precinct there were four dead bodies. At the Morgue there are at present forty bodies.

The following proclamation has been issued by Governor Hoffman:

A Proclamation.—Having been duly this day apprised, while at the capitol, of the actual condition of things here with reference to the proposed procession to-morrow, and having, in the belief that my presence was needed, repaired hither immediately, I do make this proclamation:

The order heretofore issued by the police authorities, in reference to the said procession, having been duly revoked, I hereby give notice that any and all bodies of men desiring to assemble and march in peaceable procession in this city to-morrow, the twelfth instant, will be permitted to do so. They will be protected to the fullest extent possible by the military and police authorities. A military and police escort will be furnished to any body of men desiring it, on application to me at my headquarters, which will be at the police headquarters in this city, at any time during the day. I warn all persons to abstain from interference with any such assemblage or procession, except by authority from me, and I give notice that all the powers at my command, civil and military, will be used to preserve the public peace, and to put down, at all hazards, every attempt at disturbance; and I call upon all citizens, of every race and religion, to unite with me and the local authorities in this determination to preserve the peace and honor of the city and State.

John T. Hoffman, Governor.

Albany, N. Y., July 12.—The news of the riots in New York caused great excitement here. Orders were received by the arsenal keeper to close the arsenal and guard it, which was done, though there was no appearance of disorder here.

Jersey City, July 12.—The Orange procession consisted of one hundred and fifty, guarded by the troops and police. The ferryboats were held in the river until the character of the passengers was ascertained.

New York, July 14.—Deaths from the riot now number fifty-six. More of the wounded will die. The regiments are still quarreling over the question as to which fired uselessly.

There is no question of the excellent behavior of the police. Their conduct is usually praised.

Chicago, July 14.—A terrible hurricane passed over St. Joseph, Missouri, to-day, by which four or five persons were killed by lightning and falling trees. Many were also hurt. Loss, $200,000.

The slaughter of fifty-six Apache Indians, near Souto creek, Arizona, is confirmed.

Boston, July 14.—The recent election on the question of selling malt liquor resulted as follows: No, 305 towns; Yes, 30 towns; unheard from, 5.

Washington, July 14.—No more applications for soldiers' discharges will be entertained, as the army is now reduced to thirty thousand men.

The President remains at Long Branch till the fifteenth of August, when he goes to California. He is not coming to Washington unless urgency requires.

The Ku-Klux Committee examined Treasurer Angier, of Georgia, and Mayor Anderson, of Savannah. Their testimony fully sustains the deplorable financial condition and bad management. The evidence fully sustained the current statements of venality and incompetency of the persons in power in respective States.

The cotton crop official report gives the following: The July returns do not materially change the cotton crop prospect reported in June. Severe rain storms have continued to obstruct cultivation and check the growth in States upon the Gulf coast. The States of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida average lower in condition than at the date of the last report. The Georgia and Texas averages remain unchanged, and improvement is indicated in the Carolinas, Tennessee and Arkansas.

The per centage in each State, as compared with the July statement of last year, is as follows:

North Carolina—July, 1870, 94 per cent.; July, 1871, 99 per cent.

South Carolina—July, 1870, 96 per cent.; July, 1871, 100 per cent.

Georgia—July, 1870, 101 per cent.; July, 1871, 82 per cent.

Florida—July, 1870, 98 per cent.; July, 1871, 88 per cent.

Alabama—July, 1870, 102 per cent.; July, 1871, 81 per cent.

Mississippi—July, 1870, 95 per cent.; July, 1871, 80 per cent.

Louisiana—July, 1870, 101 per cent.; July 1871, 75 per cent.

Texas—July, 1870, 97 per cent.; July, 1871, 93 per cent.

Arkansas—July, 1870, 101 per cent.; July, 1871, 90 per cent.

Tennessee—July, 1870, 85 per cent.; July, 1871, 98 per cent.

While no estimation can at this early date be authoritatively made, this information leads to the following conclusions: With a reduction of 19 per cent., relatively low condition, and a season as long as that of 1870, there should be gathered a crop of 3,200,000 bales, or about as large as that of 1869; with a season of average length, 2,900,000 bales; with an early frost, and very unfavorable season for picking, 2,700,000 bales. The prevalence of insects, with other unpropitious circumstances, would probably reduce the crop to 2,500,000 bales, and a steady improvement of the plant for sixty days, with the longest and most favorable picking season, might carry the aggregate up to 3,500,000 bales.

This is presented as a fair statement of the range of probabilities from extensive and reliable data, and uninfluenced by the clamors of the speculators of the Cotton Exchange.

St. Louis, July 15.—The Fort Smith (Arkansas) Era, of July 3, learns from Deputy United States Marshals McLemore and Baer that Satanta and Big Tree, two Kiowa chiefs, captured at Fort Sill when General Sherman was there, and sent to Austin, Texas, attempted to escape from prison, and actually released themselves from the shackles by gnawing the flesh from their hands and feet, but were discovered and shot dead.

Marshals McLemore and Baer report that the people of the Texas frontier are very uneasy lest there should be a general outbreak of the reserve Indians upon the settlements, to take vengeance for the death of their chiefs.

New York, July 15.—A dispatch from Madrid says there was a stormy debate in the Cortes over Cuba. The government explained that it could not abolish slavery until the insurrection was suppressed. The discussion resulted in the general concurrence in the necessity of crushing the revolution forthwith. A proposition was made to send thirty thousand men to Cuba.

New York, July 17.—The storm here yesterday blew a six-thousand pound bell from a tower which was one hundred and thirty feet high. A falling tree crushed a carriage in Fifth avenue. A yacht was capsized in the bay and a man drowned. A brig was struck by lightning. The streets of the city flooded and chimneys blown down. A three-year old child was drowned from a capsized boat.

William M. Oakley, for many years a prominent fireman in this city, was killed by lightning.

An effigy of Governor Hoffman was found hanging in the twelfth ward, Brooklyn, this morning.

Resolutions are pending before the police commissioners forbidding the streets to all processions except military and funerals.

It is stated that the late H. J. Raymond's interest in the New York Times, about one-third of the whole property, has been bought by the other owners for $375,000.

Wilmington, July 17.—In Robeson county, this morning, Lowry and his band of negro outlaws waylaid and killed Daniel Murdock McLean, a prominent citizen, and Hugh McLean, his brother, a youth only thirteen years old. They also wounded Archibald McCallum.—These parties were riding along the public road in a buggy, and were fired on from a thick piece of woods.

A fearful state of terror exists among the women and children of Robeson county. The sheriff has a posse of one hundred and fifty men in the field, but their efforts thus far have been utterly fruitless.

Augusta, July 18.—Heavy rains, accompanied by destructive winds, have prevailed for several days. The dams of Langley's cotton factory and Bath paper mill, situated on Horse creek, six miles from Augusta, broke at four o'clock this morning. A volume of water striking the South Carolina railroad, swept away the embankment and track for half a mile. The damage to the track has been repaired, and trains are running. Some three hundred operatives in the mill have been thrown out of employment. Loss, $50,000.

Louisville, July 18.—There was a destructive storm yesterday along the Louisville and Nashville railroad. A freight train was blown from a switch across the main track, and a passenger train was thrown off. No lives lost.

FOREIGN.

Paris, July 12.—Liberte believes the letter to the Pope, purporting to have been written by Thiers, is apocryphal.

It is stated the party of the right in the Assembly are preparing an answer to the proclamation of Count de Chambord.

The order for raising the state of siege of Paris is expected at once.

Paris, July 15.—The weather is oppressively hot, and a number of sunstrokes have occurred.

A deputation of the members of the left called upon President Thiers to protest against the continued arrests, the continuance of the state of siege of Paris, and the continuance of the government at Versailles. President Thiers replied that the persons arrested were accused of heinous crimes; the siege will be shortly raised, and the capital will go to Paris after the recess in October.

There was but one killed at the explosion of the projectile factory.

London, July 15.—A dispatch from Stuttgart announces the reception of a deputation from the American Evangelical Alliance by Prince Gortschakoff to-day. The address from the Alliance to the Czar was presented and favorably received.

Munich, July 15.—The Prussian Crown Prince Frederick William arrived in Munich, from England, to-day. He was received by King Louis and staff at the railway depot, and escorted to the royal palace by a large force of Bavarian troops. The people of the capital turned out in great numbers and enthusiastically welcomed "Our Fritz."

Vienna, July 15.—The government has formally ratified the naturalization treaty with the United States.

Paris, July 17.—Solemn requiem service is to be held at the Cathedral Notre Dame on Tuesday, in honor of the martyred Archbishop Darboy.

The health of Paris is good.

The announcement that the Archbishop of Tours succeeds Darboy as Archbishop of Paris is confirmed.

Owing to the delay caused by certain technicalities, the delivery of the first milliard of indemnity to the Germans has not yet been consummated.

The Salut, a new weekly, which supports Thiers, utters a cry of warning against the intrigues for the restoration of the Bonapartists.

Berlin, July 17.—The North German Gazette sharply reproves the Catholic bishops of Germany for their encroachments of civil power.

London, July 17.—Prince Gortschakoff has expressed to the deputation of the American Evangelical Alliance the sympathy of his august master, the Czar.

London, July 18.—A telegram from Hong Kong to Lloyd's announces that a typhoon visited Hiago, Japan. Seven steamers were blown ashore or sunk, and the place inundated.

Dispatches report a riot between Socialists and Ultramontanes at Vienna. Many people were injured. The people were powerless. The military suppressed the emeute.

The magazine of the Greek war steamer Eunomia exploded in the Grecian Archipelago. The crew consisted of forty persons, most of whom were killed. The balance were hurt. The vessel was destroyed.

Comparative Mortality of Cities. The deaths of the year 1870 in some of the large cities are given in the St. Louis Board of Health report. New York, with a population of 927,430, had 27,175 deaths, or 29.3 to each 1,000; Philadelphia 657,179, had 16,750 deaths, or 25.5 to each 1,000; St. Louis 312,963, had 6,670 deaths, or 21.3 to each 1,000; Chicago, numbering 299,370, had 7,342 deaths, or 24.5 to each 1,000; Baltimore 267,599, had 7,262 deaths, or 27 to each 1,000; Boston 253,984, 6,096 deaths, or 24 to each 1,000; San Francisco 150,361, 3,351 deaths, or 22.3. New Orleans is credited with a population of 184,688, and the number of deaths in 1870 is set down at 6,942, or thirty-seven and six-tenths in a thousand. Thus great injustice is done to this city, which had in 1870, according to any fair estimate, more than two hundred and forty thousand, which would make the proportion of deaths less than twenty-nine in a thousand for the year, instead of nearly thirty-eight, as set down in the table. Thus it happens that the rank and reputation of our great city suffer on account of a false and slovenly census.—Picayune.

The Tobacco Crop of 1870, it is reported, amounted to 273,775,000 pounds, worth $32,206,325. Of this quantity Virginia produced 65,000,000 pounds, worth on an average ten cents a pound, and the yield per acre being 418 pounds. Kentucky produced 40,000,000 pounds, New York 8,500,000, and Connecticut 6,500,000 pounds. The average yield per acre in Connecticut was 1,450 pounds, bringing an average of 27 cents a pound; and in New York 800 pounds, bringing 14 cents a pound. The cash returns from land planted in tobacco ranged from $41.80 in Virginia to $391.50 in Connecticut. The lowest average price, six cents a pound, was obtained from Ohio tobacco, and the highest, twenty-nine cents a pound, from Florida tobacco.

A great deal of time is contracted in opportunity—which is the flower of time.

HIBERNATION.

The Sunday School Magazine for August is out in good time, and is a capital number. The Notes for Teachers and Bible Students are highly appreciated by our teachers. In the table of contents we note: Recension of the Lord's Prayer, by Dr. Summers; Hints on the Order of Exercises; Children at Preaching; and The Conversion of the Scholars. Dr. Haygood's editorial on Our Annual Hibernation should have a careful reading in the country churches. We append the greater part of his earnest and well-timed article:

But our great trouble is the long-confirmed habit, with a large majority of our country schools, of suspending with the first frosts of October. Nothing else is expected, or attempted. They fade and die, and fall as regularly as the leaves do. Many seem to think it equally a matter of course. We know some schools that have a formal meeting in October, eat, sing and speak, and then adjourn to a day set about the first Sunday in the next April! They call it the "fall picnic!" To us it looks very like a funeral. But this is better than falling to pieces by degrees, as the weather gets colder. If we will not be persuaded to go on through the winter, by all means let us adjourn in good order, with a pledge, all round, to meet as soon as the buds begin to swell. We have reason to believe that one hundred and fifty thousand children, reported in our statistics, are denied the privilege of Sunday school instruction during the entire winter! This is a terrible state of things; the loss and damage we suffer is incalculable. We lose time, organization, opportunity, books—almost everything that makes a Sunday school good and useful. The trouble of organization has to be gone through with every spring; a month or two passes away before the machinery—rusted by winter rains—gets in working order. But the devil does not hibernate. Young blood does not go to sleep; and while timid fathers are trying to keep warm at home, the young people are seeking entertainment. There is no Sunday school; one "monthly appointment" is called in during the transitions of the Annual Conferences, so that at least two months pass away before circuit-preaching comes again. If it should rain on the Sabbath of the first appointment, it frequently happens that three months pass away before the old log house is opened, unless some good local preacher goes through the form of worship, with a score of shivering hearers. Thus it comes to pass that the whole machinery runs down.

What is the remedy? First of all, let us improve our houses of worship in the country. This is the condition of progress. And this we can do. We can make a log church warm as easily as we can make a log dwelling warm. We rejoice to hear of $50,000-churches in our cities. We are not afraid that too many will be built. But just now we would rather hear of a well-planned and comfortably-furnished church dedicated in the country. Our brethren in the country are able to do this. Let the reform begin. Now is the time. The "crops are laid by;" you have a period of leisure. Get ready for the winter before winter comes. Do not imitate the example of the man who would not patch his broken roof "in fair weather, because he did not need it, and would not in bad weather, because he would not work in the rain!" If you have a good church that only lacks a stove, buy a stove at once. If the church is only a hull, plaster or ceil it now. If you have a log house, and can do no better, God will accept the log house—if you chink the cracks and make it warm enough for your children to study his word in! But God does not accept a house with huge spaces between the logs, that lets in the cold and drives out his children.

One thing more we say at this time. It is not the fault of the children that our schools are broken up during the winter. We ask our brother editors to help us "preach a crusade" on this subject. Let us "cry aloud and spare not." There is no practical subject of greater importance. We ask that church, and quarterly, and district, and Annual Conferences take the subject up. We ask Bishops to look into it. Let presiding elders and pastors take hold of it. We call upon superintendents and teachers, fathers and mothers. We invoke the aid of the children. We ask saints and sinners to make ready before the winter comes. Let the list of churches that are going to renounce "hibernation" be enlarged till it takes in every church in our connection. We want to publish this "roll of honor." Does Sardis, Shiloh or Pleasant Valley speak first?

Kentucky Military Institute.—We have before us the annual catalogue and announcement of this justly celebrated institution for the year 1870–71, which presents a most gratifying showing. The last scholastic year was but a repetition of the success which has characterized the school since it came into the hands of the present management; while the outlook for the future is most encouraging. Than Colonel R. T. P. Allen, the superintendent, there is no better or more experienced educator in the country, and the faculty which he has called about him is composed of superior men in every department. The course of study is such as to thoroughly fit the young men who take it for any calling in life, and it is most thoroughly taught. To the benefit of a full collegiate course is added the discipline, instruction and drill of the military school, and every graduate is fully fitted, if need be, to take command of a regiment of troops.

There are many advantages possessed by this school. It is located in a quiet, healthy country, so far distant from town as to place the young men beyond the manifold temptations which ordinarily attend college life; besides, the students all board in the barracks, and are kept under rigid military discipline. There are no temptations to extravagance or dissipation, and nothing to distract the minds of the students or retard them in their studies. Colonel Allen exercises a constant and vigilant personal oversight over the young men, and his good wife is attentive as a mother to them. There are here—what can scarcely be found elsewhere—combined the discipline of the well-organized military camp with the comforts and pleasures of home life—a desideratum greatly to be coveted in the preparation of young men for the callings, duties and responsibilities of practical life.

REVIVAL IN UNIONTOWN, ALA.

Mr. Editor: It is with pleasure that I inform you that we have had a gracious revival at this place.

The church was revived up to the working point. Forty-five or fifty have been converted. Thirty-one joined the church; among them several heads of families, and a number of promising young men. The meeting closed with a good general interest.

Yours fraternally,

THE RIVER.

A little child, as the morning fair,
Whose glittering waves of golden hair
Gleamed in the sunshine's quiver,
Gathering wreaths of the woodbine's spray,
Gathering cowslip and colt's-foot gay,
Flinging them out to float away,
Down the river.

A girl, who lingered as if to see
The May-flies dancing merrily
By the banks where the willows shiver;
Yet saw but the love-light in pleading eyes,
As she sat, in the glow of the noonday skies,
By the river.

A woman, pausing as if to note
The great white lilies serenely float
In the sunset's crimson quiver;
O'er whose face flashed a sudden sober gleam,
As she heard the changeless voice of the stream,
And thought how she dreamed her first love dream
By the river.

A lonely mourner, who lingered late,
Though the grave was closed, the turf lay straight,
And earth was earth's forever;
Out from the church-yard path he passed,
And stood where the dead had loitered last,
While the crescent moon her radiance cast
On the river.

And ever and aye, with the self-same song,
The mighty waters rolled along
'Twixt the banks where the willows shiver;
Through childhood's laugh and girlhood's sigh,
While life drags on, and old men die,
To the ocean, whose name is Eternity,
Rolls the river.

HOMER COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

Mr. Editor: Homer is midway between the Ouachita and Red rivers, and nestles quietly in the center of the most prosperous and independent parish of north Louisiana. It is remarkable for the purity of its waters, the salubrity of its atmosphere, and the intelligence and refinement of its population. It is the very place one would expect to find an institution of learning, such as we have in

HOMER COLLEGE.

During the past year this institution has been in a prosperous condition. One hundred and five students have been enrolled, and served by an adequate and competent faculty. The discipline prevailing has been most remarkable. The young men are as gentlemanly in their deportment, not only in their recitations, but in their sports and contact with the town, as if we had the presence of their mothers. Parents need have no fears in committing their sons to such fellowship.

President Cobb and his colleagues have toiled laboriously and patiently in organizing and instructing the classes. The trustees and the church are to be congratulated on the selection of so competent and prudent a faculty.

On Sunday, June 18, the commencement sermon was listened to by the largest congregation I ever saw outside of a metropolis. It was variously estimated from five to eight hundred. This evinced the interest and satisfaction felt in the conduct of the institution. Two days following were devoted to the public examination of the students. The classes were each limited to the published time. When this arrived the gavel fell remorselessly, and frequently to the ill-concealed annoyance of the professor. This examination brought out two facts, I think, worthy of special attention. First, the curriculum proper has been well selected and efficiently taught. I doubt if any classes in the South, for the same time, have made greater progress in the languages or mathematics. I heard one of the graduates demonstrate by calculus a proposition of the pendulum, not to be found, I am credibly informed, in any of the text books taught in the United States. Second, that book-keeping, commercial calculations and law, as applied to commerce, can be taught in a literary institution just as thoroughly, and incomparably cheaper, than in many of those institutions specially and extensively advertised, and patronized by our people with fearful risks to the health and morals of their sons.

On Wednesday, June 21, the final exercises took place in the large chapel of the college. The wealth and wit and beauty of the country, for many a mile around, were there. The wonder was, whence came such a concourse? From the parish border, and from the festooned cottage over the hill. The old man came in his best clothes, the old woman put on her new dress and her "gold specs" from the bottom of the trunk. The dusty and sunburnt laborer left his plow, and men who do not work but worry gave over the care of money-making and weather-cursing, and went up to "inquire about the young men." The dust never settled upon the roads that day. The lawyers and doctors forgot their books and clients; even the storekeepers and clerks abandoned their trade. Young men and maidens, old men and children, an excited mass, thronged to witness the ceremonies.

The literary address was delivered by Rev. A. R. Winfield, on "The Education we Need." It was a fine specimen of platform eloquence, and attacked the ante-bellum ideas of sequestered luxury and educated vagrancy with the most caustic reference to our present political humiliation and suffering. He buried some seed-corn that day. I trust it will reproduce itself in the vigorous manhood of many a noble boy.

The baccalaureate address—short, well poised and weighty—was then delivered by the president, after which he conferred the degree of A. B. on two graduates, Mr. E. M. Corry and Mr. Bascom Cravens, the son of our veteran and valuable brother, N. A. Cravens, of the Louisiana Conference, and the degree of A. M. on Prof. J. W. Nicholson. After appropriate religious exercises the audience was dismissed with "Home, Sweet Home," performed by the silver cornet band of the town.

The class of seniors was very small, owing to the limited patronage of the college and the defective course of studies pursued by many. Another year will witness a great improvement. The future of Homer College was never so promising. The contiguous country has been wrought up to an enthusiasm in its behalf. Well may Claiborne and Jackson parishes be jealous of its prosperity, and rally to its support. It is the chief hope, if not the only one, of a tract of country, measured by a radius of three hundred miles.

Already one-half of the endowment, provided for by the Louisiana Annual Conference, has been raised, and no doubt is entertained that the other half will be secured by its next session. Arrangements have been made for repairing and renovating the building, and securing a library and apparatus. The trustees are sanguine that now they will be able to meet the demands for a suitable and thorough scholarship, and only ask the preachers and their friends to recollect in their recommendations that Homer College is the exclusive property and under the exclusive management of the Louisiana Conference.

Methodist Protestants in Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: Permit me, through the medium of your excellent paper, to call the attention of the presiding elders and preachers in charge, in the Mississippi Conference, to the destitute condition of a goodly number of our Methodist Protestant brethren in the bounds of said Conference.

At the closing up of the union several circuits of the Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church were left unsupplied, and they are still without pastoral care. The preachers that served them formerly cannot serve them now. Some are employed in other fields of labor, and some are engaged in secular pursuits, trying to make a support for themselves and families. Our president, Bro. Gillaspie, by the consummation of the union, considers himself out of office, and so there is no one among us authorized to supply them with pastors. Beaverdam circuit and Chickasawha circuit, which united number between three and four hundred members, are entirely without ministerial supply. Williamsburg circuit, numbering perhaps two hundred members, is only about half supplied. Bro. E. J. Taylor, who is teaching school in the town of Williamsburg, and can only preach Saturdays and Sundays, supplies the churches within his reach; but the northern half of the circuit, containing four churches, is too remote from the locality of his school for him to supply it, even if his time was not otherwise employed. Then we have a Newton and a Lauderdale circuit, and they are both, I am told, without pastoral supply. These two circuits contain three hundred, perhaps four hundred members. Madison circuit, with four churches, is supplied by Bro. Hannah, an unstationed preacher, who lives in the bounds of that work. Here, now, is a body of Methodist people, numbering six or eight hundred, who have declared themselves in favor of our united church, and the body is too large, in my humble judgment, to be overlooked or neglected. It is but a matter of simple justice to those brethren to give them some attention.

We united with you in good faith, my brethren, and we do not want so much as a corporal's guard of our membership in Mississippi to be lost to the church. We expect the preachers, whose circuits embrace within their bounds any of our destitute churches, to take them under their pastoral care, and not suffer them to be left as sheep without a shepherd. But if their works are too large for this, then let the presiding elders appoint preachers to those charges, that they may be supplied with the bread of life.

Respectfully yours, etc.,
P. H. NAPIER.

DEATH.

Death is the absence of life, and life is the absence of death. Remove life and death ensues, and remove death and life necessarily follows. And one is as easily accomplished as the other by Infinite power and love.

God gathered the material which he had originally created, and fitly framed the body together, and made it wonderful and beautiful, breathing into it his own life. He, after a time, withdraws this vital breath from the house of clay, takes down the old building, reducing its matter into its original elements, and nothing is lost.

But why should this be so?

Divine revelation only is able to stand up and answer. It declares that all men have sinned, and all must die. "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." "Dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return." The King having fallen, his mighty empire went down with him. Hence every leaf of the forest, and every blade of green grass, and every flower, and every tree, with the fish of the sea, and the beasts of the fields, and the birds of the air, perish by disease and violence.

The harvest comes toward the end of the year; but death comes at all seasons—in the spring, when wondrous nature is shooting forth its tender forms of life; in the summer, when the earth is strewn with flowers; in the mellow autumn, when the fields are loaded with golden fruits; or amid the dreadful blasts of winter, when all is draped with ice and snow.

The monster spares neither age nor sex. The tender babe, the rosy maiden, the loving wife, the strong man, as well as hoary age, must sink beneath his magic wand.

But is there nothing to relieve the dark, dreadful shades of the picture—nothing to make death bearable, beautiful, desirable?

Yes, yes. The Christian religion throws immortal light upon the dark canvas. It is as the rising sun upon a benighted world, dissipating darkness and gloom, and bringing forth buds, and flowers, and streams, and green trees, and filling the woods with singing birds of peace and love.

The wicked look upon death as the end of every joy, separating them from every love and treasure; but the righteous, who are hid with Christ in God, look upon it as the end of every pain and fear, ushering in immortal youth and resplendent glory, with ineffable light and love. Hence he can exultingly cry out: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

J. E. B.

MY DISTRICT.—NO. II.

Mr. Editor: When I was in the General Conference, in 1866, I tried to have a law or rule enacted requiring that each pastoral charge should have a permanent secretary, who should have charge of and record all the minutes of the Quarterly Conference, and have charge of the church records of every description, and should be ex-officio member of the Quarterly Conference. Also that the journals of all Quarterly Conferences should be sent up to the Annual Conference for examination, that we might see how they were kept, and learn whether there was uniformity in conducting them, and whether the business was done according to law. The examination of records in my district has confirmed me in my views on the subject.

To illustrate, allow me to give some instances. One of my predecessors allowed charges of immorality to be brought into the Quarterly Conference against a steward, and the conference to proceed in the investigation or trial. Witnesses were introduced, testimony taken, the vote on specifications and charges, etc., were all had. This, of course, was all illegal. How so? asks that presiding elder. "The General Conference shall not do away the privileges of our members of a trial before the church, or by a committee, and of an appeal." (See Discipline, page 37.) But the Quarterly Conference is the court of appeal for "members" of our church, and by making it the court of trial all chance of appeal to that member was cut off. Further, it is the business of the Quarterly Conference "to try appeals" of members, and not have original jurisdiction in such cases. One of my predecessors allowed charges to be brought into the Quarterly Conference against an exhorter, and a committee appointed to investigate the case (he being absent,) and report at the next Quarterly Conference. The minutes of the next Quarterly Conference were not recorded, and I do not know what report was made, nor what was the final action of the conference. But the illegality of this case is precisely what it was in the case of the steward. If he was found guilty by the conference, and a sentence of suspension or expulsion pronounced against him, he was cut off from all chance of appeal.

In another instance the journals state that S. brought charges against G., a local preacher, but as he (G.) was not present the trial was postponed until the next Quarterly Conference. The journal of the next Quarterly Conference says: Upon a vote G. was found guilty of charges brought by E., and he was expelled. Now what were the charges brought against this local preacher, and what were the specifications under those charges? The journals do not state what they were. A local preacher cannot be tried by a Quarterly Conference until "a bill of charges and specifications have been presented before it." Then, "at the commencement of the trial, the president of the Quarterly Conference shall appoint a secretary, who shall take down regular minutes of the evidence and proceedings. The minutes, when read and approved, shall be signed by the president, and also by the members who are present, or a majority of them, and the sentence of the Quarterly Conference shall be pronounced by the president." (See Discipline, pages 126, 127.) But the journals in this case do not show what the charges and specifications were, nor that any secretary was appointed to take down testimony, etc., nor what the votes were, nor that such minutes were signed by the president, nor by any one else; for there are no minutes to be signed. Was it an oversight of the presiding elder, or of the recording steward, in this case? Recording stewards would do well to look at their duties, as presented in the Discipline, and see that they keep a faithful record of all that is done in their Quarterly Conferences. Now, suppose these Quarterly Conference journals had been sent to the Annual Conference every year for examination by a committee of one from each presiding elder's district, and reported upon. Would not some cheeks have burned when those reports had been read to the Annual Conference? And would not some presiding elders and recording stewards have kept nearer to the rules and laws of the church in some instances? I hope the next General Conference will provide for this work. The interests of the church, as I think, require it.

Another thought about the permanent secretaryship is this: If we had such an one to keep the archives of the circuit or station, we could preserve all our papers of interest—deeds of property, and such like—better than we do. On one of the circuits in my district we are about to have a squabble, or perhaps a lawsuit, in reference to a church our people built about 1851, and have occupied ever since. Our people allowed a minister of another denomination to preach in it once a month, and organize a church. He now says we have no title to it. Well, the journals of the Quarterly Conference show that certain persons were appointed trustees of the property. But no deed to the property had been found when I was last in that circuit. All the original trustees are dead, or have moved out of the country. One of that original board of trustees was a lawyer, and we might suppose that he would see that the deed was properly executed and recorded. But no such deed had been found among his papers, nor among another trustee's papers who had died; nor had any deed to said trustees been recorded in the deed books of the county, so far as the search of one of the present trustees, assisted by a competent gentleman, could discover. The older members of the church about there say the deed was given by certain parties who owned the lot! That may be so. If we had had that stated and permanent secretary to keep all the records and papers of that circuit we might be able to find the deed.

UNION SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Mr. Editor: I am glad to see your correspondent G., in the Advocate of June 29, broach the question of union Sunday schools. The subject must be looked into, and some settled policy must be pursued. It requires wisdom, prudence, and perhaps some time to adjust it. Reminding Bro. G. that where no report of any kind about Sunday schools comes up to Conference from a circuit, neither the Conference nor any one else, outside of private information, can know that the children have any advantages of this kind, our relation to union schools must be better understood than it is.

Our church has not as yet, in any formal way, given our pastors distinct instructions on the subject, though it has nearly done so. Neither the General Conference nor our Annual Conference has spoken authoritatively on the subject. The nearest to official instructions we have on the point, that I remember, is a letter from Bishop Pierce, a year or two ago, published in perhaps all our church papers. That letter took decided ground against all union schools, and strongly recommended our own schools everywhere. It has generally been acquiesced in by the other Bishops and the church generally, so far as I know. It may, therefore, be regarded the law of the church about in the same way as we regard Bishop McTyeire's Manual of the Discipline in that light.

At the last General Conference the Sunday school department was undergoing important changes, and it was not deemed expedient then for it to say more than it did.

At the Sunday School Convention, in Nashville, in May last, this subject was brought forward. It was referred to a committee, of which I chanced to be a member, and resulted in the following resolution:

Resolved, That we urge upon our pastors and people to abide faithfully by the direction of the Discipline concerning Sunday schools, namely: "Let Sunday schools be formed in all our congregations where ten children can be collected for that purpose."

The Sunday School Convention did not like to lead the General Conference in a matter of such importance; but if the Discipline and resolution were carried out, it would disconnect our church from perhaps three-fourths, if not from all the union schools in our Conference. This point is important. There are, perhaps, very few, if any, union schools in our Conference where ten children could not be collected into a Methodist school, to say nothing about Bishop Pierce's letter above alluded to. Neither the Discipline nor any other rule of our church says anything about union schools; so that if we were to follow the law of the church, we would find ourselves connected with very few, if any, union schools. Where ten children cannot be collected, and then only, is the preacher permitted by the law of the church to participate in a union school. Where ten children can be collected the preacher participates in a union school in open violation of the Discipline. Perhaps the Sunday School Committee of last Conference had some reference to cases of this sort.

Upon the whole, I felt myself justified, by authority of my office, to say this much to the preachers of the Mississippi Conference on the subject of union Sunday schools.

1. The provision of the Discipline about "ten children" was enacted before the system of uniform lessons was inaugurated. With that mode of teaching a school with two or five children can be conducted as profitably as one with ten or fifty. Therefore, if the next General Conference should approve the uniform lesson system, after four years of experiment, we may look for a repeal of the "ten children" clause.

2. Strict care should be had as to the character of any union school in which we participate. It should be at least a union of schools. But there is certainly no union in a school where all our books and other literature are excluded. That would be anything else but a union. If the Baptists, Presbyterians or Campbellites propose to set up a school with their books, excluding ours, and wish to take us in—is that a union school? Union of what? No, brethren; if we have union at all, let there be union of something beyond the mere literature of the word "union." With our literature, our laws and our means of juvenile instruction, I would say that no preacher, receiving a Conference appointment, has a right to put his children, many or few, into a Baptist or Presbyterian or Campbellite school, though they agree to misspell it "union." And though the word "union" be printed on the outside of the book, I do not see that that relieves the difficulty in the least. Our church has no sort of union with the American Sunday School Union. I call attention to these things.

Unseen Influence.—A minister who has buried a loved member of his family, describes the blessing after death that the departed can be to us, by this homely but touching illustration:

In the deepening twilight of a summer evening a pastor called at the residence of one of his parishioners, and found seated in the doorway a little boy with both hands extended upward, holding a line.

"What are you doing here, my little friend?" inquired the minister.

"Flying my kite, sir," was the prompt reply.

"Flying your kite!" exclaimed the pastor. "I can see no kite—you can see none."

"I cannot see it, but I know it is there, for I feel it pull."

A few years back the angels came and bore far above us, out of sight, one that was very dear to us all. The attachment of our heart was not broken. The connecting ties were lengthened, not broken. We loved her while here; we love her still. She loved us while in the flesh. We are sure she loves us none the less in her new condition. Rising higher and still higher in the heaven of heavens, we feel her influence. She is with Christ, and, attracted by gentle influences, we are tending toward her peaceful home, with the prospect of the same glorious companionship.

VOICE OF NATURE IN THE HEART.

Voice of Nature in the heart,
Narrow though our science, though
Here we only know in part,
Give us faith in what we know!
To a fuller life aspiring,
Satisfy the heart's desiring.

Tell us of a force behind
Nature's force, supreme, alone;
Tell us of a larger mind
Than the partial power we own;
Tell us of a being wholly
Wise and great and just and holy:

Toning down the pride of mind
To a wiser humbleness,
Teach the limits of mankind,
Weak to know, and prompt to guess,
On the mighty shores that bound us
Childlike gathering trifles round us:

Teach how, yet, what here we know
To the unknown leads the way,
As the light that, faint and low,
Prophesies consummate day;
How the little are before us
Proves the perfect circle o'er us:

How the marr'd unequal scheme
That on all sides here we meet,
Either is a lawless dream,
Or must somewhere be complete;
Where or when, if near, or distant,
Known but to the One Existent.

He is. We meanwhile repair
From the noise of human things
To the fields of larger air—
To the shadow of his wings;
Listening for his message only
In the wild with Nature lonely.

JESUIT EDUCATION.

Bishop A. Cleveland Coxe furnishes the Independent with an article on this subject, the most of which we give. Protestants and non-Catholics who are disposed to think well of Catholic schools should ponder these statements of Bishop Coxe.

They (the Jesuits) have succeeded, at least, in establishing their absolute supremacy over the papal system, and over the Pope himself, who must always be their creature and their slave. If he resists, he perishes like poor Gangonelli. The late decree takes from the entire Romish episcopate the last trace of freedom, and subjects it, through the Pope, to Jesuitism. The society is, indeed, detested by governments, and by the popular mind; but it lives through its mastery of all Romish ecclesiastics, and by them in its power over schools and families. Its influence on womanhood is its strength among men. The unguarded freedom of the American Constitution gives it the fairest field it ever found in these United States; and here it is destined to an unparalleled victory, unless it can be resisted now, immediately, and with energies equal to its own. Its unscrupulousness, and its readiness to make use of corrupt judges and politicians, give it an enormous advantage, and seem to promise it a temporary triumph in several of our most populous States.

This glance at its character explains the otherwise inexplicable mystery of the "moral system" we are now considering. It is a moral system only in name; for its object is to destroy moral obligation, and to render a religious life consistent with the practice of every vice to which human nature is inclined. This distinction between religion and piety is of great practical moment in Europe. An Italian priest once praised his king, in my hearing, as very religious. I remarked that he was grossly depraved. "Oh, yes," was the answer: "but he always confesses, and receives the sacrament."

It is not possible, in a paper designed for the popular eye, to go into the details of Jesuit casuistry, as regards purity and the seventh commandment. Some remarks, however, may be made without impropriety on the general system by which womanhood has become so degraded in many nominally Christian countries, in connection with the utmost devotion to "religion," as thus understood. While lending extremest obedience to "the church," and making herself the most servile instrument of the priest, she is often, like the late Queen of Spain, unblushing in crimes against the honor of her sex and against the fundamental safeguards of society. It must not be forgotten that this same Queen Isabella, just before her dethronement by an outraged people, received from Pius the Ninth—or, rather, from the Jesuits, through his hand—the Golden Rose, which acknowledged her as the most honored child of "the church" among the sovereigns of Europe.

The whole plan of Jesuit operations with women has lately been exposed by a brilliant French writer, whose mysterious signature, three asterisks, have given him the name of Abbe Etoile. His works, especially the "Confesseur," produced an extraordinary sensation throughout Europe before the late war, and great efforts were made by the Jesuits to discover his real name; for it is not doubted that he is really a priest, partially sympathizing with Father Hyacinthe. His works (Brussels, 1866, supplied by Christern, in New York) are now before me. I wonder that, with the exception of the least interesting of them, "Under the Ban," they have not been translated and published in this country. During a late visit to Paris I learned the name of the probable author. He is worthy of entire respect, and he powerfully exposes, in this brilliant story, the real origin of the social and political miseries of France. In his view, it is the baneful influence of Jesuit casuistry in the family and in schools which has rendered the intellect of France hopelessly infidel, and the peasantry incorrigibly ignorant and superstitious.

His is, indeed, a terrible revelation of the mental debauchery to which wives and maidens are subjected, by what he calls La theologie Erotique, and exposes in the sixth chapter of the "Confesseur." He begins by avowing that there are among the parochial priesthood "quite a considerable number who have so well comprehended the perils of this casuistry for themselves and for their penitents that they have renounced, in materia Venerea, the sort of confession which deals in minute investigations." But, he adds: "Among the Jesuits, the Redemptorists, and other orders I could not lay my hand, by accident, on one of them without finding the very type of confesseur which I am now exposing." Suffice it, then, that he uses the Latin language as only tolerable, to convey the ideas which such men give in the vernacular to the mind of maidenhood; infusing the poison which they affect to cure, and suggesting, by their inquiries, horrid forms of sin, which would never in any other way be likely to enter any imagination not hopelessly and by long practice of vice essentially brutalized.

Our author attributes to the Reformation a beneficial influence even upon the Romish confessional; but he indicates a work which appeared in 1841, in the seminaries of France, as a manual "for the practical instruction of young priests," as still dominant in schools under the influence of the Jesuits and other orders; and this work he characterizes as "filled with all manner of abominations, and with such refinements of impurity as might stagger the most licentious, while the very thought of them should be impossible to any honorable man." He mentions, also, the "Moechialogy" of Father Debreyne, a Trappist, which it "exclusively appropriates to the clergy," and which pretends to some respect for decency. But, after several extracts, he adds: "The author is obliged, in following up this matter, to take refuge in the Latin language, though he is giving young priests the formulas which they are to use in the vernacular when they interrogate a young woman." Well does the Abbe exclaim: "Fifty Voltaires could not do so much mischief in a century as do these blinded fanatics of a false Catholicity."

Late events in unhappy Paris have moved the sympathies of mankind in behalf of its cruelly persecuted and victimized clergy. It is probable that the blow has fallen on the best specimens of their class; the more guilty have contrived to escape. But, just as the horrible court crimes of the Fourteenth and the Fifteenth Louis were the cause of all that was suffered by the virtuous Marie Antoinette and her ladies of honor, so it must be allowed that the miseries of Darboy and his companions have resulted from the popular impressions given to thousands of husbands, fathers and brothers in France, by the known character of those who have only too faithfully carried out the instructions of Father Debreyne and the Jesuit Seminarians.

It is to be feared that the same manuals which have worked such evils elsewhere are freely used in this country; but, supposing that only Liguori, as the least uncleanly of these casuists, is the reigning authority here, as in England, what does it signify? If not so minute as others, he is yet so horribly gross and indecent that nobody who has any respect for his own purity of mind can do more than to examine once a few paragraphs of his treatise on this matter, even in its original Latin. Think, then, of those who feed and batten on such ideas becoming the masters of American education! Think of the infatuation of those who subject their daughters to Jesuit education; who send their children to convents and seminaries where Jesuits are supreme over the minds and conduct of "mother superiors!" In such schools the very cautions which they use in proselytism are venomous enough even in cases where they only partially succeed; for they sap the foundations of character, and suggest the fatal idea of a religion which promises eternal salvation, without the conditions of spiritual life and purity of heart.

When one turns from those contemplations of an artificial casuistry to the heavenly instructions of the Book of Proverbs, or of the writings of St. Paul and St. James, how refreshing and how absolute the contrast! These heavenly pages are practically forbidden to the youth of all Romish schools; and in this prohibition, be it remembered, is involved their estrangement from that "which is able to make them wise unto salvation." Oh, what a robbery of the immortal soul is this! Who can estimate the sin of those who have "taken away the key of knowledge" from millions of redeemed souls, in the name of their Redeemer? We have glanced at "the Stygian pool" into which these unfortunates are plunged by Jesuit casuistry. Let me conclude by contrasting with it the heavenly precept of a pure Christianity: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report—if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." Such is the only casuistry that should be tolerated in American schools.

"What are the missionaries then doing? First, we are endeavoring to teach the Chinese children. True, we are not doing as much in China as is done in India; but we do not neglect this branch of the work. We have in China three or four thousand children under our charge. At Hankow we have one hundred and fifty daily receiving instruction in the word of God, some of them as free from idolatrous superstition as any brought up in this land could be. These scholars teach others who do not attend our schools. Many a time, passing through the streets, I have heard boys not in attendance catechising each other in the words of our catechism. Another thing we do is to heal the sick. * * * We cannot do without these hospitals; they are a practical exemplification of the benevolent tendencies and nature of our religion. Jesus Christ went about preaching the gospel and healing the sick. Then we are bookmakers; and this is another thing we do. We cannot do without the Bible in China. I am surprised how the Roman Catholics can get along without that precious Book. * * * In addition to the Bible, we give them theological works. We give them also scientific books. * * * But, after all, preaching is our great work in China. * * * We have our chapels, in the principal thoroughfares, crammed every day with attentive hearers. And we have more than six thousand converts, who delight Sunday after Sunday to hear the word expounded and the gospel preached. * * * Roman Catholics have never adopted this plan of public preaching. * * I happen to know something of the present race of their missionaries, and I can say positively that hardly any of them speak the language with any degree of accuracy. They pay no attention to the literature of the people; they never preach to the heathen; they never distribute books among them; they do nothing toward their elevation in any way. Protestant missionaries, on the other hand, make it a point to study the language and literature of the people; they make it a point to be able to preach with accuracy and ease, and I believe a day hardly ever passes without their appearing in this character before the people. I am asked by some: 'Do not the Roman Catholic missionaries lead a more self-denying life than you?' Not a bit. At the ports they live as well as we do. In the interior we are worse off than they. They are among their converts, and we are among the heathen. * * * The Chinese, under a very decent external service, have an unspeakable amount of moral corruption. You have in the first chapter of the Romans an exact picture of the Chinese to-day. A Chinaman is never more at home than when telling you a bare-faced falsehood. * * * This is the moral atmosphere in which our converts have been brought up. If I told you these people were saints the moment they were baptized, would you believe me? I believe they are as good as the converts of Europe were in the times of the apostles, and that is saying enough for them."

The following anecdote confirms the truth of the physiologist's assertion that persistent indulgence in inordinate smoking results in the absorption of the actual essence of tobacco into the very tissues. Captain Wilkes, in an exploring expedition, interrogated a native of the Feejee Islands as to the fate of the crew of a vessel whose shattered hull still lay upon the beach. "All kill," replied the savage. "What did you do with them?" asked Captain Wilkes. "Eat 'em. Good," returned the cannibal. "Did you eat them all?" inquired the half-sick captain. "All but one," holding up a finger. "And why did you spare one?" "'Cause him taste too like tobacco; couldn't eat him no how."—Food Journal.

"DRINKERS, READ!"

"Friends and Neighbors: Having just opened a licensed shop for the sale of liquors in this place, I embrace this opportunity of informing you that on Saturday next I will commence the business of making paupers and beggars for the industrious and respectable portion of the community to support.

"I shall deal in familiar spirits, which will invite men to robbery, riot and bloodshed, and by so doing demolish the comforts, increase the expense and endanger the welfare of the community.

"I will, for a small sum, undertake, upon short notice and with the greatest expedition, to prepare victims for the poorhouse, asylums, prisons and the gallows.

"I will furnish an article suited to the taste, which will increase the number of fatal accidents, multiply distressing diseases, and render those nearly harmless incurable.

"I will deal in drugs which will deprive some of life, many of reason, most of property, and all of peace; which will cause fathers to become fiends, wives to become widows, children to become orphans, and all to become sufferers.

"I'll cause the rising generation to grow up in ignorance, and prove a nuisance to the nation. I'll cause mothers to forget their helpless children, and priceless virtue no longer to remember its value.

"I will endeavor to corrupt ministers of the gospel, to defile the purity of the churches, and cause spiritual, temporal and eternal death.

"If any should be so impertinent as to ask why I have the audacity to bring such accumulated misery upon a comparatively happy people, my honest reply is, 'Greenbacks.'

"I live in a land of liberty. I have purchased the right to demolish character, destroy the health, shorten the lives and ruin the souls of all those who favor me with their patronage.

"Come one! Come all!

"I pledge myself to do all I have herein promised. Those wishing any of the evils above specified brought upon themselves and dearest friends are requested to meet at my 'bar,' where I will, for a few cents, furnish them with the certain means of doing so. An Honest Dealer."

How to Preach.—Did you ever hear of an infidel being cured by Butler's Analogy? I never did, though I have often made the inquiry; but scores upon scores were cured by Whitefield's preaching—not merely of infidelity, but they were converted to a living faith in Jesus. Nor was it the rude and illiterate only who thus surrendered at discretion. Bolingbroke and Hume stole in among the assemblies, and though they were not converted, yet they ceased from their scoffs, and trembled like Felix when the preacher reasoned of righteousness and judgment to come; and yet Whitefield could no more have been the author of the Analogy than of the Paradise Lost or of the Great Eastern.

Suppose the work of making a Christian out of a savant—say Prof. Huxley—were to be undertaken. How would you begin? Would you look out for an athlete trained for the encounter by a perfectly scientific method, who should entangle and capture him in his own diagrams? You might; but I would send after him a second Whitefield; or one of our scores of lesser lights than he, as the likeliest chance. We are admirers of science, taking the word in the sense of absolute knowledge. Let institutions for its culture give themselves to experiment, speculation and inquiries, and then let the "physicists" strive with the "physicists" of the earth; but some tell us we must have a "learned" clergy, and by "learned" they mean a clergy who shall be trained to cope with the critical "scientist," and confound him by discourse from the pulpit about "periods," "formations," arrow-heads and bones.—Protestant Churchman.

George Grote, the historian, died on Sunday, June 18, at the age of seventy-seven. Of German descent, he was born in England in 1791. His grandfather and father were bankers, and at the age of sixteen young Grote entered the family bank. He gave his leisure hours, however, to literature, and in 1822 he commenced his celebrated "History of Greece," which he finished in 1850. He was a Liberal in politics, and in favor of Parliamentary reform. Three successive terms, from 1832 to 1841, he represented the city of London in Parliament. As a political economist he was educated in the school of Mr. James Mill. As a philosopher he was influenced by Comte. He was a bold and vigorous writer.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Evangelical Bible Society in Russia reports as its receipts for four years $11,340.

The French bishops have been silly enough to demand of the Versailles government the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope; and the government has been wise enough to refuse the demand.

The Pope, in his reply to the address of sympathy from the French Catholics, praises the zeal they exhibit in behalf of himself and the church, and denounces Liberal Catholicism, which he declares is an evil worse than revolution or the Commune.

Dr. Dollinger is marching on. In a recent letter to certain Hungarian Catholics, he declares that "the legally regulated participation of laymen in the ordering and administration of the affairs of the church is the one thing most needed now by the church."

The Jesuits in Prussia.—The Jesuits having been driven from Rome, have fled to Prussia. It is significant that these arch-plotters against religious liberty can only find refuge in Protestant countries, where toleration prevails and the conscience is free.

A Great Revival Among the Indians.—Rev. Thomas Pearne, Indian probationer in the Oregon Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, recently held a protracted meeting among the Nez Perces, resulting in the accession to the church of two hundred and fifty Indians.

American Protestants in Rome, who are not Episcopalians, complain that they have no place of worship. When Dr. Storrs was in that city many of the Americans desired to hear him preach; but there was no opportunity, the Episcopal chapel being shut against him as tightly as the Romish churches.

The Methodist, in speaking of the women's movement in the Methodist Church in behalf of foreign missions, says: "Besides the particular facts of $23,000 raised the last year, of forty girls' schools maintained by it in India, and also the Bareilly orphanage, and many Bible women, it is developing a surprising amount of talent and activity among the American Methodist women themselves."

The Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church held its semi-annual meeting June 8. The treasurer reported the total receipts $92,700, of which $90,000 had been invested. The board ordered the investment of the balance, amounting to $2,700. No appropriations were made. The board are preparing to hold an educational convention in Brooklyn during the session of the General Conference.

The question of the validity of papal baptism was referred to the presbyteries by the General Assembly of the United Presbyterians. A large number of presbyteries failed to respond; but the majority of votes received was against the validity of baptism by Romanists. Owing to the smallness of the vote, the Assembly refused to make this decision positive law, but referred the whole matter to the discretion of sessions.

A Righteous Demand.—"The arrogant claims of Rome are arresting the independent thought and speech of many of its followers, who will no longer yield implicit assent to its pretensions. Baron von Staffenberg, a Bavarian Catholic member of the German Parliament, in a recent speech in favor of religious liberty, electrified the Assembly, as in words that rang like a bugle blast he exclaimed: "Let all creeds be as free as they are in America!"

At the late Chicago Baptist Convention, Dr. Williams, of Baltimore, remarked that in his actual practice he was fast approaching infant baptism. "He has carried into the baptistery children so young that their feet could not touch the baptistery floor. Out of his own Sunday school he has baptized two hundred and twenty-eight. Of these the church has found occasion to discipline only seventeen. Out of one Bible class there, he has baptized fifty-one."

The Board of Delegates of American Israelites recently held its annual meeting in the Nineteenth street synagogue, New York. Thirty congregations were represented, each by two delegates. The Maimonides College, in Philadelphia, was reported to be in a languishing condition, having only three pupils. A Hebrew Publication Society was organized, which is to print during the first year Gratz's History of the Jews, a portion of the Bible in English, and a translation of Girgir's Gabirol.

Out of the 601 churches connected in the United Presbyterian denomination in Scotland, 508 have congregational libraries, in which there are 199,833 volumes. If our American churches would enlarge the usual Sunday school library by the constant addition of books, valuable for adults as well as for children, and would open the library on a week-day evening for the use of members of the congregation, they would find it a means of grace as well as of culture.

In Australia a movement has been made toward the formation of a new religious body, whose objects shall be "to free the mind from the burden of educational dogmas, and direct attention to the unwritten but infallible promptings of a past and present experience." It is also proposed "to withstand any sectarian domination whatever, and rather to forward by its efforts such direct religious communion with the State as will naturally result in a code of belief whose few incontrovertible principles shall be based on patriotism, brotherhood and the general benefit of all."

A singular fate has overtaken the Zoroastrians of Persia. According to a cotemporary, the small community is in danger of being exterminated and eaten up. A dire famine has visited Yezd; the consequence of which is that the stout and able-bodied Moguls hesitate not to eat up the helpless Zoroastrians and Jews of the place. Many of the Jewish families have been thus comfortably disposed of, while a young fire-worshiper met with the same fate at Tuftaree. An appeal has been directed to their co-religionists in Bombay to stay this terrible cannibalism.—Independent.

The Gospel in Rome.—Six Protestant Italian ministers are now preaching the pure gospel in Rome, where but a short time since it would have been a crime to be punished by the Inquisition. A Methodist chapel was dedicated and opened for regular services on Easter Sunday, April 9, under the charge of a converted Italian. Bible and tract depositories are established in the heart of the city. Civil marriage is for the first time performed, and births are registered. The Italian government has granted one of the old churches for a Protestant school, and many of the convents have been transformed into public offices.

The Bishop of Gloucester attended for the first time a meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in his diocese, the other day. He had, he said, felt for years a difficulty, which many others had felt, as to the close co-operation the society implied between the Church of England and Nonconformists. He felt at the time that those who differed from him must work in their sphere, and he must work in his. But, he said, he prayed that Providence would bring a time when matters would be otherwise, and all might work in a common sphere. "And," he exclaimed, amid loud applause from many of his clergy and laity, "I think I may say that that time has come." High Churchmen on this side of the ocean are requested to make a note of this.

The Jewish Rabbinical Conference met in Cincinnati, June 6, with Dr. Hubsh, of New York, as president, and Dr. Lilienthal, of Cincinnati, as vice president. Twenty-three congregations were represented. The report of the Committee on the Establishment of a Rabbinical Seminary, in favor of that measure, was adopted, and the committee were instructed to report a more detailed course of study. A measure was adopted for the establishment of a union between the Israelite congregations in America. It provides that when twenty reform congregations, with two thousand members, shall have joined the union, the first synod shall be called. A modernized prayer book is to be prepared, with all allusions to the return of the Jews to Palestine, and to the ideas of sacrifices and a personal Messiah, omitted. A more complete Sabbath school organization is to be effected.

The New York St. Peter tells the Times that "the Roman Catholics of the United States are ten millions strong." It is astonishing how persistently the politico-papal journals retail such exaggerations, in spite of the showing of not only the United States census report, but also of that of their own annual documents, almanacs, etc. Their own standard authorities never pretend to half the estimate of St. Peter; the most accurate is given in the German Year Book, and places their whole population at less than four millions. Now this is less than that of the Baptists alone; far less than that of the Methodists; and entirely outweighed by the aggregate Protestant population of the country. The Catholic Telegraph, of Cincinnati (official,) some time ago gave St. Peter's estimate as what would now be correct had Romanism kept all its children, received by emigration, from the beginning; but it pointed to the acknowledged loss of half of these as proof of the evil influence of our common school system. Romanism does not grow spontaneously in our republican soil; it is an exotic, and spontaneously decays here.—Methodist.

THOU SHALT NOT KILL.

Murder is justly ranked as the greatest of crimes. It is taking away that which God only can give, and which can never be restored. Repentance cannot effect restitution, and no process of legal justice can make good the damage sustained. The stay and protector of a helpless family has been cut down, the tenderest affections have been crushed and torn, the dearest ties have been broken, and anguish and bitter sorrow, without warning, invade the domestic circle. However great the provocation, consideration and pity for the innocent, we might suppose, would arrest the murderous purpose, and outweigh the most grievous sense of injury. No conception of honor, no estimate of outraged right, no sense of wrong, can vindicate this infliction of indescribable misery upon those who could have no participation in the offense for which the victim's life is taken. For their sakes, if for no other, it would be far nobler to endure calumny in silence than to shed the blood of the offender.

The most serious aspect of the deed lies in the fact that a soul is suddenly sent into eternity, and the destiny of an immortal being is in a moment sealed forever. If unprepared to meet God, there is a double murder—with the destruction of the earthly life, there is the extinguishment of all hope in the world to come. In this view of the subject the murderer incurs a degree of guilt and responsibility altogether beyond measurement. It is cruel enough to send agony and mourning into the homes of the innocent, and to deprive a human being of the remnant of his days on the earth, but there is no cruelty like that of sending a man to his final account without the possibility of a moment's space for preparation. It is not wonderful that the duelist who has killed his man, or that those who have been forced to the homicidal act by self-defense, should find their subsequent days darkened by a fearful shadow. It must be the clearest necessity of self-defense that can save from the deepest remorse, and even then, to the man of tender conscience and proper sensibilities, it will be a life-long regret.

God has placed killing in the decalogue as one of the things prohibited. It stands there, written with his own finger upon the tables of stone, as his unchanging law, that "Thou shalt not kill." It stands there without qualification, because little qualification was intended. Nothing but the extremest necessity of self-defense can be allowed as a modification of the divine commandment. The primitive enactment was designed to throw around human life the security of a divine sanction: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed; for in the image of God made he man." This law was given to Noah and his family immediately after the subsidence of the deluge, and has every mark of universal application. It was incorporated into the law of Moses, and its spirit prevailed throughout the most ancient and most enlightened nations of the earth. The law, as exhibited by Moses, was without abatement: "Moreover, ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of the murderer, who is guilty of death; but he shall surely be put to death." The land was regarded as polluted and defiled, and held responsible until the murder was expiated—"for blood it defileth the land; and the land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein but by the blood of him that shed it." God has, by express statute, made the punishment of murder obligatory upon society. No satisfaction can be taken for the life of the murderer. Not merely is the life of the murderer to be taken if the good of society demands it, but men are commanded to do so unconditionally. The land is guilty, society itself is polluted and defiled with blood if the guilty are permitted to escape the penalty which God has prescribed.

The reason assigned—"for in the image of God made he man"—is the highest conceivable. It is as if a man should lay violent hands upon God himself; it is a desecration and a sacrilege. There is a value in human life, a sacredness in the human body, growing out of man's spiritual and immortal nature, that makes murder the highest of crimes, and absolutely inexpiable except by the death of the murderer. This God-like nature, this body which is the temple of the Holy Ghost, this humanity which has been assumed and glorified in the Son of God, and redeemed by the cross, is thus honored and guarded in the divine law. Violent hands cannot be laid upon it with impunity. It is something stamped with Jehovah's image and superscription, and to be reverenced and respected.

The root of murder, as expounded in the New Testament, is hate: "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer." Christ declares that not the actual murderer alone is in danger of the judgment, but "whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause." Bloodshed springs from uncontrolled and vicious passions—from that malevolence which is utterly at war with true Christian manhood. The gospel, therefore, aims at the source of all in seeking to regenerate the nature, and to extirpate all false and degrading sentiments of personal honor and revenge. Public opinion can only be purified and freed from error by impressing it with this standard of religious truth. The wicked and unjustifiable motives and passions which lead to murder must be exposed by the light of truth, and the punishment must be set forth and vindicated by the teachings of the Bible. The crime of bloodshedding is indeed increasing, and the social and individual conscience, and a relaxing judicial morality need to be strengthened by the true and strong convictions of the word of God.

THE CATHOLIC RIOT.

The recent riot in New York city, as our readers are aware, was occasioned by an attack of Catholics upon a procession of Protestants. These Orangemen are English and Irish Protestants, who are in the habit of celebrating the anniversary of the battle of the Boyne, in which William, Prince of Orange, gained a great victory and delivered Ireland from Roman Catholic temporal rule. The right of the Orangemen to a peaceful demonstration cannot be questioned, and no trouble could have happened if the Catholics of New York were willing to concede to this Protestant organization the privilege which they have themselves enjoyed. The Protestant procession might be offensive to the Catholics, as all dissent from papal supremacy is; but it was not more offensive to them than the torch-light procession and other demonstrations of the recent jubilee were to the Protestants. The Romanists were neither insulted nor disturbed in New York when they displayed their banners and delivered speeches against Italian unity, and the rights of the Roman people to throw off the political despotism of the Pope. Their jubilee was an offense to the political and religious convictions of nine tenths of the American people, but they were not interfered with in any way whatever.

It might have been urged that the Catholic celebration was gotten up as a defiance and insult to the political and religious institutions of the country; but the principles of civil liberty and religious toleration protected them. If these principles had been respected the Orangemen would have had a peaceful day and all would have been well. It may be urged that their procession was of a political character, having its origin and issues in a foreign country, but Archbishop McCloskey calls it "an anti-Catholic movement;" and besides, it was not a whit more a foreign political question than the right of Victor Emanuel to be the temporal sovereign of Rome. The origin of the trouble was with those who invaded the clearest rights of American citizens, and who were unwilling that Protestants should have the same privileges which were freely accorded to their opponents. We do not believe that the better class of Roman Catholics approve of the conduct of their misguided brethren in this lamentable as well as impolitic outrage, but they cannot blame Protestants for regarding it as one of the fruits of that intolerance which inheres in their system of religion.

The warning and advice of Archbishop McCloskey seems more calculated to stir up strife than to quiet it. All the agitation was with his own flock, all the threatening portents of the coming storm were among his own people, and probably excited on purpose to deter and bully an association of Protestants. We quote the Archbishop's language:

> We all know the danger which threatens our community in the course of the ensuing week. Newspapers have agitated it, rumor has wafted it to our ears, and even dead walls are placarded with the lowering evil. Everything tells us that a systematic and combined effort is now being made to excite an anti-Catholic movement in our community. The procession announced to take place in our streets on Wednesday next is intended by its participants to produce the end spoken of, and therefore I earnestly exhort every Catholic to beware of even going near it on Wednesday next, if it is to take place at all, and I hope it is not. I hope the proper authorities will see the wisdom of preventing it. With my soul I entreat you, Irish Catholics, to make no counter-demonstration of any kind. Do nothing that would give your enemies the chance they covet—to divert to you the odium which these Orangemen will be sure to bring upon themselves if they be allowed to carry out their unprovoked programme of silly offensiveness unmolested. They are not worthy of recognition, even as foes; avoid them as you would any pest. Let these Orangemen alone—let them severely alone.

There is here not a word about the rights and liberties of all classes of citizens. These Orangemen are, as "any pest," "unworthy of recognition, even as foes." "Everything tells us that a systematic and combined effort is now being made to excite an anti-Catholic movement in our community." The whole utterance, though avowedly for peace, was doubtless designed to influence the civil authorities, and to suppress the demonstration. Beyond this, it was more calculated to excite than to allay the passions and prejudices of the Catholic population. Suppose the good prelate had said something about the equal rights of Protestants and Catholics, and that the Orangemen were about to enjoy a privilege which the Catholics had so largely enjoyed but a few weeks before! A little instruction in the equal political and religious rights of citizens would have done more to secure the peace than his dark suspicions and hard words concerning the Protestants. This would have been manly, equitable and becoming a high religious functionary in a free country. He ought to have been side by side with Governor Hoffman in asserting and maintaining a principle to which Catholicism, in the United States, is indebted for its very existence. At least while the Romanists are but four millions out of forty, it is becoming and expedient that they practice that tolerance to others which they so much need themselves. Admitting that "a systematic and combined effort is now being made to excite an anti-Catholic movement in our community," it savors of Romish arrogance and conceit to question the right to do so. The Catholics get up their anti-Protestant demonstrations, they flaunt their banners, they march in procession with torches and music, but all counter-manifestations are against the peace and dignity of the State, and must be suppressed by the civil arm!

LETTER FROM REV. W. V. TUDOR.

LONDON, June 26, 1871.

MY DEAR STEWARDS: I was interested in Dublin. It is only an up-one-street-and-down-another place but for one thing—Trinity College.

Poplin and Trinity College are the pride and boast of Dublin. Of the former I could not help learning something, unused as I am to dry goods, for everywhere it was poplin, poplin. Poplin is an Irish manufacture, and requiring, for the interweaving of the wool and silk, the manipulation of the hand more than some other fabrics of the loom, it reveals that same Irish patience which constructs, altogether with the hand, that finest and most delicate of all laces, the Irish point. But, poplin included, I had not thought much of Ireland until I saw Trinity College. Its natural scenery, as compared with that of my own country, had only inspired supreme contempt. I should never certainly have come across the water for that. I will give you a proportion. A two-penny cascade is to Niagara Falls as the scenery of Ireland is to that of America in all the qualities of vastness, magnificence and grandeur. But, to be just, I must add two terms yet to the proportion, if Bishop Keener will forgive me, as follows, viz: As Centenary College is to Trinity; I might almost put Yale in the place of Centenary. Trinity College covers an area of thirty acres, has upward of one thousand students, a library of three hundred thousand volumes—larger than the library of Congress at Washington—apparatus and appliances of every kind for an institution of learning proportionally appropriate and extensive. The buildings are solid and stately, the grounds beautiful, as though both had grown into massiveness and beauty as an oak would have grown by this time, planted when the college was planted, in the time of Elizabeth, Queen of Britain. It was founded by Queen Elizabeth, and is always associated, in the Irish mind, with the honor of her name. "It ought to be grander than Centenary," you say; "it is so much older." Then let other noble friends come forward shortly from Carondelet Street Church, as one did just before I left your city, with their donations of $1,000 each, or Centenary College may not live to see the present age of Trinity, to say nothing of equaling it in extent and importance. In this connection I will speak also of the Wesleyan Methodist College at Belfast, through whose spacious halls and well-appointed lecture rooms and lodging apartments I was conducted by the head master, Dr. Crook. It is a splendid institution. Its foundation stone was laid only in the year 1864, and now the college is in full operation, having upward of three hundred students, and a faculty of twenty or twenty-five professors and tutors. I could not help thinking of Centenary, and other literary institutions of our church in America, with earnest, longing interest, as I beheld the greatness of the Belfast college. Irish Methodism is poor—poorer than Louisiana Methodism. It is true, American money to the amount of $50,000 is in the Wesleyan College at Belfast, and there ought to be more of Louisiana money in Centenary College; and that is the conclusion of the whole matter. Where is Bro. White?

I must again confess, my dear stewards, to a violation of your orders while I was in Dublin. I saw a temperance meeting advertised, found my way to it through an alley, and found attending it about three hundred persons. Well, they also found us out, for a clerical friend was with me, and the clergyman from America must speak a little. We could not decline. We called up mourners, and twelve came forward and signed the pledge.

From Dublin our route lay through Londonderry. Bro. Elder is from Derry. It is a great curiosity. It is a walled town. I had read of walled towns, but with difficulty imagined one. It was now before my eyes. The old town is still within its walls; the new is built on every side outside the walls. The wall, in some places, is as wide as were the walls of Babylon, and the memorable siege of one hundred days in 1689, which it withstood, is the glory and pride of Londonderry.

I thought I had imagined the Giant's Causeway, but found I had not. As I saw it in the distance it looked just like Mitchell's geography, but on a nearer view I deliberately tore the leaf out of the geography that has the picture, having no further use for it. I clambered over the strange pavement, formed of the ends of columns of rock, a foot or more in diameter each, and of varied geometrical figures, from the triangle to the nonagon. Fancy saw the giant's organ and the giant's grandmother, and other things that were his, and that were pointed out; but philosophy saw rather with delight one of those remarkable crystalizations which took place in that far-off period, when Infinite Wisdom presided over the conflict of the fierce elements, and that succession of changes which resulted in a habitable earth and a navigable sea for the use of creation's masterpiece.

I reached Belfast in time to enjoy a great privilege—that of being present at the session of the Irish Wesleyan Conference. A Conference, you know, is the passion of Methodist preachers. Before Conference it is, "When I go to Conference," and after Conference it is, "When I was at Conference," and all the time it is "Conference year." Now here was the Irish Conference in full blast. I give it up; these preachers can outtalk us: I thought the vice of our Conferences was too much talk, but the thought was a libel upon my brethren in comparison with these Irish preachers. They talk well, it is true, but they talk. They are a large body, in Conference assembled, numbering one hundred and seventy-five members perhaps, but there must be one hundred and seventy-five talks. They do not talk long at a time; they could not, for all must talk. The subject is fully ventilated, but Bro. So-and-So must have his little "say." They had up, the first day I attended the session, a question that amused me much. They have a rule, concerning a candidate for admission into full connection, that if he marry he must marry a lady who has been a Methodist for at least one year. A brother's name was before them who had married, but not according to rule. Now, how the brother's friends pleaded that the wife was a good woman, and in every way suitable to be the brother's wife, notwithstanding she had been a Presbyterian up to a time less than one year preceding the marriage. Well, the rule fell dead, and long live the brother and his wife! With such a question as that we in America are not familiar; but another day they had up a question which is not unknown to us. A middle-aged brother offered a series of resolutions, and sustained them by a capital speech, animadverting upon the practice, that was getting to be too common, of sending junior men to senior stations, upon application of the stations, and thereby displacing senior men, whose age, if nothing else, entitled them to the best appointments. I had thought that Irish Methodism was old enough to have had that question long since settled; but here they have waited until I have grown old enough to cross the water alone, and am present to hear, before they reach the discussion of it. Well, the resolutions did not pass; they were withdrawn; and instead this was the sentiment evidently, though not formally pronounced, that in the long run, and admitting a few exceptions, the right man will find the right place.

I am in London now, but dare not venture upon London at this writing, lest I make the letter too long.

One item, and I close. At Portrush, Ireland, having an hour, and sauntering about, I looked with both eyes, as, without being advised, I discovered, conspicuously erected, a granite column, perhaps forty feet in height, having this inscription: "To the Doctor Adam Clarke." A tribute to the learning and works of the great commentator is also engraved upon the stone.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

MR. EDITOR: It has been my pleasure, as a member of the Visiting Committee from the Louisiana Conference, to attend the commencement exercises of Centenary College, and I propose to give your readers a brief sketch of what I saw and heard, hoping to recur to the subject when I may have more time to dwell upon matters of great interest to the college and the wide section over which it is destined to extend its influence.

I may say, and indeed should say, that the college is not only fairly on its feet again, but is standing erect and about asserting its claims among the institutions of the land, of which it is destined to be the first. The Board of Trustees added a president and one other professor to the already efficient but small faculty, thus making it equal to the demands of its increasing patronage, which, it is hoped, will extend to at least one hundred additional students at the opening of the next term in October.

I was pleased to see the extensive preparations for repairing the buildings and the workmen actively engaged in the work. The people are responding to the calls of our agent for funds, and it is now a settled fact that Centenary College will in a few months stand unrivaled, among kindred institutions, for the finish, the elaborateness and the adaptation of its buildings to college purposes.

The commencement exercises were highly creditable to the students and professors, and were attended by an audience which in numbers and brilliancy was well calculated to call to mind old Centenary in her palmiest days, and gave promise that those days, and even better, were fast returning. The commencement sermon, preached by Rev. John Mathews, on Sunday morning, July 9, was instructive and impressive. On Tuesday night we were entertained by original addresses from the young men of the Lee Institute, one of the societies of the college. These addresses reflected the highest credit upon both the young men and their teachers. This evening's exercises closed with an address to the Lee Institute, by Rev. John Mathews, which was characteristic and capital.

Wednesday night was occupied with an exhibition, in which a large number of the students participated. This was a performance of the highest order, and was generally received as a clear indication of the industry and application of the students, as well as an evidence that their instructors had been diligent and faithful in training and developing those young men. The exercises of this evening closed with some appropriate remarks from Bishop Keener on the condition and prospects of the college. The Bishop is devoted to Centenary, and talks and works for it as a labor of love.

I have thus merely glanced at some things I saw and heard at Jackson. I must, however, before closing this hasty communication, refer to the discipline and moral tone of the students. In this respect Centenary College stands high among the institutions of the land, and affords to parents a guarantee that their sons will receive that moral impress which is essential to the development of the highest style of manhood.

COMMENCEMENT AT THE SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.

MR. EDITOR: The commencement exercises at the Southern University closed on the fifth instant. The sermon on Sabbath, the second, was by Bishop McTyeire, and in his best vein, affording much satisfaction.

Addresses were delivered before the literary societies by B. J. Harrison, Esq., and W. M. Walker, of New Orleans, an alumnus of the University, which inculcated high moral sentiments and sound principles and philosophy.

Two young men received the degree of A. M., four that of Bachelor of Science, and one graduated in the School of Chemistry.

Quite a number of the alumni of the University were present, and seemed greatly to enjoy their reunion. The number of graduates of this institution is not large, but for talents and promise they will compare favorably with those of any college in the South.

In proof of this the fact may be mentioned that two of them went to the Medical School of the University of Virginia, the past year, and in a single term took the entire medical course, and received their diplomas.

The friends of the University regretted much to part with three of the professors who had been in the institution from its organization; but circumstances seemed to impel a separation. But the board was able to reorganize the faculty in a most satisfactory manner to themselves, and, we trust, also to the public.

Rev. Dr. Andrews, of Mobile, is elected to the presidency. Prof. Casey continues in the chair of ancient languages; Rev. J. S. Moore, A. M., a graduate of the University of Virginia, takes the chair of mathematics; Dr. Thomas O. Summers, Jr., the chair of chemistry, etc. The doctor is an alumnus of the Southern University, and has already distinguished himself not only in his alma mater, and in the University of Nashville, where he graduated in medicine, but as an analist generally.

The announcement of this faculty gave great satisfaction to the public present, and we separated feeling that the future of the University was bright. We call upon its friends everywhere to exert themselves for the increase of its patronage. We assure them that there is no intention on the part of the trustees to lower its standard of scholarship; they are determined that the men who bear its diplomas shall be worthy of the confidence of the public.

CATECHISING.

There are great complaints of the neglect of catechising in our families and Sunday schools. We deeply regret this. We have the best catechisms in the world—our Discipline prescribes their use, and our Bishops enforce the duty. Why, then, is it neglected? In every Christian family the catechism should be taught, if it is neglected in the Sunday school. Thomas Jackson, the biographer of Richard Watson, attributed the eminence of that great man largely to the catechetical instruction which he received in his youth. He was a proper person to prepare these manuals for the Methodist Church. He knew what was needed by the children of the church. They are matriculated in the school of Christ that they may be "taught knowledge and made to understand doctrine." "Religious training," says Mr. Jackson, "is an essential part of sound education: and no mode of accomplishing this object has been found so efficient as that of catechising; the duty of which ought most conscientiously to be discharged by all those persons to whom the care of children and youth devolves. To say nothing of parents, these ministers incur a fearful responsibility who publicly admit children into the church by baptism, and afterward neglect to take them under their pastoral charge, and afford no direct assistance in bringing them up in 'the nurture and admonition of the Lord.' Catechetical instruction, as an elementary process, is necessary to qualify young persons to derive due advantage from the ministry of the Word; and as a means of bringing the ministers of Christ and the senior portion of their charge into regular intercourse, it is intimately connected with the spiritual interests of the rising race, the prosperity of the church, the preservation of public morals, and the universal welfare."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

OUR MISSION WORK.

The secretary of the Board of Missions has handed us the following plea for the cause which he represents. We do earnestly request that all our readers will give it a serious perusal, and respond promptly to the call. We are specially desirous that the unpaid amounts assumed for the liquidation of the old debt should be forwarded without any further delay. The board is anxious to have the last cent of that debt of honor paid down, and we cannot breathe freely till it is done. The treasury is greatly in want of funds, and that want should be responded to by prompt and united efforts. The secretary says:

"REV. AND DEAR BRETHREN: You did the past year more for the cause of missions than was done the year previous. May we expect an increase this year over the last? I do not mean in contributions to pay the old missionary debt, but in raising funds for general missionary purposes. The old debt is nearly all provided for, and will trouble us no more if brethren faithfully redeem their pledges, and meet what has been assessed to each Conference. But I mean to plead for the cause of missions on the plan now projected by the church. The Conference sessions will soon be here, and what is done, in many places, must be done quickly. Now, dear brethren, do not come, or send your preachers and lay delegates to the Conferences, without handsome missionary collections. The board, acting in concert with the Bishops, have made arrangements to greatly enlarge the work the ensuing year, and if the collections fail to come up, the best-laid plans will be defeated. A glorious future opens before the church; the men are ready, now waiting, to be sent to new fields; they are ready to go to China, to South America, to Mexico, to the Indians, to the frontiers, in the far West—anything, so that the gospel may be preached to the poor, and souls saved. All that is lacking for a very large increase in our missionary work is the money to pay the expenses of those who are willing to sacrifice all for the kingdom of heaven's sake.

"Now, we beg you to make efforts to bring up large collections. Induce each member of the church to give as God has prospered him; and when all shall help, the work will be done and no one hurt. Will the presiding elders see to this important interest of the church? We ask every preacher, traveling and local, to help. We pray every official member, and all the Sunday schools, to come to our aid. Let each, let all do their duty, and God will bless the effort, and the gospel of the kingdom will be preached to thousands who are now without the means of grace. Go to-day, my brother, and work in the vineyard of the Lord—to-morrow may be too late for you. J. B. MCFERRIN."

Obituary.

MRS. FANNIE WEBB CONNERLY, wife of the Rev. William P. H. Connerly, of the Alabama Conference, died at Columbia, Alabama, June 5, 1871, aged twenty-nine years, two months and four days.

She was the daughter of Joseph and Jane C. Andrews, and was born in the Isle of Wight, England, March 31, 1842. When she was but five and a half years of age her parents emigrated to this country and settled at the Pensacola navy yard, Florida. In infancy she was dedicated to God in holy baptism, and enjoyed the great blessing of early religious training, which was not lost upon her. At ten years of age she voluntarily approached the altar of the church to ratify the baptismal covenant of her parents and take the vows of a holy life upon her; but the officiating minister, on account of her tender age, declined to receive her formally into the church. This wounded her young heart, and was a source of great regret; but it did not superinduce a state of despondency and melancholy, or cause her to lose her love for Christ and his cause; and at the age of thirteen she again went forward, and was formally received into the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Milton, Florida, by the pastor, the Rev. L. P. Golson. She ever after, during her earthly career, adorned her profession by a "godly walk and heavenly conversation." Her religion was like the gentle flow of a still and deep river, noiselessly but thoroughly permeating her whole nature, making her life morally beautiful.

On the twenty-seventh of October, 1859, she was united in marriage to her now bereaved husband, the Rev. William P. H. Connerly. Willingly and cheerfully she left the home of her childhood to share with him the privations, the joys and sorrows of an itinerant life. For the sake of Christ—to promote the interests of the church she so much loved—she made more than ordinary sacrifices. On hard circuits, with but little remuneration, she meekly and quietly submitted herself to her lot without murmur or complaint.

Retiring and unobtrusive in her habits, she had to be known to be appreciated.

In all the relations of life, as daughter, sister, wife and mother, she was dutiful and devoted to a degree that impressed every one that observed her with the sweetness and angelic nature of her disposition.

Her last sickness was brief but extremely painful, lasting only four days. Her devoted mother, Mrs. Jane C. Thomas, had just arrived to pay her a visit, and with her whom she had not seen for a long time she was permitted to hold a few hours of sweet communion, and then the fatal messenger came and separated them, to meet no more on earth. Seeing that she was fast entering the dark valley, her husband approached her and asked her if she could trust her Savior then. Emphatically and distinctly she answered, "O yes! yes!" and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus.

She leaves behind a husband and three children, an affectionate mother, a brother and sister to mourn their loss. May the eternal promise of God's word, that Christ is the "resurrection and the life," be their comfort and solace in this the day of their desolation and bereavement.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE.—This institution, located in Staunton, Virginia, is one of the most flourishing and popular female colleges in the South. Its full and able faculty, high and thorough system of teaching, and attention to the health and comfort of its pupils, commend it to the confidence and favor of the public. The healthfulness of the climate in which it is located, its elegant buildings, its large and beautiful grounds, and its unrivaled scenery, viewed for thirty miles along the great valley of Virginia, render it an attractive and desirable home for young ladies. Many of the Southern and Western States are represented in its list of pupils. See advertisement.

The Friends and Admirers of the famous ARGYLE BITTERS, after long years of continued use, with life prolonged, bodily vigor and elasticity maintained, and the bloom of health upon their happy faces, can and will testify to their pre-eminent virtues over all others for the cure of Dyspepsia, the hydra-headed monster; Bilious Disorders; Nervous Derangements; Depression of Spirits; Mental Anxiety; Engorged Spleen; Visceral Congestion; Calumenal Derangement, and most of the diseases of women and children. They are anti periodic and anti-bilious; they cure Flatulence and Constipation without the disgust and loathing for medicines usually attendant upon medication and sickness.

No family should be without them; and we would respectfully caution the people generally against buying other and cheaper bitters, because of their availability as a commercial article in the hands of merchants, who realize a larger profit in buying inferior bitters on account of their cheapness.

Ask for the ARGYLE, and take no other; the base of which is pure Bourbon, full-proof whisky, with true Cuisaya Bark as one of their ingredients, neither of which, we guarantee, is used in any of the bitters that flood the market.

The ARGYLE is a standard preparation, has never been adulterated in the hands of the manufacturers, and is always pleasant and healthful. jy6 1m

WILL BEGIN the Twenty second Annual Session SEPTEMBER 21, 1871, and close June 24, 1872. Than this no college for young ladies ranks higher. The President, Rev. WILLIAM A. HARRIS, is aided by an able and accomplished board of eighteen teachers and officers. System of teaching thorough, and based on the plan of the University of Virginia. English Science and Literature are taught by experienced graduates of our first universities and colleges. French is taught by a native master of the language. Music by two able masters, aided, among others, by two of the most distinguished vocalists in the South.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the world, and young ladies who come here from the South with feeble constitutions are entirely restored to health.

Buildings elegant, fanned by the purest breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery for thirty miles along the beautiful Valley of Virginia, making it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union. During the last session one hundred young ladies attended this institution from fourteen Southern States.

VIRGINIA SPRINGS.

RAWLEY SPRINGS, VIRGINIA,

WAS REGULARLY OPENED FOR THE reception of visitors on the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, 1871. Situated, as it is, in the Mountains of the Valley, it is not only one of the most delightful Summer Resorts in the state, but its curative properties are becoming widely celebrated.

The analysis of the water by Prof Mallet, of the University of Virginia, together with the experience of many eminent physicians, prove that it is the Springs for suffering females. But besides its wonderful tonic properties as a remedy in general debility, anemia and diseases peculiar to females, it is unsurpassed in the treatment of the various forms of Dyspepsia, and particularly for those suffering from torpid and inactive liver, its action upon the liver as well as kidneys being prompt and decided. Very many remarkable cures could be cited of this class of troublesome diseases.

RAWLEY is now easy of access, situated only twelve miles from Harrisonburg, the present terminus of the Orange, Alexandria and Manassas Gap Railroad, from which point there will be two daily lines of Stages, morning and evening.

Since last summer the buildings have been greatly improved, as well as the road from Harrisonburg to the Springs.

There is also now a Telegraph Office at Harrisonburg.

The accommodations will be strictly first-class, under the management of JOSEPH N. WIDDIWARD, widely and well known as a Hotel Manager.

Resident Physicians, GORTON & WILLIAMS, one or the other of whom will be in attendance during the entire season.

THE SONG OF THE BEE.

Buzz-z-z-z-z z, buzz!
This is the song of the bee.
His legs are of yellow;
A jolly good fellow,
And yet a great worker is he.

In days that are sunny
He's getting his honey;
In days that are cloudy
He's making his wax;
On pinks and on lilies,
And gay daffodillies,
And columbine blossoms,
He levies a tax!

Buzz-z-z z-z-z, buzz!
The sweet-smelling clover,
He, humming, hangs over;
The scent of the roses
Makes fragrant his wings;
He never gets lazy—
From thistle and daisy,
And weeds of the meadow,
Some treasure he brings.

Buzz-z-z-z-z-z, buzz!
From morning's first gray light
Till fading of daylight
He's singing and toiling,
The summer day through.
Oh! we may get weary,
And think work is dreary;
'Tis harder by far
To have nothing to do!

From the Nursery.

PUNISHMENT.

BY AUNT EMMA.

Do you believe there is to be found anywhere a child who does not know the meaning of this word? If there is one, it must be some very ignorant little heathen; it surely cannot be one who reads these little sermons.

Your parents lay down their commands; you disobey, and what follows? Punishment, of course. Your teacher makes rules for you in school. You break these rules, and what follows? Punishment, of course. I have told you something of this before, that law was not good for anything without a punishment added to it. A little circumstance has just happened which will show you just what I mean.

I was visiting my friend, Mrs. Gray, when Charlie, her little boy, came running into the house one morning, his cheeks as red as roses, and his eyes bright as stars, panting for breath, he had been running so hard.

"O mamma, mamma," he began.

"But stop, my son, not so fast," said mamma; "where have you been?"

"Just down the street a little bit of a way, mamma, with Willie Dunning; just a little bit of a way, mamma, 'cause you see our kites went up so far, and we had to run."

"I told you not to go outside the gate, Charlie."

"I know, mamma, but it was only two or three steps, just down to the corner, and I couldn't help it, the kite made me."

"I am sorry the plaything I give you for your pleasure make you disobey me, my son. I must take the kite away; and more than that, I can't allow you to go out any more before dinner. If you disobey me you must be punished."

"Oh dear," sighed Charlie, "it's too bad. Willie's mamma won't punish him."

"He has not disobeyed, I suppose."

"Yes, mamma, he has, for I heard her tell him not to go outside the yard, just as you told me. She tells him every day lots of things to do or not to do, and he never thinks of minding, unless he wants to, and she never punishes him, never."

"Well, Charlie, I shall always punish you when you disobey. I cannot help what Mrs. Dunning does, but my little boy must learn to mind."

Now that is just what I want to teach you, children, about the use or meaning of punishment. Why does Mrs. Gray always punish Charlie when he disobeys? and whether he disobeys a great deal or a very little? Charlie thought it was no matter if he did go outside the gate, so long as he only went "a little bit of a way." But if he had gone a mile his mother would not have thought it any worse. He disobeyed her command, and that was why she punished him. And she did so that he might learn to obey next time. She had no unkind feeling toward Charlie. She did not punish him because she was angry, just to pay back the wrong he had done to her. Oh no; she loves him; she makes laws or rules for his good. She knows he will only be safe and happy by obeying her, and that he will never be a good and happy man when he grows up, unless he learns, while he is a little boy, to obey. Every wise father and mother does the same thing—that is, punishes the disobedient child.

So God's law is meant to make us truly happy; and therefore, to make it a real law, one that will accomplish what God designs by it, there must be some penalty or punishment attached to it. And that we may learn to respect it and obey it, this punishment must fall upon us when we break it. But is this so? What is the penalty of God's broken law? It is death. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," says God. And the very first time that you did wrong on purpose, the very first time you willingly and knowingly disobeyed God, the sentence of death passed upon you. That sentence is not executed yet. You know, when a wicked man is tried in court for murder, the judge passes sentence upon him—that is, he tells him that he has been found guilty of this great crime, and for it he must be hung; that he must go back to prison, and in one month from that day the punishment of the broken law will fall upon him. What a month of misery and sorrow that must be for the wretched man! Under sentence of death, waiting to have the dreaded punishment fall. He has no hope unless he is forgiven.

Now, dear children, it is just in this misery and sorrow that every sinner against God lives. He is under sentence of death, waiting till God shall see fit to execute the sentence. And the death is not that of the body alone, but of the soul—a second death, an eternal death. And we are all sinners. There is not one of us but has broken God's law many, many times. I want you to feel this.

But I do not want to leave you so. You will be very unhappy if I do not tell you that there is hope, even for the worst of us. As I have said, all are sinners. There are two kinds of sinners, however, in this world of ours—careless, hard-hearted sinners, and those who are alarmed and sorry for their sins. There are impenitent, unbelieving sinners, and the penitent, believing ones. There are unforgiven and forgiven sinners.

God is a kind and tender Father. He does not love to punish us, but he does want us to respect and obey his law. And he has provided a way by which he can make his law to stand firm, and yet forgive the transgressor. You know the way, do you not? He gave his own dear Son to suffer the punishment of that broken law for us, and now, for his sake, he can forgive the truly repentant. Of this great and glorious way of salvation I would like to tell you more, but you already know enough to lead you to love Jesus, and to go in his name to ask for forgiveness. I hope you have done so; if not, I hope you will, so that all of us may be of the penitent, believing, forgiven sinners; no longer under sentence of death, and so no longer unhappy.—The Child at Home.

WORKING BOYS WAYS.—A little boy was induced to sign the Band of Hope pledge. His father was a collector, and one day a tavern-keeper called upon him for the purpose of paying his taxes. In the course of the conversation it came out that the little boy was a teetotaler.

"What!" said the tavern-keeper, with a sneer, "a mere boy like that a teetotaler?"

"Yes, sir," said the boy, "I am one."

"And you mean to say you have signed the pledge?"

"Yes, sir, I have; and I mean to keep it, too."

"Nonsense," said the liquor seller. "The idea! why, you are too young to sign the pledge."

The little fellow came up to him, took hold of him quietly by the arm, and repeated his words: "You say, sir, I am too young to be a teetotaler?"

"Yes, I do."

"Well, now, sir, please listen," said he; "I will just ask you a question; you keep a tavern, do you not, and sell beer?"

"Yes, I sell beer."

"Well, then, suppose I come to your house for a pint of beer, would you send me about my business, because I am so young?"

"Oh, no!" said he, "that is quite a different thing."

"Very well, then," said the noble little fellow, with triumph in his face, "if I am not too young to fetch the beer, I am not too young to give up the beer." The tavern-keeper was defeated; he did not want to argue with that boy again.

CASTING OUT DEVILS.—A Methodist preacher, of a large muscular frame and a huge hand, with a powerful grip, some time ago was holding a meeting, at which quite an interest was awakened. A number of persons had come to the anxious seat, and some had been converted. A group, consisting of two or three young men and as many young ladies, were present, whose object in coming was to have merriment. The minister kindly requested them to observe decorum befitting the place. One of them ventured, in rather an ungracious manner, to reply that they had "understood that miracles were worked there, and they had come to see some performed." Upon this our robust friend, the minister, coolly took the young man by the coat collar, deliberately led him down the aisle, and, opening the door, without ceremony landed him outside, quietly remarking: "We do not work miracles here, but we cast out devils!"

The Farm and Garden.

THE GARDEN.

Gardens in July and August in this country are considerably neglected, and become grassy. This should not be suffered. Beds planted in spring crops, but which have now given out, should be cleared off. The ground should be spaded and turned over, and, if possible, covered with a heavy litter of old leaves. No weeds should be allowed to go to seed. A garden kept clear one year can be kept the following year with half the work.

Those who have not dug their Irish potatoes should dig them in July. They keep well till the first hard frosts by spreading them out on an outhouse floor, or on the dry ground, under a building that sits up two or more feet above the ground. Any dry, cool place will do, if they are spread out.

If there is a tree large enough to make a shade in or near the garden, seeds should be placed near it, so as to be protected from the midday sun; and by paying proper attention to watering, cabbage plants, or any others for transplanting, will succeed. When seed beds are shaded with palmettoes, moss or branches, the shade should be high enough to let the air circulate freely over the plants. When the little beetle attacks the plants use a little weed ashes mixed with sulphur, sifted over the seed bed.

If the season prove favorable, watermelon, muskmelon, cucumber and squash seed may be sown with fair prospects of successful results.

Plant cow peas. They run to vines less, and produce more peas when planted late in the season.

Plant tomato seeds in seed beds for a second crop.

Sugar corn, and even the common corn of the country, may be planted this month and next for roasting ears.

Lady peas may now be planted, and will do well.

Tie up grape vines that run at this season of the year.

Haul manure to a pit prepared for that purpose, and mix with muck, leaves, rotten wood, bones, etc., to be placed on the fall garden in season for winter cabbages and turnips.

Spanish flies are troublesome in some gardens at this season of the year. Mix a spoonful of coal oil and a spoonful of spirits of turpentine with a bucket of water, and sprinkle the invaders with the mixture from a watering pot. Lime sifted on the plants moderately is good. Soot and ashes are also good to protect the plants. If the garden is clean drive them into a pit, and cover them with earth.

During this and next month celery seeds may be sown.

Cauliflower seeds may be sown at the end of this month, and in August. Treat the same as cabbage plants, but when they are two or three weeks old replant them into another bed about thirteen inches apart. This will secure strong plants. If cabbages are treated the same they will be much stouter and more regular in size than those which remain in the seed bed till the planting which is to be final.

The ground for cauliflowers should be heavily manured. They will produce little or nothing on soil that is not rich.

People should bear in mind that cabbage plants from seed, sown in the latter part of July and August, will produce double the weight of cabbage of plants from seed sown later in the season. Plants raised in July and in August, and transplanted in September, in well-prepared beds in rich soil, thoroughly cultivated, will always make large cabbages.

If cauliflower plants do not succeed this month or next, it is useless to sow the seeds later, for they are more tender than cabbages, and will be destroyed by frost.

Pole beans for fall crop may be planted late in July. Ground should be ready for planting bush and snapbeans early next month. They will make a larger yield than beans planted in the spring. Red beans for shelling, to be used for cooking during the winter, or any other valuable variety of beans intended to keep for seed, should always be planted early in August. They will ripen well, and when left out till perfectly dry they will keep the entire year without trouble. Beans from those planted in the spring are with much difficulty kept for the following year.

This and next month is the season to sow ratabaga turnip seed. The flat Dutch varieties may be tried next month, and if the ground is fresh and new, and the season favorable, they will succeed well. Rutabaga turnips are better sown in drills about eighteen inches apart, if worked with a hoe, and two and a half feet apart for field culture. They contain more nutriment and are better for stock-raising than the flat varieties, and are equally as good for table use as the latter.—Planters' Banner.

THE Rural New Yorker recommends as a remedy for bark lice on apple trees, to feed the trees liberally with manure and ashes. Ashes alone, if you have no manure to spare, placed about the roots, not in contact with the body, will help. Dig up the grass about the tree. This spring take a hoe and give the bark a good scraping; then wash the tree with strong soapsuds. This should be done at once, and the washing repeated once or twice before the trees blossom. In the fall—last of November—whitewash the trunk and larger limbs of the tree. This, with manure or muck applied to the surface over the roots, will expel the lice. Do not whitewash your trees in spring.

THE CURCULIO MASTERED.—For many years past the curculio has been an almost unconquerable enemy of the fruit growers, and not a few have cut down their plum trees as cumberers of the ground, not receiving any returns from them. A writer in the Ohio Farmer says: "I have remaining a few nice trees, left standing for ornament and shade, and year after year these trees have bloomed and set full, but in spite of every effort, until the present season, not a quart of fruit was received. While the trees were in full bloom, last spring, my wife determined to try an experiment upon one of them, which she did, and it resulted more favorably than could have been expected. Early every morning, while in full bloom, corn meal was strewn over the ground beneath the branches, and the whole flock from the poultry yard at once set to work to gather up the particles of grain.

The ground was daily thoroughly scratched over, and meal, insects and everything to the fowls edible gathered up. Later in the season a brood of chicks were cooped beneath the tree, and the operation of sowing meal continued. This operation was not omitted for a day, from the time of the putting forth of the trees until the plums were beyond the reach of the little pests. Now for the result: This tree, and this alone, was loaded with fruit, to the perfect amazement of all who saw it. It was literally covered with fruit as perfect as could be desired. So heavily were the limbs laden that props had to be used all around the tree. I really believe there were more and better plums upon this tree than all in the township, and I am almost disposed to say, all of the country. Not a plum matured on any other tree on my premises, and all are of the same variety as the one saved."

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

HOUSEKEEPERS should never allow the plate of mirror, or even their window panes, to be cleaned with newspaper. Almost all newspapers now use paper containing straw as a component, and as the substance of straw is largely composed of silex (flint,) which cannot be entirely eliminated in the process of manufacture, the result is a congeries of minute scratches on the face of the glass, not always visible to the naked eye singly, but in a mass producing a cloudy and dull appearance, ruinous to the glass. Chamois skin kept in a drawer free from dust, and the delicate tissue-paper, are the best materials for glass-cleaning.

TO REMOVE FAT AND OIL SPOTS.—Mix calcined magnesia or carbonate of magnesia with water to a paste, and place it on the spot with a brush. Let it dry in a warm place, and remove the dried mass carefully with a knife and a dry, clean brush. If necessary, repeat the operation till the spot has disappeared. The use of a hot iron on the dried mass hastens the operation; but it is dangerous, as it colors the fat spot brown in some qualities of paper.

The use of benzole-magnesia is still more active. Take fresh calcined magnesia, free from moisture, and add pure benzole, so that it is just moist—not sufficiently wet to flow like a thin paste, but a rather granular mass, which, by pressure, shows some liquid benzole. Keep it in a wide-mouthed bottle, ready for use. This is first rubbed over the oil-spot, which, when fresh, will at once disappear; if old, a new quantity is pressed on the spot, and left to dry till the benzole is evaporated, when the magnesia is cleared away as above. Material which can bear moisture may then be cleaned with water. Delicate material, like silk, is cleaned with alcohol or ether.

With this benzole-magnesia fat spots may be removed from all kinds of wood, ivory and other delicate material, so that they look like new. Paper and parchment may be cleansed in this way so completely that no trace of spots remain. If applied to printed books, the removal of the fat in the printing ink causes the letters to become somewhat paler. From all smooth textures, like silk, the fat may be removed in this way quite easily; woolen fabrics, however, retain the pulverized magnesia very tenaciously, so that the greasy spot becomes changed into a whitish one. The Household.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
VIRGINIA.

THIS INSTITUTION, located on the great railroad line from New Orleans to Baltimore, among the mountains of Virginia, is offering peculiar advantages to those who are seeking a thorough collegiate or business education. Two Hundred and Thirty Dollars will cover the expenses for an entire collegiate year of ten months, for Tuition, Board, Fuel, Room-rent, Washing and Contingent Fees. For the character of the school, please consult our own Alumni, or any of the Bishops or of the leading men of the Southern Methodist Church, or the Professors of the University of Virginia, who have authorized this reference. HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

THE TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION of this school will begin on the FIRST MONDAY IN AUGUST, 1871. The entire expense for board and tuition, for forty weeks, will be $150. The board is of the best description that the country affords, being furnished by the steward from his own farm and prepared by the hands of his own family. We had boys from five different States last year, and not a word of complaint was ever made on this point, which is often the subject of just complaint at boarding schools. The fare is peculiarly grateful to Southern boys, who require a more generous diet when they change their climate.

The manner of governing the school is paternal, as the entire exemption from temptations in the surrounding country renders the discipline easy. The institution is under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but under my own control. The young men attending the school last year were, without exception, moral and religious. Young men preparing for the ministry may receive tuition free, and in certain cases can obtain lower rates of board. Regular services are held in the College Chapel.

The location of the school is near Madisonville, Monroe county, East Tennessee, in the midst of a fruitful and beautiful country, and surrounded by a thrifty and intelligent population. No negroes live in the neighborhood, all the laborers in the fields and servants in the families being white. The citizens of Monroe county were true to the South in her late struggle, and have adhered to Southern churches.

Students arriving by the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad will get off at Sweetwater, forty miles south of Knoxville, whence they will find conveyance to the college, seven miles distant.

Our post office is Madisonville, Tennessee.
F. M. GRACE, President.

P. S.—1. Families from the South will find good board in the neighborhood, and a delightful summer retreat at White Cliff Springs, sixteen miles distant from Madisonville. For information on this point parties may address D. A. McKenzie, steward of the college. The health of the country is proverbial.

P. S.—2. Younger boys may be safely sent to this school, as all are under the immediate oversight of the principal, both when in school and when at the boarding house.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATO

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOU

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many powerful medicines of the day have rendered temporary relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that this relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above-named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, of Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bailey, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will D

1. From one to two bottles will cure manually any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to durat on of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia from the simple fact that the origin of disease has been of rheumatic character.

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

This paper has always been well known in this community as

The Very Best Advertising Medium

in which the business men of the city could bring their merchandise, trades, professions, and the like, before country readers. This is easily understood when it is remembered that FOUR HUNDRED PREACHERS, scattered throughout the Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana Methodist Conferences, are all more or less active agents for the paper; and when it is also remembered that our paper circulates among a large class of people who seldom see any other New Orleans paper.
